STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. } ss. In Probate Court. Special Term, January 9th 1885.

In the matter of the estate of Henry Witty, deceased.

Whereas, an instrument in writing, purporting to be the last will and testament of Henry Witty deceased, late of said county, has been delivered to this Court.

And whereas, Christ Olson has filed therewith his petition, representing among other things that said Henry Witty died in said county on the sixth day of December 1884, testate, and that said petitioner is one of the executors named in said last will and testament, and praying that the said instrument may be admitted to probate, and that letters testamentary be to him and to Andrew Olson issued thereon.

It is ordered, that the proofs of said instrument, and the said petition, be heard before this Court, at the Probate office in said county, on the ninth day of February A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, when all concerned may appear and contest the probate of said instrument.

And it is further ordered, that public notice of the time and place of said hearing be given to all persons interested, by publication of these orders for three weeks successively previous to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a newspaper printed and published at the City of Crookston in said county.

By the Court.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First Publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen hundred and eighty seven 68-100 dollars ($1887.68-100,) which is claimed to be due, and is due, at the date of this notice, upon two certain promissory notes secured by a mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Polina Angelina McIntyre and H. D. McIntyre, to Morris R. Brown, bearing date the eleventh day of November A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 27th day of November A. D. 1882, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 400, which mortgage was for a good and valuable consideration on the 22d day of February A. D. 1883 duly assigned to Joseph Kelso, and said assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said County on the 27th day of February A. D. 1883, in book "K" of mortgages on pages 260 and 261, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nineteen (19) Block number sixteen (16) in the original Townsite of Crookston according to a plat of said Townsite, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars ($50) attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston in said County and State on the 14th day of March A. D. 1885, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., of said day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Dec. 18th 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of two hundred eighty and 33-100 dollars, ($287.33-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Joseph L. Daoust and Hermina Daoust, his wife, to Henry Hammel, bearing date the 16th day of June A. D. 1883, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 20th day of June A. D. 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 65, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Beginning at a point fifty (50) feet west of the north-east corner of the block or parcel of land in lot seven (7,) in Section thirty-six (36,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) of Range forty-seven (47,) bounded on the north by the street running west from the county bridge across the Red Lake River to the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad track, and on the east by the county road running south from said bridge, thence south one hundred (100) feet, thence west about one hundred and fifty (150) feet to the said railroad track, thence northerly one hundred (100) feet along said railroad track, and thence east about one hundred and fifty (150) feet to the place of beginning, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 3d day of February A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

The low price which grain commands in the market at the present time, and the prospect that this discouraging state of affairs may continue for an indefinite time, has induced many northwestern farmers to cast about them for a crop that will be more remunerative. Diversified crops have been urged for many years by those who saw it in a practical solution of the many difficulties that result from growing wheat to the exclusion of almost every other farm product. The state of the markets this season would seem to be an argument that cannot be gainsaid in favor of the cultivation of something else beside wheat. It is altogether probable that there is no other system of farming that gives the farmers more trouble with less profit, than making wheat the chief article of production. Many farmers have found that stock raising is more certainly profitable than wheat raising. General attention has, however, lately been turned to the cultivation of flax. Flax has been raised in the western counties of this State with the most satisfactory results, and is said to have been the most profitable crop this year. This would seem to indicate that farmers in other portions of the State may devote a portion of their land to a flax crop, with a reasonable degree of certainty that their venture will prove profitable. It would not be advisable to abandon wheat and corn as market crops, but it would be wise to reduce the amount of these staples somewhat and give flax cultivation a fair test. It is not at all likely that there will be any decrease in the demand for linseed oil, and this will secure a ready sale at a remunerative price for flax seed. In all probability such improvements will be made in the machinery for the manufacture of the fibre as will make the crop a valuable one. Even at the present prices for seed and straw it is fully equal to corn or wheat as a profitable crop. If flax is cut instead of being pulled it is not a very exhaustive crop, the stubble and roots being left on the ground.

An exchange gives as the result of investigation the following advantages of raising flax:

First—It yields nearly as much per acre as wheat, and brings a higher price.

Second—It costs less for seed, only requiring from sixteen to twenty quarts per acre, and when sown early it is ready to harvest from a week to ten days before wheat.

Third—It is the best preparation for a wheat crop, insuring from three to six bushels more per acre, "following flax," than in succession. The same is true of oats and barley, and thus affords a good relief from the one crop system that is ruining the west.

Fourth—If the crop is properly stacked and secured from rain the straw is eagerly eaten by stock and worth as much as ordinary hay.

The large Russian seed is especially adapted to cultivation in the northwest, enabling the farmer to sow late, even after all other grain is sown, and harvested after other small grain is secured. It requires only ten to sixteen quarts of seed to the acre and often yields twelve to eighteen bushels to the acre on newly broken ground, and leaves the ground in much better condition than it would otherwise be. In western Minnesota and Dakota sowing has been done on new ground as late as the 10th of July, and resulted in a harvest of fifteen bushels to the acre.

A commission of Coddington County, Dakota, farmers, to investigate flax growing with reference to its introduction into the county as a possible means of relief from the present ruinous business of wheat growing, have made an exhaustive report in favor of substituting flax for wheat in that section. The fact that several millions of bushels of flax seed are annually imported into the United States is sufficient proof that there is room for this industry, and that there is no likelihood of overproduction.

In regard to the exhaustion of the soil they report that they made most careful investigation, and find that there is practically no appreciable loss as yet on their new land for the three or four years in which it has been produced, although the exclusive growth of this or any other grain is not to be recommended, and should only be practiced as a stepping-stone to something better, in the way of grass and stock. The yield varied with different farmers, as in all crops, depending more upon the treatment received than anything else. A yield of twelve to fifteen bushels per acre was considered a fair crop, if properly put in. The best results were obtained from land that had become thoroughly pulverized by cultivation, as flax, like other seeds, repays careful preparation of the soil. Under such conditions, eighteen bushels and upwards per acre were often obtained. Rock County, Minn., last year raised about 280,000 bushels of flax. A Luverne farmer reported a yield of 879 bushels from fifty-three acres, which he sold at $1.10 per bushel, leaving him $671.65, after paying his expenses and charging the crop with all the work done on it. The committee report that the price paid on the street was $1.08 for flax, while, at the same time, wheat was 50 cents.

THE SUNFLOWER AS FUEL.

Peter C. De Linde, a nurseryman of Bonhomme County, has written to the Dakota Farmer on the subject of cheap fuel. He says his experience has shown him that the mammoth Russian sunflower makes an excellent article of fuel. In the great steppes region of Russia and Tartary, where the winters are more severe than in Dakota and Minnesota, the sunflower has been for centuries past the only fuel used. Mr. De Linde says: "I have burned turf for sixteen years, coal for twelve years, and wood for eight years, but I prefer the sunflower to anything else. I grow one acre of them every year, and have plenty of fuel for one stove the year round, and use them in another stove besides. I plant them in hills the same as corn—only three seeds to the hill—and cultivate same as corn. I cut them when the leader or top flower is ripe, let them lie two or three days, in that time I cut off all the seed heads, which are put into an open shed with a floor in it, the same as a corn crib; the stalks are then hauled off and packed in a common shed with a roof. When cut in the right time the stalks are as hard as oak, and make a good hot fire, while the seed heads with the seed make a better fire than the best hard coal. The seed being very rich in oil will warm better and last longer bushel for bushel than the best hard coal. The sunflower is very hard on land, and the pieces selected should be highly enriched with manures. We can better afford to devote one or two acres to grow our own supply, than we can afford to pay double price for coal and double freight on same. Meanwhile we can plant groves and timber belts for shade, shelter and fuel, and as our population increases, industry will increase, and new deposits of coal will doubtless be discovered that will be sufficient for our needs.

THE POTATO DISEASE.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer says that the potato disease is among those that can be accounted for by those who have known it for more than half a century. It is caused by moisture and heat. When an extreme of these combine, the tuber is destined to partial failure. Sometimes a whole field is ruined. In 1824, I worked on a farm in Weston, there was a warm rain of one or two days' duration, it cleared up on Sunday, quite warm. Two of us hired men dug on Monday forenoon, thirty bushels; in the afternoon, we had to attend a training. The potatoes dug that day, to all appearances, were perfectly sound. The next Tuesday, we dug over sixty bushels, finding so many affected with rot that we threw away many bushels. We dug the field as soon as possible, spread the potatoes on the barn floor until we thought it safe to put them in a bin for the winter.

From that time forward I did not hear much about the potato rot, until fifteen or more years. When I heard of the disease I remembered my experience, and when passing farmers' fields I would go into them, and finding fields with no sign of a raised hill, there I would find diseased potatoes, but where I found hills, that used to be made when I was a boy (and which I have always practiced), there the potatoes were sound, and this difference was found but a few rods apart. When the disease raged the worst in New England, the practice was to cultivate without hills. Now with the horse hoe the hills are made so that the surplus of water is left in the hills. The best remedy is to make a moderate sized hill, not pitched but dishing, then the excess of water will [illegible] out of the hill. In a dry time what dew falls from the plant will fall in the dish around the vines, and be available.

DOES DAIRYING PAY?

The above question is being asked by the farmers of Iowa and Minnesota, who have grown poor in trying to raise wheat, and we think that if they will attend the nineteenth annual convention of the Northwestern Dairymen's association, to be held at Algona, Iowa, February 17 to 20, they will have the question answered to their satisfaction. The farmers of Elgin, Illinois, have made dairying pay, and they will be at the convention and tell how they did it. The conditions for dairying in Iowa and Minnesota are just as favorable as they are in Illinois, and in many respects are better.

The farmers of Iowa and Minnesota who desire to improve their condition should attend this convention, and learn how the Illinois and Wisconsin farmers manage their dairies so as to make the cows net $50, $60 and even $70 per year, as is frequently done.

The dairy interest is gradually working westward, where the cheap lands and cheaper feed enable those who engage in it to make the greater profit out of the business. Not only will the manner of making butter and cheese be discussed, but also the important questions of feeding and breeding for dairying. The convention will be a success, and the farmers should attend. Reduced rates on railroads to all delegates. The secretary, R. P. McGlincy, Elgin, Illinois, will give any further information desired.

EXPORT OF CORN.

Notwithstanding our large crop of corn the exports are not so large as last year, showing a falling off since the 1st of September of about 5,500,000 bushels to England and the continent. We can find a use for all our corn at home, and it pays better to turn it into hogs, cattle and whisky. A western correspondent of the Journal says:—"The movement in corn for an eighteen hundred million crop, so far, has been very small. With corn now in Illinois, at all interior receiving points, at from 33 to 35 cents, there is no glut at local receiving points. Farmers do not seem any more inclined to sell their corn in Illinois, since the advance, then they were when it was worth from 20 to 25 cents per bushel. The real truth is that the great bulk of our corn crop is now converted into hogs and cattle, and it is only the renter, and poor, shiftless farmer that sells a bushel of corn in its raw state. Iowa is also a great home consumer of corn; and I presume you will smile when I make the statement that Iowa, in many localities, did not grow, in 1884, more corn than she will need before another corn crop can be made. With hogs coming to Chicago at the rate of 20,000 to 50,000 per day, it is no wonder that our corn receipts have been so small.

Farmers can make more money by carrying on stock growing in connection with their farming than by devoting themselves strictly to growing grain, and the work will be found less laborious.

The annual report of the department of agriculture, now in press, makes the record of corn production for 1884, 1,705,000,000 bushels; that of wheat nearly 518,000,000 bushels; and of oats 583,000,000 bushels. These aggregates are the largest ever recorded. The rate of yield is 25 bushels for corn, 13 for wheat, and 17.4 for oats. These are the figures for permanent record.

Fargo Argus.

The interest in stock raising in North Dakota is rapidly growing. The statistics at hand show that the industry is more profitable here than in Montana, but some of the more conservative business men continue to hear a still small voice of warning that cattle raising for market will be greatly overdone in the course of two or three years. Notwithstanding this, the keeping of some stock—a few pigs, a half dozen cows, fifty hens, etc., will always be a paying investment for the farmer, and the quicker he makes these features of his farming the sooner he will be over the extreme worry which deprives him of enjoyment in his work [illegible] him.

They Raised Flax.

Fargo and St. Paul Globe: "Many of the farmers in Lincoln county were so fortunate as to put in a good crop of flax the past year, which enables them to hold their wheat and pork for better prices. One of them raised 800 bushels on seventy-five acres and sold for $1.05 per bushel. Dozens of them cleared from 1,000 to $1,500 on the flax, and some of them have gone to New Orleans. A much larger acreage will be put in this year. Flax is now $1.25."

There is another good suggestion in diversified husbandry. Flax is a money crop as well as wheat, and is never graded out of existence as wheat is. The straw is said to be excellent feed for milch cows. A few acres of flax would help out immensely. [Ed. Journal.

St. Paul Dispatch: "Who got that little black bull?" was the question brought out in the Grain Committee yesterday evening from Mr. Hill's presence there. The genial president of the great Manitoba, pressed by the rather fiery Mr. Canning, as to who invited him to be present, replied that it was a friend of Mr. Canning's. "What is his name?" demanded the latter. "Really, I do not know his name," replied Mr. Hill, but he is a friend of yours." "Can't you describe him?" said Mr. Canning. "Well, really, I scarcely recall his personal peculiarities," said Mr. Hill; however, mentioning one recognized as a prominent House member. "Oh, that's the man," fairly snapped Mr. Canning, "to whom you gave the little black bull." The committee fairly writhed in its intense desire to smile, which was not relieved when Mr. Canning went on in his rich Scotch accent, "and we don't want any more of those little black bulls in our part of the country, either."

Tally One More.

Not long since THE JOURNAL spoke of the different kinds of thoroughbred cattle being brought to Polk County, mentioning Holsteins, Shorthorns, Galloways, Polled Angus and Jerseys, and now it is a pleasure to learn through A. L. Jackson, that A. Boddy, of Edna, has a fine pair of Ayrshires, a bull and heifer, which he brought into Polk County last fall. So the good work is slowly but surely going on, and the time is not far distant when Polk County will be noted not only for her superior wheat but for her superior stock as well. The Ayrshire has been noted as a dairy cow for about one hundred years, but whether she sprung from the original stock of Scotland or has been built up by judicious combination to adapt her to the wants of the Scotch dairymen, is of no particular consequence. From whatever source she sprung, she has added great wealth to the dairymen, and so inspired improvement in the Vale of Ayr that it soon became the garden of Scotland; and she has come to us from over the ocean, bringing her wonderful hardiness of constitution and remarkable ability to produce the largest amount of butter, cheese and milk from the least amount of feed of any animal known to dairymen; and when her days of usefulness, for milk, are over she presents her body as full payment for the cost of raising. Her wonderful ability to conform her size to the capacity of the region to which she is transported makes her of great value to the general dairyman, both East and West, North and South, for she seems determined to give the fullest amount for the dairy, and if she is starved she seems to prefer to dwarf her own growth of body rather than contract the amount of her milk, seeming desirous of ever keeping good her reputation as a milker, even though she may have to work long and hard to obtain the wherewith to fill her master's pail. But transplant her to luxuriant pastures, and she works just the same, repaying her master with increased production of milk, and from the surplus feed makes herself more even and pleasing to the eye. As a butter and cheese producer she ranks, from this habit, among the best. Her disposition is pleasant and affectionate. She will be a great pet if allowed. Mr. Boddy's enterprise in bringing these two fine animals to the county is truly commendable, and we trust he will receive sufficient encouragement to make the investment a paying one, which no doubt he will [illegible]

Third—It is the best preparation for a wheat crop, insuring from three to six bushels more per acre "following flax," than in succession. The same is true of oats and barley; and thus affords a good relief from the one crop system that is ruining the west.

Fourth—If the crop is properly stacked and secured from rain the straw is eagerly eaten by stock and worth as much as ordinary hay.

The large Russian seed is especially adapted to cultivation in the northwest, enabling the farmer to sow late, even after all other grain is sown, and harvested after other small grain is secured. It requires only ten to sixteen quarts of seed to the acre and often yields twelve to eighteen bushels to the acre on newly broked ground, and leaves the ground in much better condition than it would otherwise be. In western Minnesota and Dakota sowing has been done on new ground as late as the 10th of July, and resulted in a harvest of fifteen bushels to the acre.

A commission of Coddington County, Dakota, farmers, to investigate flax-growing with reference to its introduction into the county, as a possible means of relief from the present ruinous business of wheat growing, have made an exhaustive report in favor of substituting flax for wheat in that section. The fact that several millions of bushels of flax seed are annually imported into the United States is sufficient proof that there is room for this industry, and that there is no likelihood of overproduction.

In regard to the exhaustion of the soil, they report that they made most careful investigation, and find that there is practically no appreciable loss as yet on their new land for the three or four years in which it has been produced, although the exclusive growth of this or any other grain is not to be recommended, and should only be practiced as a stepping-stone to something better, in the way of grass and stock. The yield varied with different farmers, as in all crops, depending more upon the treatment received than anything else. A yield of twelve to fifteen bushels per acre was considered a fair crop, if properly put in. The best results were obtained from land that had become thoroughly pulverized by cultivation, as flax, like other seeds, repays careful preparation of the soil. Under such conditions, eighteen bushels and upwards per acre were often obtained. Rock County, Minn., last year raised about 280,000 bushels of flax. A Luverne farmer reported a yield of 879 bushels from fifty-three acres, which he sold at $1.10 per bushel, leaving him $871.65, after paying his expenses and charging the crop with all the work done on it. The committee report that the price paid on the street was $1.08 for flax, while, at the same time, wheat was 50 cents.

THE SUNFLOWER AS FUEL.

Peter C. De Linde, a nurseryman of Bonhomme County, has written to the Dakota Farmer on the subject of cheap fuel. He says his experience has shown him that the mammoth Russian sunflower makes an excellent article of fuel. In the great steppes region of Russia and Tartary, where the winters are more severe than in Dakota and Minnesota, the sunflower has been for centuries past the only fuel used. Mr. De Linde says: "I have burned turf for sixteen years, coal for twelve years, and wood for eight years, but I prefer the sunflower to anything else. I grow one acre of them every year, and have plenty of fuel for one stove the year round, and use them in another stove besides. I plant them in hills the same as corn—only three seeds to the hill—and cultivate same as corn. I cut them when the leader or top flower is ripe, let them lie two or three days; in that time I cut off all the seed heads, which are put into an open shed with a floor in it, the same as a corn crib; the stalks are then hauled off and packed in a common shed with a roof. When cut in the right time the stalks are as hard as oak, and make a good hot fire, while the seed heads with the seed make a better fire than the best hard coal. The seed being very rich in oil will warm better and last longer bushel for bushel than the best hard coal. The sunflower is very hard on land, and the pieces selected should be highly enriched with manures. We can better afford to devote one or two acres to grow our own supply, than we can afford to pay double price for coal and double freight on same. Meanwhile we can plant groves and timber belts for shade, shelter and fuel, and as our population increases, industry will increase, and new deposits of coal will doubtless be discovered that will be sufficient for our needs.

THE POTATO DISEASE.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer says that the potato disease is among those that can be accounted for by those who have known it for more than half a century. It is caused by moisture and heat. When an extreme of these combine, the tuber is destined to partial failure. Sometimes a whole field is ruined. In 1824, I worked on a farm in Weston; there was a warm rain of one or to two days' duration; it cleared up on Sunday, quite warm. Two of us hired men dug on Monday forenoon, thirty bushels; in the afternoon, we had to attend a training. The potatoes dug that day, to all appearances, were perfectly sound. The next Tuesday, we dug over sixty bushels, finding so many affected with rot that we threw away many bushels. We dug the field as soon as possible, spread the potatoes on the barn floor until we thought it safe to put them in a bin for the winter.

From that time forward I did not hear much about the potato rot, until fifteen or more years. When I heard of the disease, I remembered my experience, and when passing farmers' fields I would go into them, and finding fields with no sign of a raised hill, there I would find diseased potatoes; but where I found hills, that used to be made when I was a boy, (and which I have always practiced,) there the potatoes were sound, and this difference was found but a few rods apart.

When the disease raged the worst in New England, the practice was to cultivate without hills. Now, with the horse hoe, the hills are made so high that no surplus of water is left in the hill. The best remedy is to make a moderate sized hill, not pitched, but dishing, then the excess of water will find its way out of the hill. In a dry time, what dew falls from the plant will fall in the dish around the vines, and be available.

DOES DAIRYING PAY?

The above question is being asked by the farmers of Iowa and Minnesota, who have grown poor in trying to raise wheat, and we think that if they will attend the nineteenth annual convention of the Northwestern Dairymen's association, to be held at Algona, Iowa, February 17 to 20, they will have the question answered to their satisfaction. The farmers of Elgin, Illinois, have made dairying pay, and they will be at the convention and tell how they did it. The conditions for dairying in Iowa and Minnesota are just as favorable as they are in Illinois, and in many respects are better.

The farmers of Iowa and Minnesota who desire to improve their condition should attend this convention, and learn how the Illinois and Wisconsin farmers manage their dairies so as to make the cows net $50, $60 and even $70 per year, as is frequently done.

The dairy interest is gradually working westward, where the cheap lands and cheaper feed enable those who engage in it to make the greater profit out of the business. Not only will the manner of making butter and cheese be discussed, but also the important questions of feeding and breeding for dairying. The convention will be a success, and the farmers should attend. Reduced rates on railroads to all delegates. The secretary, R. P. McGlincy, Elgin, Illinois, will give any further information desired.

EXPORT OF CORN.

Notwithstanding our large crop of corn the exports are not so large as last year, showing a falling off since the 1st of September of about 5,500,000 bushels to England and the continent. We can find a use for all our corn at home, and it pays better to turn it into hogs, cattle and whisky. A western correspondent of the Journal says: "The movement in corn for an eighteen hundred million crop, so far, has been very small. With corn now in Illinois, at all interior receiving points, at from 32 to 37 cents, there is no glut at local receiving points. Farmers do not seem any more inclined to sell their corn in Illinois, since the advance, then they were when it was worth from 20 to 25 cents per bushel. The real truth is that the great bulk of our corn crop is now converted into hogs and cattle, and it is only the renter, and poor, shiftless farmer that sells a bushel of corn in its raw state. Iowa is also a great home consumer of corn, and I presume you will smile when I make the statement that Iowa, in many localities, did not grow, in 1884, more corn than she will need before another corn crop can be made. With hogs coming to Chicago at the rate of 20,000 to 50,000 per day, it is no wonder that our corn receipts have been so small.

Farmers can make more money by carrying on stock growing in connection with their farming than by devoting themselves strictly to growing grain, and the work will be found less laborious.

The annual report of the department of agriculture, now in press, makes the record of corn production, for 1884, 1,705,000,000 bushels; that of wheat nearly 513,000,000 bushels; and of oats 583,000,000 bushels. These aggregates are the largest ever recorded. The rate of yield is 25 bushels for corn, 13 for wheat and 17.4 for oats. These are the figures for permanent record.

$1.00 FOR 50 CENTS.

Any reader of this paper who will send fifty one-cent stamps to the American Rural Home, Rochester, N. Y., before March 15th, 1885, will receive that handsome paper, postage free, until January 1st, 1886. The Rural is a large eight-page, forty-column WEEKLY paper, now in its fifteenth year, and the cheapest farm journal in the world. The price is one dollar a year in advance, but the above offer of fifty cents in postage stamps will be accepted if sent in before March 15th, 1885. This SPECIAL OFFER will not appear again in this paper. If you want the Rural Home, subscribe at once. Send for a specimen copy and see what a bargain is offered.

Fargo Argus.

The interest in stock raising in North Dakota is rapidly growing. The statistics at hand show that the industry is more profitable here than in Montana, but some of the more conservative business men commence to hear a still small voice of warning that cattle raising for market will be greatly overdone in the course of two or three years. Notwithstanding this, the keeping of some stock—a few pigs, a half dozen cows, fifty hens, etc., will always be a paying investment for the farmer, and the quicker he makes these features of his farming the sooner he will be over the extreme worry which deprives him of enjoyment his work should bring him.

They Raised Flax.

Fargo end St. Paul Globe: "Many of the farmers in Lincoln county were so fortunate as to put in a good crop of flax the past year, which enables them to hold their wheat and pork for better prices. One of them raised 800 bushels on seventy-five acres and sold for $1.05 per bushel. Dozens of them cleared from 1,000 to $1,500 on the flax, and some of them have gone to New Orleans. A much larger acreage will be put in this year. Flax is now $1,25."

There is another good suggestion in diversified husbandry. Flax is a money crop as well as wheat, and is never graded out of existence as wheat is. The straw is said to be excellent feed for milch cows. A few acres of flax would help out immensely. [Ed. Journal.

St. Paul Dispatch: "Who got that little black bull?" was the question brought out in the Grain Committee yesterday evening from Mr. Hill's presence there. The genial president of the great Manitoba, pressed by the rather fiery Mr. Canning, as to who invited him to be present, replied that it was a friend of Mr. Canning's. "What is his name?" demanded the latter. "Really, I do not know his name," replied Mr. Hill, but he is a friend of yours." Can't you describe him?" said Mr. Canning. "Well, really, I scarcely recall his personal peculiarities," said Mr. Hill; however, mentioning one recognized as a prominent House member. "Oh, that's the man," fairly snapped Mr. Canning, "to whom you gave the little black bull." The committee fairly writhed in its intense desire to smile, which was not relieved when Mr. Canning went on in his rich Scotch accent, "and we don't want any more of those little black bulls in our part of the country, either."

Tally One More.

Not long since THE JOURNAL spoke of the different kinds of thoroughbred cattle being brought to Polk County, mentioning Holsteins, Shorthorns, Galloways, Polled Angus and Jerseys, and now it is a pleasure to learn through A. L. Jackson, that A. Boddy, of Edna, has a fine pair of Ayrshires, a bull and heifer, which he brought into Polk County last fall. So the good work is slowly but surely going on, and the time is not far distant when Polk County will be noted not only for her superior wheat but for her superior stock as well. The Ayrshire has been noted as a dairy cow for about one-hundred years, but whether she sprung from the original stock of Scotland or has been built up by judicious combination to adapt her to the wants of the Scotch dairymen, is of no particular consequence. From whatever source she sprung, she has added great wealth to the dairymen, and so inspired improvement in the Vale of Ayr that it soon became the garden of Scotland; and she has come to us from over the ocean, bringing her wonderful hardiness of constitution and remarkable ability to produce the largest amount of butter, cheese and milk from the least amount of feed of any animal known to dairymen; and when her days of usefulness, for milk, are over she presents her body as full payment for the cost of raising. Her wonderful ability to conform her size to the capacity of the region to which she is transported makes her of great value to the general dairyman, both East and West, North and South, for she seems determined to give the fullest amount for the dairy, and if she is starved she seems to prefer to dwarf her own growth of body rather than contract the amount of her milk, seeming desirous of ever keeping good her reputation as a milker, even though she may have to work long and hard to obtain the wherewith to fill her master's pail. But transplant her to luxuriant pastures, and she works just the same, repaying her master with increased production of milk, and from the surplus feed makes herself more even and pleasing to the eye. As a butter and cheese producer she ranks from this habit, among the best. Her disposition is pleasant and affectionate. She will be a great pet if allowed. Mr. Boddy's enterprise in bringing these two fine animals to the county is truly commendable, and we trust he will receive sufficient encouragement to make the investment a paying one which no doubt he will.

What a pity McGrew did not think to put Braley on wheels, last fall, as the only man in the county who could beat Montague.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: A telegram from Bartlett announces the death of Mrs. W. H. Standish at that place yesterday, Mrs. Standish was a lady universally beloved by the community in which she lived and she is mourned by all who knew her.

M. C. Malone announces that he will dispose of his entire stock of hardware, furniture and groceries without regard to cost, between now and March 1st, as he intends to go into other business at that time. It will pay to go and look over this stock as this is no humbug. The goods will be sold as advertised and the best bargains of the season are to be had.

We understand that the P. & H. Co., offer to lend flax seed to farmers to be paid next fall. We understand that the terms are $2 per bushel, payable out of the crop which the buyer must contract to be delivered before Jan. 1st '85 at Chicago prices minus 28 cents for freight. If we have the right end of it we should advise farmers to go slow on the offer.

H. G. Palmer was up from Minneapolis on Wednesday. He expresses himself confident that the legislature will pass an act favorable to the people. Says the present railroad bill, now under consideration is about as near the mark as could be got and is very confident that it will pass. He says the opposition to it is determined and bitter but he thinks that money can not defeat it.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

Elsewhere will be found Charles Cahoon's ad. of the celebrated Burpee's Welcome oats, which oats, by all we are able to learn, are unrivalled in yield, weight and as an early oat. Mr. Cahoon procured 10 ounces of seed in 1883, which he sowed on May 5th and cut on August 5th. Sowed in drills 16 inches apart, four inches apart in the drill. The yield was 80 pounds. From this, in 1884, he raised 200 bushels, sowed on three acres. He estimates that about one bushel of seed per acre is a great plenty. As will be seen by his ad he offers a limited amount for seed to those who wish to try these magnificent oats. Aside from their great yielding qualities there is one feature of the case that commends itself to this country and that is their early maturity. A sample may be seen at Stone & Pinkerton's office where orders may also be left.

Senator Steenerson was up to spend the Sabbath with his friends. He is working on a bill to provide for a survey of the water route to Duluth. Everybody here is anxiously looking for the success of that bill, hoping that it will pass. Should this route be feasible it would solve the wheat question better than all the legislation that could be had. Competition will adjust the matter effectually. While it is wise to avail ourselves of the power of the legislature to protect our interests as far as may be until such time as a canal could be put in operation, yet the canal, when completed, would carry our wheat over the route designed by nature at rates that no railroad could ever control, and would prove an important factor in the matter. By all means let us have this route surveyed, and when found practical let the good work be pushed through to a speedy completion.

Dr. Nelson and Chris Olson were up from Aldal on Tuesday. They report that on Wednesday evening, Feb. 4th, an infant was left in a basket at the residence of Nels R. Engelstad, about 7 o'clock in the evening. The attention of Mrs. E. was attracted by a feeble wail outside and she spoke to her husband about it, who said it was probably the cat. Not satisfied, she went outside to the corner of the house where she espied a basket with some clothing in it and the clothing appeared to be too musical for ordinary clothing. She went in and told her husband that it was not "cats" in the basket, whereupon he procured a lantern and went on a reconnoissence. He soon appeared lugging the basket. A further examination of the contents disclosed a healthy boy baby, apparently about one day old. How he came there is a mystery that the good people of that section would like to solve. Judging by the tracks it was a man who brought the basket. At present there is no clue to the business. The county authorities have been notified and will take such steps as they deem proper.

The Fisher Bulletin says that on Feb. 1st E. A. Bradish was made the happy father of a bouncing baby girl. That accounts for it. Usually E. A. gets around to see the boys but this session he was as reticent as a clam. Cigars are cheap in this city, E. A., and you can get any grade the occasion demands from a fifty center up to a "two-for!"

Mr. P. S. Olson was up from Twin Valley, Norman Co., on Saturday last to enjoy a bit of life and see his old friends. He reports everything in his vicinity flourishing as well as could be expected considering the times. All that Twin Valley now needs to become noted throughout the earth is a railroad. When that is attained they will be all right if it is the right kind of a railroad.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

In speaking of the Palmer case last week we should have stated that Mr. Palmer had commenced to thresh and had delivered 800 bushels at the P. & H. warehouse when it burned and that he kept right on threshing and hauling, loading the balance of the crop into cars and shipping it to Duluth where it graded No. 1 Hard and only ½ pound dockage as against 14 pounds dockage and grading No. 1 regular with P. & H. Before the elevator burned he was compelled to deliver to the P. & H. Co., because he could not get cars to ship. Mr. Pillsbury admits the justice of the claim by the statement that it had been paid and now we are curious to see what kind of an honorable man Mr. Pillsbury will prove himself to be by his treatment of this claim. If he pays it in full with interest he will stand far better before the country than if he quietly ignores the whole transaction.

Flannels, 54 and 56 inches wide, in all the new shades, reduced from $1.00 and $1.20 to 75 cents, at the New York store. The nett cost on these goods was 85 cents.

Charles Cahoon came into THE JOURNAL office on Tuesday with some lamp burners which he insisted on trying onto our lamps, and when he came in on Wednesday morning the boys would not let him take them off hence we were inveigled into accepting them. We would not part with them now, having tried them as we consider them the best thing of the kind we ever saw being absolutely safe. They are so constructed that if a lamp is tipped over the blaze is extinguished immediately. They are provided with a safety valve which renders explosion impossible and the light can be immediately extinguished by pressing a lever. They can be filled without removing the top. We predict the will supplant all others as soon as they are known.

MARKHAM!

Mr. Henry Bradshaw, of Northwood, D. T., has been visiting with his daughter Mrs. Sam'l Greenhalgh for awhile.

After a pleasant visit of a week with friends in Minneapolis Mrs. C. A. Chiniquy has gone to Chicago where Mr. C. will join her shortly whence they will go with a party of friends to the World's Fair at New Orleans, after that to Florida. Charlie says he shall be gone about four weeks.

The Hon. Chas. Canning is making a record as one of the hardest workers in the Legislative body. While others take a bit of a rest at home he has remained steadily at his post ever since he went there and there he will stay, hard at work till the work of the Legislature is done. He deserves great credit for his faithful services in behalf of his constituents.

Mr. C. L. Bond, whose severe illness we mentioned last week died at ten o'clock a. m., on Thursday last, of quick consumption. Had he lived until June 26th next he would have been 24 years old. He came to this city in the fall of '83 and by his quiet demeanor had won many true friends. Funeral services were held on Thursday and the remains were taken to Lake City for burial by the side of his father by his brother, A. P. Bond, in accordance with his expressed wish a short time before he died.

Mr. D. T. Herriott has just returned from a visit to Pennsylvania and reports times harder there than here. He reports that last fall he shipped two carloads of barley with instructions to sell immediately. Upon receipt of returns he found one-third the amount exhausted by freights and other charges, such as three dollars for switching, 75 cents for insurance $15 for storage &c., &c., ad lib. He naturally feels indignant over all these useless charges being added when he had given positive orders for selling from the cars. How long shall this country have to suffer from such a refined (if you please) system of robbery?

The Pioneer Press copies our report of the proposition of the St. Paul, Brainerd and Northwestern Railroad to Polk County for bonds, mistake and all, and as the Pioneer Press fails to give proper credit we have thus innocently got our big brother, the P. P., into a pretty mess. We expect Kindred will go down and slaughter 'em. We hope he won't, for, (as the millers say,) "it was only a little mistake of ours!" We ought to have said $200,000 but a reckless typo made us say $300,000. Only a little matter of $100,000 which aint much of a mistake no-how. One-third of the whole amount, and farmers are MITEY LUCKEY if they get out of the millers' "mistakes" that easy.

Basil Emard, Jr.	3,989

On motion the proposed bridge at Red Lake Falls was located at or near the present site.

On motion the contract was awarded to C. P. Jones, at $4,250 his plans and specification being duly accepted.

The contract for supplying the county with 40 cords of green wood was awarded to E. M. Walsh at $1.68 per cord.

Township 149, Range 41, was organized and named "Lessor." First town meeting to be held at the residence of A. Lundgren, on Feb. 24th. A. Lundgren, John M. Sondin and G. G. Oustad were appointed judges, and Carl Hanson and Herman Helyeson, clerks of said election.

Town 154, Range 45 was organized and named "Numedal." First town meeting to be held at the residence of Rasmus Stone on Feb. 24th. A. Charboneau, W. Olson and Rasmus Stone were appointed judges, and A. K. Dikkin and Peter L. Sonde clerks of said election.

The petition for change of name for town 151, Range 43, was rejected because of illegality.

W. A. Schneter was appointed textbook agent at Red Lake Falls.

Bonds of C. P. Jones, as bridge contractor, was fixed as follows:

For Crookston bridge, - - $7,000.
For Red Lake Falls bridge, - $5,000.

The liquor license fee was fixed at $100 for the current year and a rebate for amounts overpaid on last year was ordered.

Dr. Lancaster was appointed county physician for the year at a salary of $120.

Bonds of O. L. Hamery as County Surveyor were approved.

The application of M. Quirk for abatement of taxes was referred to Commissioner Bradish.

The bridge petition of John Conklin, M. A. Wolf, and others; also bridge petitions from Liberty, were rejected.

Dr. Gaboury was requested to visit the Ray family in Terrebonne.

The bridge built by B. Haftenson, in Liberty, was duly accepted.

The applications for corrections of assessment and abatement of taxes, made by parties who have been damaged by hail in 1884, were duly examined and a favorable report made thereon to the State Auditor.

School District No. 134 was organized, comprising the north half of Tp. 147, R. 41.

Petition of Hans Carlson and others was rejected as said petition did not set forth the ground so to be organized.

Petition of Ole Thoreson and others for changing the boundaries of Dist. No. 31 was rejected on account of illegality.

The petition of Evan Evenson for school organization was rejected owing to insufficient description of territory.

Petition of Paul King and others for school organization was laid over until next meeting.

The sum of $10 per month, for a period of three months, was allowed as poor aid to Martha Hale, a poor woman residing in the First District, and the Auditor instructed to forward the money to McIntosh P. O.

School district No. 135 was organized, comprising the east one-half of Tp. 154, R. 44.

The liquor bond of B. S. Massey was approved and a license granted him for the ensuing year.

Dr. L. Beaupre was appointed county physician for the First and Fourth Commissioner Districts, including the Thirteen Towns.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved.—That the action of the Board, under date of February 4th 1885, awarding the bridge contracts shall not be final, or said contracts executed and delivered by said county before the action of the State Legislature, now in session, enabling said County of Polk to bond itself to the amount of Ten Thousand Five Hundred Dollars, according to the terms and conditions of the enabling act, to defray the expenses of said county in the construction of said bridges. Provided said bill be not passed further action as to the final award, execution and delivery of said contracts shall be as subsequently determined by this Board.

Resolved, further.—That this Board ask the Legislature to authorize the issue of $6,500 for the purpose of building a bridge across the Red Lake River on the east end of Robert Street to Jerome's Addition, in the city of Crookston, and $4,000 for the purpose of building another bridge across the Clearwater River in the Village of Red Lake Falls, at or near the present old bridge in said village. Said bonds to bear interest not exceeding 7 per cent. per annum and to be payable in 30 years from their date.

Upon the ayes and nays being taken the result showed a unanimous vote in favor of the resolutions being adopted.

Board adjourned until Tuesday February 4th 1885.

P. J. McGUIRE,
Clerk of Board.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 2d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred forty-five and 50-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. Anderson Foord, an unmarried man, mortgagor to Fredrick Peterson and John Peterson, mortgagees bearing date the 31st day of May A. D. 1883, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 18th day of May A. D. 1883, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 22, and whereas the undivided one-half interest in the said mortgage and the debt secured thereby was by the said Fredrick Peterson one of said mortgagees, duly assigned in writing under his hand and seal to Harold Swenson and Peter Broberg "copartners" by assignment, dated July 31st 1884, which assignment was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of August 1884, at 1:20 o'clock p. m., in book "I" of mortgages on page 83, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north one half (n½) of the southeast one-fourth (se¼) and the east one-half (e½) of the southwest one-fourth (sw¼) of Section twenty-eight (28) of Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), Range forty-three (43) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to government survey, said lot, piece, or parcel of land being situated in Polk County, and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the fourteenth day of March A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated, January 22d, A. D. 1885.

ROUND HOME.

What a pity McGrew did not think to put Braley on wheels last fall as the only man in the county who could beat Montague.

Just what you want! One of those combined machines (drill and seeder,) sold by Stone & Pinkerton. Two perfect machines in one.

Dupuis & LaFramboise commenced to go for a flowing well on Ed. Walsh's property on Ash street, on Monday. Pretty quick look out for a 150 barrel well, or thereabouts.

A small shanty used by the railroad company for storing oil and tools took fire early on Wednesday morning and was consumed. The department got out in fine shape and did good work.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: A telegram from Bartlett announces the death of Mrs. W. H. Standish at that place yesterday. Mrs. Standish was a lady universally beloved by the community in which she lived and she is mourned by all who knew her.

M. C. Malone announces that he will dispose of his entire stock of hardware, furniture and groceries without regard to cost, between now and March 1st, as he intends to go into other business at that time. It will pay to go and look over this stock as this is no humbug. The goods will be sold as advertised and the best bargains of the season are to be had.

We understand that the P. & H. Co., offer to lend flax seed to farmers to be paid next fall. We understand that the terms are $2 per bushel, payable out of the crop which the buyer must contract to be delivered before Jan. 1st '85 at Chicago prices minus 28 cents for freight. If we have the right end of it we should advise farmers to go slow on the offer.

H. G. Palmer was up from Minneapolis on Wednesday. He expresses himself confident that the legislature will pass an act favorable to the people. Says the present railroad bill, now under consideration is about as near the mark as could be got and is very confident that it will pass. He says the opposition to it is determined and bitter but he thinks that money can not defeat it.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

Elsewhere will be found Charles Cahoon's ad. of the celebrated Burpee's Welcome oats, which oats, by all we are able to learn, are unrivalled in yield, weight and as an early oat. Mr. Cahoon procured 10 ounces of seed in 1883, which he sowed on May 5th and cut on August 5th. Sowed in drills 16 inches apart, four inches apart in the drill. The yield was 80 pounds. From this, in 1884, he raised 200 bushels, sowed on three acres. He estimates that about one bushel of seed per acre is a great plenty. As will be seen by his ad he offers a limited amount for seed to those who wish to try these magnificent oats. Aside from their great yielding qualities there is one feature of the case that commends itself to this country and that is their early maturity. A sample may be seen at Stone & Pinkerton's office where orders may also be left.

Senator Steenerson was up to spend the Sabbath with his friends. He is working on a bill to provide for a survey of the water route to Duluth. Everybody here is anxiously looking for the success of that bill, hoping that it will pass. Should this route be feasible it would solve the wheat question better than all the legislation that could be had. Competition will adjust the matter eventually. While it is wise to avail ourselves of the power of the legislature to protect our interests as far as may be until such time as a canal could be put in operation, yet the canal, when completed, would carry our wheat over the route designed by nature at rates that no railroad could ever control, and would prove an important factor in the matter. By all means let us have this route surveyed, and when found practical let the good work be pushed through to a speedy completion.

Dr. Nelson and Chris Olson were up from Aldal on Tuesday. They report that on Wednesday evening, Feb. 4th, an infant was left in a basket at the residence of Nels R. Engelstad, about 7 o'clock in the evening. The attention of Mrs. E. was attracted by a feeble wail outside and she spoke to her husband about it, who said it was probably the cat. Not satisfied she went outside to the corner of the house where she espied a basket with some clothing in it and the clothing appeared to be too musical for ordinary clothing. She went in and told her husband that it was not cats in the basket, whereupon he procured a lantern and went on a reconnoissance. He soon appeared lugging the basket. A further examination of the contents disclosed a healthy boy baby, apparently about one day old. How he came there is a mystery that the good people of that section would like to solve. Judging by the tracks it was a man who brought the basket. At present there is no clue to the [illegible]

The [illegible] Bulletin [illegible] E. A. Bradish [illegible] the happy father of a bouncing baby girl. That accounts for it. Usually E. A. goes around to see the boys but this season he was as reticent as a clam. Cigars are cheap in this city, E. A., and you can get any grade the occasion demands from a fifty center up to a "two for" [illegible].

Mr. P. S. Olson was up from Twin Valley, Norman Co., on Saturday last to enjoy a bit of life and see his old friends. He reports everything in his vicinity flourishing as well as could be expected considering the times. All that Twin Valley now needs to become noted throughout the earth is a railroad. When that is attained they will be all right if it is the right kind of a railroad.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

In speaking of the Palmer case last week we should have stated that Mr. Palmer had commenced to thresh and had delivered 800 bushels at the P. & H. warehouse when it burned and that he kept right on threshing and hauling, loading the balance of the crop into cars and shipping it to Duluth where it graded No. 1 Hard and only 4 pound dockage as against 14 pounds dockage and grading No. 1 regular with P. & H. Before the elevator burned he was compelled to deliver to the P. & H. Co., because he could not get cars to ship. Mr. Pillsbury admits the justice of the claim by the statement that it had been paid and now we are curious to see what kind of an honorable man Mr. Pillsbury will prove himself to be by his treatment of this claim. If he pays it in full with interest he will stand far better before the country than if he quietly ignores the whole transaction.

Flannels, 54 and 56 inches wide, in all the new shades, reduced from $1.00 and $1.20 to 75 cents, at the New York store. The nett cost on these goods was 85 cents.

Charles Cahoon came into THE JOURNAL office on Tuesday with some lamp burners which he insisted on trying onto our lamps, and when he came in on Wednesday morning the boys would not let him take them off hence we were inveigled into accepting them. We would not part with them now, having tried them as we consider them the best thing of the kind we ever saw being absolutely safe. They are so constructed that if a lamp is tipped over the blaze is extinguished immediately. They are provided with a safety valve which renders explosion impossible and the light can be immediately extinguished by pressing a lever. They can be filled without removing the top. We predict the will supplant all others as soon as they are known.

A Bad Thief.

A young lady went out to her claim on the N. E. ¼ of Sec. 24, Town 151, Range 48, to abide as the law directs. When she arrived she found the doors and windows of her house smashed in and upon entering found that her furniture and provisions had all been stolen—a clean sweep. Whoever did the deed ought to be hung up by the heels as a warning against all such vandalism. There are some sneaks in this country too mean to live.

MARKHAM!

Mr. Emory Bradish of Northwood, D. T., has been visiting with his daughter Mrs. [illegible] for a while.

After a pleasant visit of a week with friends in Minneapolis, Mrs. C. A. Chipiquy has gone to Chicago where Mr. C. will join her shortly whence they will go with a party of friends to the World's Fair at New Orleans, after that to Florida. Charlie says he shall be gone about four weeks.

The Hon. Chas. Canning is making a record as one of the hardest workers in the Legislative body. While others take a bit of a rest at home he has remained steadily at his post ever since he went there and there he will stay, hard at work till the work of the Legislature is done. He deserves great credit for his faithful services in behalf of his constituents.

Mr. O. L. Bond, whose severe illness we mentioned last week died at ten o'clock a. m., on Thursday last, of quick consumption. Had he lived until June 26th next he would have been 24 years old. He came to this city in the fall of '83 and by his quiet demeanor had won many true friends. Funeral services were held on Thursday and the remains were taken to Lake City for burial by the side of his father by his brother, A. P. Bond, in accordance with his expressed wish a short time before he died.

Mr. D. T. Herriott has just returned from a visit to Pennsylvania and reports times harder there than here. He reports that last fall he shipped two carloads of barley with instructions to sell immediately. Upon receipt of returns he found one-third the amount exhausted by freights and other charges, such as three dollars for switching, 75 cents for insurance $15 for storage &c., &c., ad lib. He naturally feels indignant over all these useless charges being added when he had given positive orders for selling from the cars. How long shall this country have to suffer from such a refined (if you please) system of robbery?

The Pioneer Press copies our report of the proposition of the St. Paul, Brainerd and Northwestern Railroad to Polk County for bonds, mistake and all, and as the Pioneer Press fails to give proper credit we have thus innocently got our big brother, the P. We ought to have said $200,000 but a reckless typo made us say $300,000. Only a little matter of $100,000 which aint much of a mistake no-how. Town 154, Range 45 was organized and named "Numedal." First town meeting to be held at the residence of Rasmus Stone on Feb. 24th. A. Charboneau, W. Olson and Rasmus Stone were appointed judges, and A. K. Dikkin and Peter L. Sonde clerks of said election.

The petition for change of name for town 151, Range 48, was rejected because of illegality.

W. A. Schneler was appointed textbook agent at Red Lake Falls.

Bonds of C. P. Jones, as bridge contractor, was fixed as follows:

For Crookston bridge,	$7,000.
For Red Lake Falls bridge,	$5,000.

The liquor license fee was fixed at $100 for the current year and a rebate for amounts overpaid on last year was ordered.

Dr. Lancaster was appointed county physician for the year at a salary of $120.

Bonds of O. L. Hamery as County Surveyor were approved.

The application of M. Quirk for abatement of taxes was referred to Commissioner Bradish.

The bridge petition of John Conklin, M. A. Wolf, and others; also bridge petitions from Liberty, were rejected.

Dr. Gaboury was requested to visit the Ray family in Terrebonne.

The bridge built by B. Haftenson, in Liberty, was duly accepted.

The applications for corrections of assessment and abatement of taxes, made by parties who have been damaged by hail in 1884, were duly examined and a favorable report made thereon to the State Auditor.

School district No. 134 was organized, comprising the north half of Tp. 147, R. 41.

Petition of Hans Carlson and others was rejected as said petition did not set forth the ground so to be organized.

Petition of Ole Thoreson and others for changing the boundaries of Dist. No. 31 was rejected on account of illegality.

The petition of Evan Evenson for school organization was rejected owing to insufficient description of territory.

Petition of Paul King and others for school organization was laid over until next meeting.

The sum of $10 per month, for a period of three months, was allowed as poor aid to Martha Hale, a poor woman residing in the First District, and the Auditor instructed to forward the money to McIntosh P. O.

School district No. 135 was organized, comprising the east one-half of Tp. 154, R. 41.

The liquor bond of B. S. Massey was approved and a license granted him for the ensuing year.

Dr. L. Beaupre was appointed county physician for the First and Fourth Commissioner Districts, including the Thirteen Towns.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved,—That the action of the Board, under date of February 4th 1885, awarding the bridge contracts shall not be final, or said contracts executed and delivered by said county before the action of the State Legislature, now in session, enabling said County of Polk to bond itself to the amount of Ten Thousand Five Hundred Dollars, according to the terms and conditions of the enabling act, to defray the expenses of said county in the construction of said bridges. Provided said bill be not passed further action as to the final award, execution and delivery of said contracts shall be as subsequently determined by this Board.

Resolved, further,—That this Board, ask the Legislature to authorize the issue of $6,500 for the purpose of building a bridge across the Red Lake River, on the east end of Robert Street to Jerome's Addition, in the city of Crookston, and $4,000 for the purpose of building another bridge across the Clearwater River in the Village of Red Lake Falls, at or near the present old bridge in said village. Said bonds to bear interest not exceeding 7 per cent per annum and to be payable in 30 years from their date.

Upon the ayes and nays being taken the result showed a unanimous vote in favor of the resolutions being adopted.

Board adjourned until Tuesday February 4th 1885.

P. J. McGUIRE,
Clerk of Board.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred forty-five and 60-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. Anderson Foord: an unmarried man, mortgagor to Fredrick Peterson and John Peterson, mortgagees bearing date the 31st day of May A. D. 1883, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of May A. D. 1883, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 22, and whereas the undivided one-half interest in the said mortgage and the debt secured thereby was by the said Fredrick Peterson, one of said mortgagees, duly assigned in writing under his hand and seal to Harold Swenson and Peter Broberg "copartners" by assignment, dated July 31st, 1884, which assignment was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of August 1884, at 1:20 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages on page 833, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given. That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north one half (n½) of the southeast one-fourth (se¼) and the east one-half (e½) of the southwest one-fourth (sw¼) of Section twenty-eight (28,) of Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), Range forty-three (43,) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to government survey, said lot, piece, or parcel of land being situated in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the fourteenth day of March A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated, January 22d, A. D. 1885.

BRITISH REVERSE IN AFRICA.

Khartoum Falls Into the Hands of El Mahdi Through the Agency of Foulest Treachery.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—Intelligence has been received here that Khartoum has been captured by the Arabian rebels. The whereabouts of Gen. Gordon is unknown. He is probably a prisoner in the hands of the victors. The war office issues the following: "Telegrams from Gen. Wolseley announce that the fall of Khartoum took place Jan. 26. He says Col. Wilson arrived at Khartoum on Jan. 28, and was greatly surprised to find that the enemy was in possession of that place. He immediately started on his return down the river, and proceeded under a heavy fire from the rebels. When some miles below the Shublaka cataract Col. Wilson's steamers were wrecked, but he and his party managed to reach an island in safety, where they are secure. A steamer has gone to bring them back to the British camp near Metemneh". Gen. Wolseley says he has no information regarding the fate of Gen. Gordon, and does not know whether he is dead or alive. There is no longer any doubt that El Mahdi holds possession of Khartoum. Some hopes are entertained that Gen. Gordon may still be holding out in the citadel of the town. Meanwhile the excitement in London and everywhere throughout the British isles where the news is known is RISING TO FEVER HEAT.

Most of the people take a gloomy view of the position of the British troops in Soudan. The jubilant gladness which has characterized England in regard to Egypt ever since the news of Stewart's successful arrival in the neighborhood of Metemneh was received has given way to anxious forebodings, and universal depression and expressions of dismay and foreboding come from almost everybody. The war office is besieged with an army of officers tendering services for active duty in Soudan. Numerous telegrams are being received from officers throughout the country asking assignments to rescue the expedition should the government conclude to take such action. The capture of Khartoum has created grave fears, especially in army circles, for the safety of Gen. Stewart and his army. A number of military officers of repute even express the opinion that unless reinforcements are hurried forward to Korti the fall of Khartoum may lead to disasters to the forces under Lord Wolseley and Gen. Earl. A cabinet council has been summoned to meet at once. Gladstone is fearfully disturbed by the news, and some people believe he will resign.

STRATEGY OF THE FALSE PROPHET.

A native reports that El Mahdi had 60,000 men in the vicinity of Khartoum, and he introduced a number of his emissaries into the city. These emissaries mingled freely with the native troops under Gen. Gordon, and by bribes, threats and working on their religious feelings, induced them to mutiny. Seven thousand of the garrison deserted to the rebels, leaving Gordon with only 2,500 faithful troops. With this small force he attempted to hold the city against the Mahdi's great army, but after severe fighting, in which a large number of rebels were killed, he was compelled to surrender. When Sir Charles Wilson reached Khartoum he found that the Mahdi's forces had occupied both the town and citadel. He tried to land and ascertain the fate of Gen. Gordon, but this step he found impossible. The enemy's guns were turned upon him in full force, and he was therefore compelled to turn his back upon the fallen city and return to Gubat without finding out whether Gordon was dead or alive. The news of the downfall of Khartoum has created a grave apprehension in regard to the whole Egyptian programme among the members of the cabinet. Gladstone and Earl Granville started for London as soon as the news reached them. Military authorities are of the opinion that Gen. Gordon had sent the greater part of his forces down the Nile to meet Gen. Stewart's forces, and so depleted the garrison and citadel of Khartoum that an attack from Omdurman was rendered much easier. The greatest activity prevails at the war department, and many officials remained on duty all last night. Lord Wolseley telegraphs that he does not consider the British position at Gubat in any immediate danger. The government has given orders for further shipments of stores to Egypt. These orders were issued before the news of the fall of Khartoum was received.

MURDERER ARRESTED.

George Miller, the Murderer of Mrs. Snell and Son in Dakota, Captured at Anoka and He Makes a Full Confession.

BRAINERD, Special Telegram, Feb. 5.—George Miller, the murderer of Mrs. Snell and her little boy, near Larimore, Dak., was arrested at Anoka to-day by T. J. Hartley, M. McLaren and J. R. Glover, all of this city, and brought here by the 2 o'clock train this afternoon and lodged in jail, where he coolly confessed his crime with very little interrogation. He talked freely of the matter to visitors, of whom a large number called to see him during the afternoon. He gives the following version of his villainous atrocity:

Saturday, Jan. 21, I took a load of wheat to town and brought a bottle of whisky home with me, hiding it in the barn. That evening I went to a dance in the neighborhood, telling Mrs. Snell I was going to a literary club. Saturday morning she found I had been to the dance, to which she was much opposed, and scolded me until she made me angry. I went to the barn, took a big drink of whisky and returned to the house, when she resumed her scolding and that is the last I know. I don't know how I killed them, whether with an axe or beat their brains out with a club or hammer. In about two hours I came to myself, and realizing what I had done, I took what money I could find in the house, about $150, hitched up the team, drove to Grand Forks, took the train to Fargo, and from there to Brainerd. I am sorry I did it, and have not cared much since I left whether I was caught or hung or shot, or what became of me. I hated the sight of the money, and spent it as fast as I could to get rid of it.

He only had a 50-cent piece left when arrested. He came to Brainerd on Wednesday morning, Jan. 28, and stopped at the Brainerd house, depositing his pocket-book with three $20 gold coins with Mr. McLaren, proprietor, and one of the parties who arrested him. He remained here, spending most of his time at a house of ill fame, until yesterday morning, when he took the 7 o'clock train south, buying a ticket to Anoka. After he had gone the description of him came in the St. Paul papers. The parties named, having seen him were convinced of his identity, and separately started quietly in pursuit. Meeting at the train at 2 o'clock this morning, they united in the hunt with the result above stated, agreeing to divide the reward equally if successful. The prisoner first gave his name as William Morrison. It was evidently his intention to go across the country in a livery rig, but he did not have money enough to hire one.

The circumstances of Miller's fearful crime are vividly remembered, the double murder having come to light within the past week. The wife and son of Rev. Snell were found butchered in bed, their heads frightfully cut and gashed, apparently with an ax and knife. Rewards aggregating $1,500 were offered for the apprehension of the perpetrator.

Three Murderers Lynched.

Smith, Wilson and Jellerson, the murderers, of Hiram Jellerson, were lynched at Audubon, Iowa. Smith and Wilson were shot in their cells, after making a desperate fight, and Cicero Jellerson was hanged from the band stand in the park. The latter confessed to the crime of having murdered his father. They were all three bound over to trial and it was to have taken place, but the judge granted a change of venue and this so incensed the people of Audubon that they determined that justice should be meted out to the criminals, and the end of the tragedy has been brought about.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE—The interstate commerce (Cullom) bill was considered and finally passed—43 to 12. As passed by the senate the bill is substantially as prepared by Senator Cullom, and goes back to the house as an amendment to the Reagan bill. The chances of an agreement between the two houses are not by any means encouraging. The Reagan bill was passed by more than a two-thirds vote, but many members voted for it because they preferred to take that to getting nothing. The principal point of difference between the two measures is that the senate bill provides for nine commissioners, to whom is given full power to regulate all matters provided for, while the Reagan bill refers all controverted points to the courts, and imposes heavy penalties for the violation of its provisions. Whether a majority of the house will insist upon this feature of the Reagan bill is an open question; but there are reasons to justify the belief that this feature will be insisted upon. The prospects, therefore, for an agreement in conference are far more encouraging.

The bill to retire trade dollars and suspend the coinage of standard silver dollars was debated.

HOUSE.—There was an extended discussion of the river and harbor bill but no notes were taken.

Mr. Van Wyck offered the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the secretary of the interior inform the senate what amounts were due the United States on Dec. 31, 1882, from the Union Pacific railroad, also what amounts have become due from that date until Dec. 31, 1884, according to the rule laid down in the decision lately made between the United States and said road in the court of claims; also whether the annual settlement was made Feb. 1, 1885, as provided in the Thurman act.

Mr Sherman offered the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee on judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the senate as to whether legislation is required, and if so, in what regard to the appointment of courts martial and the regulation, proceedings and practice in trials before such courts in time of peace, and whether under existing laws an officer may be tried before a court martial appointed by the president in cases where the commander of the accused officer to be tried is not the accuser.

The bill passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis.

The senate then took up the bill to quiet the title of settlers on Des Moines river lands, but at 2 o'clock it was displaced by the bill for the redemption of trade dollars and suspension of standard dollar coinage.

Mr. Bayard strongly opposed the redemption of the trade dollar at its face value. Indeed, he objected to the word "redemption" in connection with it. Trade dollars were in the same category as silver bars. It was to him a paradox how men could ask, in the name of justice, to receive less for more, yet we were told the honor of the country was at stake. This so-called "redemption" would be a departure from the landmarks of government, passing from the real and tested to the unreal and imaginary. The great question was, can congress create values? Which of you, by taking thought, can add a cubit to his stature? Which of you, which majority of you, by passing laws from now till doomsday, can create a value? Could we create values by congressional fiat? Could congress say "Let value be," and value would be? Congress had already tried it. With 2,000,000 men in the field congress had issued notes bearing their value stamped upon them, yet it had been unable to keep those notes at half their face value. This was

NOT A PARTY QUESTION.

He advocated the suspension of the silver coinage act. The laws of business should be recognized. Those who would suffer most by silver mono-metalism were laborers, those who could not bide their time. An apprehension existed in the business community of evils stated by Secretary McCulloch as likely to follow any approach to mono-metalism on the basis of silver. There were laws of commerce that could not be set aside at the behest of legislators. To be sure, the supreme court had said congress could destroy every pecuniary obligation expressed in lawful money of the United States. Mr. Bayard did not wish to comment further upon that most remarkable and startling decision, but there was one thing congress and the supreme court and all the armies that could be raised could not do, and that was to create or maintain a value against the belief of the person to whom tendered. Bayard believed that all currency necessary for the United States at the present time was here.

The house made very little headway to-day with the enormous mass of business that is being crowded into its last days. An hour was spent in wrangling over the rules. It is recorded that the house actually passed three bills. The latter part of the session was occupied in discussing the interminable river and harbor bill. The warmest personal tilt in the history of this congress took place today between Reed of Maine and Hiscock of New York on the one side, and Breckenridge of Arkansas and Hunt of Louisana on the other.

In the House the 5th the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill reported to the house to-day recommends an appropriation of $21,213,701, which is $1,088,468 less than the estimates and $272,902 less than the appropriation for the present fiscal year. The bill reduces the salaries of 150 special examiners in the pension bureau, provided for at the last session, from $1,600 to $1,400 annually, on recommendation of the interior department. It also provides that the president shall discontinue the appointment and services of officers at ports of entry where for two successive years last past the revenues collected were less than the salaries and expenses of the office. The president may, however, appoint deputy collectors for such ports, who shall be compensated by fees not exceeding $1,500. The office of superintendent of foreign mails is abolished and supervision of the foreign mail service is placed with the second assistant postmaster general. The compensation of special agents in the internal revenue service is limited to $6 a day, except the chief, who is to receive $8 a day. Judges of the court of claims shall prescribe a system of fees similar to that in the United States circuit courts, and shall enforce their collections against litigants unsuccessful in causes of action in the court. The governor of Dakota is also authorized, in conjunction with the presiding officers of the last legislature, to reapportion the territory, first Monday in September, 1885, or within ten days thereafter.

SENATE.—After considerable time spent in unimportant business, Mr. Palmer spoke in favor of the proposed woman suffrage amendment to the constitution. The bill to regulate the fees of pension agents and attorneys passed. The bill provides: No fee greater than $10 shall be received by pension claim agents, except that, under special circumstances, subject to revision by the commissioner of pension, a contract in writing may be made between applicants and claim agents for a fee not exceeding $25. The bill contains a clause specially forbidding the collection by claim agents of more than $10 on claims filed between June 20, 1878, and July 4, 1884, and prohibiting government pension agents from paying claim agents more than $10 on such claims, even in cases of new contracts.

In executive session, the following appointments were confirmed: Joshua A. Smith, Mississippi, United States consul at Asuncion, Paraguay; Robert Woodbridge, Ohio, agent for the Indians at Lemhi agency, Idaho. Postmasters—Hattie Dennison, Vancouver, Washington; John T. Yoe, Dillon, Mont.; Miss Ettie L. Poet, Tipton, Iowa; Daniel B. Johns, Groton, Dak.; C. R. Ingham, Alton, Iowa; Sylvester W. Osborne, Darlington, Wis.; Charles A. Spencer, Sheboygan Falls, Wis.

Nominations—James A. McKnight, Utah, consul of the United States at St. Helena; Edward H. Thompson, Massachusetts, consul of the United States at Merida. Postmasters—Newton W. Simmons, Boone, Iowa.

HOUSE.—The river and harbor bill was discussed at great length without result. The house evening session passed twenty-six pension bills, including one granting a pension of $50 each to the minor children of the late Lieut. Kislingbury and one increasing to $50 the pension of the widow of Commodore Fillebrown, and adjourned.

SENATE.—A joint resolution passed accepting from Mrs. U. S. Grant her husband's swords, medals and other articles. The bill creating an army retired list for privates and non-commissioned officers passed. Several private pension bills were passed, upon one of which was engrafted several provisions of the Mexican pension bill, one increasing 88 pensions to $12 a month. The District of Columbia appropriation bill passed.

The chair named Messrs. Hoar and Pendleton as tellers on the part of the senate in the count of the electoral vote.

Senator Miller of New York, from the committee on agriculture favorably reported the bill to provide that the agricultural department shall be an executive department under the supervision of a secretary of agriculture. The compensation of the secretary shall be the same as the secretaries of the other executive of departments. An assistant secretary of agriculture shall be appointed, at the same salary recieved by the assistant secretary of the interior. A chief clerk, at an annual salary of $2,500, shall also be appointed. The bill further provides for the creation of divisions of veterinary science and forestry in the department.

HOUSE.—The whole day spent in discussing the river and harbor bill.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

Widespread Commotion Caused by that Remarkable Statement of a Physician.

The story published in these columns recently, from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat, created a great deal of comment here as it has elsewhere. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well-known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days ago which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion at his residence on Andrews street, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. I was brought so low by neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of kidney disease more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydraheaded monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also."

Mr. Warner was visited at his establishment on North St. Paul street. At first he was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease had increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that from '70 to '80, its growth was over 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop Haven, Folger, Colfax and others. Nearly every week the papers record the death of some prominent man from this scourge. Recently, however, the increase has been checked and I attribute this to the general use of my remedy."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"A prominent professor in a New Orleans Medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys.' And in less than a year he was dead. The slightest indication of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"No more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured."

"I know it can. I know it from my own and the experience of thousands of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'There goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proved true if I had not providentially used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."

Dr. S. A. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analysts, courteously answered the questions that were propounded him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir. I did not think it possible."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes. I have chemically analyzed it and find it pure and harmless."

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The doctor was cured four years ago and is well and attending to his professional duties to-day. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statement they make, cannot for a moment be doubted. Dr. Henion's experience shows that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, and that it can be cured.

A divorce case involving a former member of the clergy, who has enjoyed more or less notoriety, was commenced in the district court of Minneapolis. The Rev. Edward S. Bowdish has sued for divorce from Mary Bowdish on the ground of desertion. Mr. and Mrs. Bowdish were married in Minneapolis, in December, 1881. In January, 1882, the plaintiff alleges that, without any fault on his part, Mrs. Bowdish deserted him, and has since refused to live with him; that he furnished her a good home, and in all things conducted himself toward her as a loving husband should, and requested her to live with him as his wife, but she has persistently refused and neglected to do so.

George E. Lemon, pension attorney of Washington, was before the house committee on payment of pensions, bounty and bankruptcy, and in answer to inquiries of members, said he paid Col. Ingersol $2,500, and Judge Wilson $1,000 to secure the passage of the law enacted at the last session of congress relative to increase of attorneys' fees in pension cases.

According to the Ephemeris an examination of 3,726 prescriptions in a Boston drug store showed that 504 different drugs were called for by the doctors. Quinine took the lead by appearing in 292 prescriptions, morphine appeared in 172, bromide of potassium in 171, iodide of potassium in 155 and muriate of iron in 134. The whole number of articles in the pharmacopœia is 994.

There is in process of construction in Bielefeld, Germany, a church that is intended for only one class of persons, namely, for epileptics. The corner stone was laid by the Crown Prince some time ago. When completed the building will resemble a cross in appearance, with accommodations for 1,000 persons.

The last words spoken by the late Frank Chanfrau upon the stage a few hours previous to his sudden death, can scarcely be called prophetic. They occur in "Kit," and are as follows: "I shall yet live, Alice, to tell you another bear story."

A Clear Voice.

Mr. Charles T. Krebs, 737 Madison avenue, Baltimore, Maryland, well known in banking circles, certifies to the excellence of the Red Star Cough Cure. A few drops speedily cured his niece of severe hoarseness and sore throat. It is pleasant to take. No one can be poisoned by this remedy, which is free from opium, morphia and other dangerous drugs.

Cuba's two millions of people have to pay $14,000,000 a year for the support of the army and navy that keep them in subjection. The island yields Spain an annual revenue of $37,000,000.

The London Times celebrated its one hundreth birthday on the last day of 1884 by a thirty-line editorial, in which it said: "We write our own history day by day along with the history of the world."

A writer in Science, discussing the subject of rainfall in Kansas, finds that while this has increased 20 per cent in the eastern half of the State since its occupation by the white settlers, Western Kansas has little increase of rainfall to boast of and little to hope for. He greatly doubts indeed whether this half of the State lying outside of the immediate track of vapor-laden winds, can ever have a rainfall adequate to maintain successful agriculture.

No city in the world has the magnificent fish supply found in New York. In its markets may be had pompano at $2 per pound, and fresh cod at 5 cents. Spanish mackerel, flounders, trout, eels, frogs, green turtles, sharks, salmon, halibut, smelts, white bait, shrimps, crabs, lobsters, mussels, sting rays, electric eels, devil fish, polyp, scollops, sturgeon, drum-fish, squids, sword-fish, sea-horse, cod-tongues in bunches, roe, cohogs, logger heads, terrapins, sea-robins, king crabs, and a vast variety of animal life brought from the sea; most of it delicious food.

Minister West of Great Britain was asked what he thought of the shooting of O'Donovan Rossa, and in reply said: "I deeply regret the shooting of that man, because it makes it appear as if the party of law and order were resorting to the same means as the dynamiters and were pursuing a system of retaliation, than which nothing is more dangerous. Of course, it would be suspecting England of being a fool to imagine it instigated the attack on Rossa."

Above all other earthly ills,
I hate the big, old-fashioned pills;
By slow degrees they downward wend,
And often pause, or upward tend;
With such discomfort are they fraught,
Their good effects amount to naught.
Now, Dr. Pierce prepares a pill
That just exactly fills the bill—
A Pellet, rather, that is all—
A Pleasant Purgative, and small;
Just try them as you feel their need,
You'll find that I speak truth, indeed.

No liquor will hereafter be sold at Wisconsin state fairs.

The Morning Dress.

It is said that a lady's standing in society can easily be determined by her dress at the breakfast-table; an expensive, showy costume indicating that the wearer has not yet learned the proprieties. But no one need be afraid of being called "shoddy" if her loveliness is as apparent by daylight as at the hops. Perfect beauty is never the attendant of disease; above all, of those diseases peculiar to women, and which find a ready cure in Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Price reduced to one dollar. Hard to Believe.

It is hard to believe that a man was cured of a Kidney disease after his body was swollen as big as a barrel and he had been given up as incurable and lay at death's door. Yet such a cure was accomplished by Kidney-Wort in the person of M. M. Devereaux of Ionia, Mich., who says: "After thirteen of the best doctors in Detroit had given me up, I was cured by Kidney-Wort. I want every one to know what a boon it is."

A Literary Prize.

The Anoka Herald says: "The Sunday Pioneer Press is a paper that every resident of Minnesota can be proud of. In fact, there are not half a dozen magazines in the country equal to it in point of literary productions and ability."

The choicest literature appearing in the Sunday Pioneer Press, appears also in the weekly Pioneer Press. The "Galaxy of Genius" articles, which that paper has contracted for for the current year, is a notable feature, and is eliciting many encomiums. The weekly of Feb. 12th is promised of this series, "Turkish Affairs and English Policy" by Hobart Pasha, Admiral of the Ottaman fleet; "Among the Buddhists in Ceylon" by Moncure D. Conway; and "Life in other Worlds" by Richard A. Proctor. These articles are all copyright matter.

REBELLION ECHOES.

Longstreet's Desperate Charge at the Battle of Gettysburg—Described by a Soldier Who Witnessed it from Behind the Scenes.

From the Boston Journal.

The famous charge of Longstreet's corps on the third day at Gettysburg has been often described, and it is better understood, probably, than any other great battle scene of the civil war. It is therefore not my purpose in this article to give anything like a general description of the movement, but simply to speak of it as seen by a little party of men belonging to the first corps, who were wounded in the first day's fight among whom it was my fortune to be cast. We were placed hors de combat on the crest of Seminary Ridge, afterward the key of the confederate position. When our troops fell back we were left where we fell, and were therefore obliged to accept the hospitalities of the enemy. Of their abilities as entertainers I do not care to speak. Neither will it prove agreeable to awaken too many of the recollections of that terrible experience. It would require the pen of a Dante to cover the whole ground. Therefore, as was once said by one doubtless more familiar with the writings of Dante than I am, "we will lave all that go."

On the third day, when preparations were being made for the coup de main, our little party occupied a house within the rebel lines, a short distance from the spot where Longstreet formed his attacking column. Not having had our wounds properly attended to, and being almost wholly without food, it can readily be seen that our situation was anything but pleasant. And yet, bad as this was, we were compelled to endure something a great deal worse, in the shape of tantalization and insult from the hordes of sneaks and bummers who were continually prowling about the building. Some of our tormenters may have been genuine soldiers, who were simply passing and repassing in the line of duty. If so, to them I make the amende honorable, but toward the skulkers, I felt then and entertain still nothing but the deepest contempt. Among the bluster to which we were compelled to listen came the following;

"You 'uns will hear plenty of music pretty soon; Longstreet's going to charge," said a blatant rebel captain, who had hung about us like a leech for a day and a half, while his regiment, the eighth Georgia, was preparing to advance with the attacking column.

"Oh, give us a rest!" cried an indignant boy in blue, lying helpless upon the floor: "what do you know about it?" "I know this about it, Yank. In a little while you'll hear a big gun. That's only the signal, though; the fun is to follow. Then the artillery will open all along the line. Then Longstreet will charge, and if any of your fellows are left alive when his men get there, they'll have to git." And our Falstaff, having delivered himself of this bombastic utterence, strutted back and forth with the air of one who had settled the whole business with a wave of his hand.

"What does the reb mean?" we whispered to one another.

"Can it be possible there is any truth in what he says? Do you suppose he knows anything about it, or that if such a movement is contemplated their whole army knows it?" asked a sergeant who was lying beside me.

"Yes," I replied, "it may be true. Perhaps he has got his news from some courier or staff officer. I have read of one battle in Europe, I have forgotten where, in which the commanding general announced to his army in a general order that one of his divisions would be called upon for a desperate charge."

We felt certain, anyway, that the rebels were up to some mischief, so many hints of it had been given and it was so still every where. Occasionally we heard the clatter of hoofs, but this was all; and we regarded this, even, as ominous of a move of some kind. Those of us who could crawl got to the doors and windows. We were a sorry looking set of fellows—torn by shot and shell, covered with blood and dirt, our faces haggard with weariness and suffering—but the grand old army of the Potomac contained no men who were more anxious for success. Between us and our comrades was an impassable gulf nearly two miles wide, thickly strewed with the dead and dying of both armies, bordered with angry lines in blue and gray—impediments to progress more formidable than the waves of the storm-swept sea—yet in spite of this we longed to fly to them or in some way to warn them of the coming storm. In anxiety, in agony even, we watched and waited for hours.

At last the signal for onslaught came. Is was the sharp report of a Whitworth gun, and as its echoes died away in the distance we could see thousands of men everywhere scrambling for their places in the ranks and behind the breastworks. Batteries came galloping up from the right and left, taking position on the ridge and immediately opening fire, and staff officers were carrying orders in every direction. It was an exciting moment. The portentous silence of the morning had been oppressive, and we were glad it was now broken. Anything was better than uncertainty. The rebel captain's story was beginning to be verified. In a short time, emerging from a straggling forest in the distance, we distinctly saw the heads of three columns of infantry. Our eyes were now strained to their utmost to watch the movements of this new force. Slowly it came out into the open ground, it halted and dressed its lines.

Here and there a slight wavering, as if shaken by the wind, showed they were stripping for action. Officers were riding up and down and in and out among them, and their wild cheers showed they were determined to do or die. They waved their hats and caps above their heads, as if in answer to the appeals of their leaders. All this time we did not speak to each other, so intently were we watching the enemy. We held our breath and waited, each busy with his own thoughts. After a while the great "entering wedge" moved forward. Then cheers and yells broke out all along the line of battle. It was a scene which for grandeur and heroic interest was never before equaled on this continent, and how mighty were the interests involved! The fate of the republic itself—aye, more, the progress of mankind—hung trembling in the balance.

I had often seen great bodies of troops in motion, but never anything like that. Steadily, with the regularity of a machine, they swept on. We were almost deafened by the roar of cannon, for more than a hundred rebel guns had opened their mouths and were spouting tons of iron at every discharge. The windows of the building we occupied were rattling as though an earthquake was upon us, and the very ground beneath seemed to tremble. Added to this was our anxiety for our comrades. Could they live through such a cannonade? Would they be able to hurl back this mighty charging column, so terribly in earnest? Yes; in spite of our fears we knew they would. We knew the temper of the men upon whom the destiny of the republic now rested. And even while we speculated thus the guns of the Union made answer. Every loyal gun was now pouring shot and shell upon the advancing enemy. We could no longer see them, so closely were they enveloped in clouds of dust and the smoke of bursting shells. The volume of sound now increased a hundred fold, and it seemed every minute that it would be more than our ears could bear. It was terrific beyond anything that can be imagined by those who never witnessed an artillery battle of magnitude. It was my lot, just before the battle of Fredericksburg, to lie behind Burnside's guns, massed on the heights of Falmouth while they rained shot and shell into the town of Fredericksburg and on to the hills beyond. I thought that cannonade was terrible. But it was boys' play compared with the one we were now witnessing. And yet, strange, and improbable as the statement may seem, above all the roar of conflict we could hear the rebel yell of that reckless charging column. It was shrill and continuous, like the whistling of the wind in a storm. Finally the fire of rebel artillery slackened a little, as there was danger now of their killing their own men, but the battle was becoming more furious, for the battle of musketry had begun, and the clatter of small arms was continuous. The roar of the guns on Cemetery hill and from every available point in the Union line continued with increasing fury, but still, above it all, the rebel yell! Would it never cease? The rebels back of us and from every elevated point far and near were watching their forlorn hope, and officers of high and low degree gazed anxiously into that vortex of carnage. Occasionally they would point in this direction or that, and staff officers would gallop away to distant parts of the field as though preparations were being made for a general advance. Our anxiety increased every moment, but we were still hopeful. As long as there was no abatement in that terrible musketry fire we knew our boys were standing their ground. We dared not think of the thousands of brave fellows who were going down every moment.

But the climax came at last. That piercing yell had died away, and nothing could now be heard but the din and roar of battle. This continued for some time, and then, as the sun is wont to burst through the clouds and scatter the mists and darkness, only more suddenly, came the full, round, hearty hurrahs of our comrades. We needed no interpreter to tell us the meaning of those cheers. They were louder, even, than had been the rebel yell, and we answered them with a will from our position inside the rebel lines. Rebel officers standing about the building tried to stop us, but we only screamed the louder, for we were beside ourselves with joy. Wounds, and hunger were forgotten, and tears flowed down our grimy faces. The enthusiasm of Appomattox did not exceed ours. We cheered again and again. A few of my companions, in that extreme moment, snapped the slender cord that held them to earth, and their spirits took flight to a world where wars never come. This was all that marred the scene—all that lessened our joy.

"Ah, here they come!" we all cried at once. Yes, sure enough, they were coming. But they were not coming back in the order in which they advanced. Far from it. They were pouring back to the shelter of their guns in the wildest disorder—swarming over every foot of ground in defeat and confusion—broken and completely demoralized. No order and no formation anywhere. It was a terrible rout—a wild stampede for safety. The descendents of the cavaliers had dashed themselves against Plymouth Rock and been hurled back. For some time wounded men had been streaming in from the scene of the encounter in large numbers, and for hours till far into the night, the mournful procession kept moving on. It was a sickening sight, and one I can never forget.

It soon became silent again. Despair rested on the face of every rebel we could see. Chaos ruled everywhere. The enemy had staked their all on the throwing of the dice and had lost. We watched a long time for the advance of our comrades, that the work of overthrowing the foe might be completed, but it came not. We have since learned why. Meade was too timid. A Phil Kearney at the head of a division would have swept the rebel army out of existence. Phil Sheridan in Meade's place would have done it. The old sixth corps was there ready for the work. The war might have been virtually ended then and there, for with Lee destroyed the Mississippi open, Vicksburg and Port Hudson in our hands, little would have remained to be done.

Another Greeley Story.

Gen. Sheridan tells this story on Horace Greeley: "I was stationed at New Orleans when Mr. Greeley came there on his tour when a candidate for the presidency. The old creole residents gave him a dinner, and to make it as fine an affair as possible each of the hosts was laid under contribution for some of the rarest wines in his cellar. When dinner was announced, and the halfshell oysters had disappeared the waiter appeared at Mr. Greeley's seat with a plate of beautiful shrimp. "You can take them away," he said to the waiter, and then he added apologetically to the horrified old French creole gentleman who presided, "I never eat insects of any kind." Later on soup was served, and at the same time a glass of delicious white wine was placed at Mr. Greeley's right hand. He pushed it aside quietly, but not unobserved by the chief host. "Do you not drink wine?" he asked. "No," answered Mr. Greeley. "I never drink any liquors." "Is there any thing you would like to drink with your soup?" the host then asked, a little disappointed. "If you've got it," answered Mr. Greeley, "and it isn't any trouble, I'd like to have a glass of fresh buttermilk." "Mon Dieu!" said the host afterwards in his broken English, "Ze idea of electing to ze presidency a man vot drink buttermilk vis his soup!"

THREE BAD DUKES.

Members of the English Peerage Who Dishonor their Lineage.

The Duke of Beaufort is a sybarito, and, although 60 years of age and the father of a large family, he is as notable for his gallantries as the gayest young millionaire about town, says a London letter. He fancies himself a great patron of the drama, which his grace evidently believes to be most fitly represented by young ladies in curtailed skirts, possessed of classically modelled understandings. He is frequently to be seen lolling in a stall at the Gaiety, presumably surveying the charms of the brazen young actress popularly known as "the child," who for some years past he has had the credit of furnishing with silks, diamonds and sealskins, hardly attainiable on the modest salary of some $50 a week, which this precious young lady enjoys. For politics, the affairs of the nation, or the good of the people, the Dike of Beaufort cares nothing. He is president of the coaching club, and one of the best four-in-hand whips in London. His charitable deeds would appear to be confined to the largesse lavished on the interesting young female I have referred to.

His grace the Duke of Bedford is one of the richest men in England, his rent roll reaching $1,000,000 a year. A large amount of this enormous revenue is wrung from some of the poorest inhabitants of mighty London. The Duke owns Covent Garden market and hundreds of houses in the purlieus of the unsavory neighborhood where stands that disgrace to the greatest city in the world. Many of these houses are let out in tenements and the unfortunate occupants have during the last twenty years been rack rented again and again by the Duke's agents. It is only three weeks ago since the board of health had to condemn several of these houses as being unfit for human habitation. Thereupon the wretched occupants were promptly evicted, and, to insure their getting out within the few days the law gave them, the water supply was inhumanely cut off and the poor wretches left to sleep in the streets or go into the workhouse, as chance might decree. This plutocratic nobleman has long stood in the way of the authorities, who have been for years desirous of remodelling and improving Covent Garden market, and his whole life affords a striking instance of the baneful influences exercised upon the welfare of the people by an irresponsible aristocracy who the mere accident of birth has for hundreds of years enabled to fatten on the industries of the people.

The next duke on the list is about as fine a specimen of the titled profligate as can be found in the whole peerage. The Duke of Marlborough, who has only recently succeeded to the title, led such a life of dissipation while known as the Marquis of Blandford, that his father refused to see or communicate with him for some years previous to his demise. After gambling to an extent that has impoverished the ducal acres for years to come, drinking so heavily that he has already undermined an originally robust physique, he put the climax upon a career as ignoble as foolishly criminal by ruining the wife of his bosom friend, the Earl of Aylesford, while that drunken and empty-headed nobleman was traveling with the Prince of Wales in India. At this time the wretch was already married, and the father of sons and daughters. His amiable and long suffering wife, a daughter of the Duke of Aborcon, was willing, for the sake of her children, to forgive the titled ruffian and resume living with him on the condition of abandoning the frail countess who had so basely betrayed the honor of her absent spouse. To the surprise of everybody, the noble duke refused to listen to the pleadings of the true woman who was unfortunate enough to bear his name, and the prayers of his aged father and mother failed to win him from the companion of his infamy. Satisfied at length of the utter worthlessness of her husband, the poor Duchess of Marlborough eventually sued for a divorce, and the decree of dissolution of marriage, promptly granted, has recently been made absolute. Retribution, however, was at hand, for when the old Duke of Malborough died some few months back it was found that he had left every shilling he had the power to will to his second son. Lord Randolph Churchill, who married the daughter of Leonard Jerome, of New York.

This titled reprobate to-day enjoys, I think, a pension of £10,000 a year, which has been religiously paid annually to the head of the Churchill family ever since the great Duke of Marlborough was endowed with his title and his estates by a grateful country in 1702.

The duke of Hamilton succeeded to the title in 1863, and at once proceeded to dissipate one of the most enormous fortunes that ever fell into the hands of a minor; for at the time of his father's death the young spendthrift lacked two years of the attainment of his majority. Race horses, dice, cards, wine and women solely occupied his attention for the next 10 years or so, when his affairs became so hopelessly involved that nothing but a protracted residence abroad and a temporary sequestration of his estates could save the then impending collapse of Scotland's premier duke. The late Mr. Padwick, an able financier and large money lender, and the duke's heaviest creditor, took the young profligate's affairs in hand, and about three years since his debts were partially paid off, and he was once more his own master. Since that period he has resumed racing and gambling with apparently as keen a zest as ever. Newly contracted debts last year compelled him to dispose of the family heirlooms, consisting of valuable pictures, plate, priceless china and endless bric-a-brac that had long been the envy of half the collectors of Europe.

It is almost needless to add that this duke has never opened his mouth in the house of lords, has never by act or deed benefited a fellow-creature, and the only accomplishment I know him to be possessed of is that of boxing. As he possesses the physique of a Hercules and the personal appearance of a butcher, there is nothing remarkable in his being an apt disciple of the fistic champions.

Dominion government officials have seized 2,500,000 feet of logs cut on the Canadian railway belt in British Columbia by Americans who intended to float the plunder to the Sound mills. The spoliation has been going on unchecked for years.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Choice Cooking Recipes.

A good dish for breakfast is made by chopping pieces of cold boiled or fried ham just as fine as it is possible to chop them; mix them with cold mashed potatoes, an egg or two, a little butter in a frying pan, and brown the balls. Serve hot.

CREAM CAKE.—Two fresh eggs, one large teacup of brown sugar, one small one of sour cream, a small teaspoonful of soda, with flour sifted in until it is quite stiff. This makes an excellent every-day cake, and may be quickly made.

BAKING POWDER.—One ounce of tartaric acid, eight ounces of cream-of-tartar, five ounces of flour. Mix thoroughly in the following manner: Pulverize the acid and mix with cream-of-tartar; pulverize the soda and mix with the flour; then add all together and mix well by sifting through a flour sieve several times. I can vouch for its quality if you get good cream-of-tartar. I have used it for years.—

C. K. TERRY.

CANNING SQUASH.—Has any lady of the Domestic Circle canned squash and been successful? I cannot succeed, and if any one has done it will she please tell me her method.

AS TO KEEPING PICKLES;—I have always had success in this way: After the cucumbers have been in brine 26 hours wipe them thoroughly and pack them in glass cans. Heat vinegar to the boiling point with a few cloves to keep it. Wrap towels, wrung from hot water, under and around the cans, fill them up with the hot vinegar, and screw on the covers. The pickles will be crisp, green, and thorougly pickled. I have kept them in this way two years.

HULLED CORN.—Into an iron kettle with three gallons of water put six quarts of hard wood ashes, boil about five minutes, remove from the fire and pour in a pint of cold water to settle it. Strain off the lye, put into an iron kettle and put into it six quarts of shelled corn. Boil over a brisk fire half an hour, skimming and stirring frequently, strain off the lye and rinse the corn thoroughly in several clear waters. Then put the corn in a large pan, cover it with water and rub thoroughly till the black chits come off; rinse till the water is clear; then put into a clean kettle with water enough to cover it and parboil three or four times, pouring off the water each time. Then boil till quite soft, taking care that it does not burn. Add two tablespoonfuls salt during the last boiling.

Forming a Good Lawn.

If about to form a new lawn, be it large or small, it will pay you to make a good job of it. Whether prepared by plow or spade, the land should be subsoiled and care be taken to keep the good, or surface soil, at the top, and the subsoil in the bottom, as before. A good dressing of well-rotted manure is highly beneficial. It should be turned under, but kept within a few inches of the surface, so as to be of immediate assistance to the young grass. When preparing the ground, it is well to remove what rocks and stumps may be within a foot of the surface. This subsoiling will not only be of lasting benefit to the grass, but also to whatever trees or shrubs are to be grown upon the space. It will likewise lessen the severity of Summer's drought. To make a really good job, the ground should be prepared in Fall and left unfinished till Spring, by which time reins, frost and snow will have settled it so that all unevenousss is readily discovered and then easily mended. But if we have to prepare our ground in Spring to be laid down to at once, wherever stumps or stones have been removed the soil should be firmly packed from the bottom up; then the whole surface of the lot should be properly leveled, trod or rolled. Whether we sow or sod our lawns, it should be done as early in Spring as the ground is in mellow, working order, so as to give the grass a good chance to get established before the dry, warm Summer sets in. Whether level, rolling, or sloping, the surface of the lawn should be smooth and even, without any puckers, bumps or hollows, and so disposed that in Summer or Winter, water will not lodge in pools in any part of it. Good drainage is very important, not only for the welfare of the grass, but also for that of the trees, shrubs, roses and other plants. If possible, banks such as those around the house, also a 12 or 20-inch wide strip along the edge of the walks or roadways, should be sodded rather than sown, but broad, open spaces, as the body of the lawn, may as well be seeded down as sodded. An old cow pasture yields excellent sod.—Rural New Yorker.

Care of an Asparagus Bed.

Samuel Hartwell said, in the course of his remarks before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, that he had a bed of asparagus of an acre and a-quarter, which had been planted 10 or 12 years, and which had yielded a net profit of $400 in one year. He usually manures in Spring, though the Fall might be preferable, but the Spring is more convenient because he collects most of his manure in the Winter. It will take all the manure one can afford to give it, and the finer it is the better. The bed can only be plowed shallow, on account of the danger of injuring the roots. He plows as early as the weather will permit, and harrows a week or fortnight later, and as late as possible without injuring the shoots, goes over it with a bush harrow, to make the soil fine. He cuts from about the 20th of May to the 20th of June, though some cut until the 4th of July. The time depends somewhat on how it sells, but too late cutting will injure the roots. In an old bed, the rows spread and make more work hand weeding. He weeds only once until after ceasing to cut, and then goes over it with a shares harrow. He does not like to have seedling plants come up between the rows; they are as bad as weeds. Seed-bearing exhausts the ground, just as cucumbers allowed to go to seed exhaust the ground more than if cut for pickles. He used three or four barrels of fish-salt on his asparagus bed, but could not say whether it did any good.

Simple Tests For Pure Water.

Dr. Baker, of the Michigan state board of health, suggests the following simple tests for drinking water: Color—Fill a bottle made of colorless glass; look through the water at some black object; the water should appear perfectly colorless. A muddy or turbid appearance indicates the presence of soluble organic matter, or of solid matter in suspension. Odor—Empty out some of the water, cork up the bottle and place it for a few hours in a warm place; shake it, remove the cork, and if the odor is in the least repulsive, the water should be rejected. By heating the water to boiling an odor is evolved that otherwise does not appear. Taste—Water fresh from a well is usually tasteless, even though it may contain a large amount of putrescible organic matter. Water for domestic use should be perfectly tasteless and remain so, even after it has been warmed. Heisch's test for sewage contamination—Fill a clean pint bottle three-fourths full of water, dissolve a teaspoonful of loaf or granulated sugar, cork the bottle and place it in a warm place for two days. If the water becomes cloudy or muddy it is unfit for domestic use. If it remains perfectly clear, it is probably safe to use.

Embroidery.

Embroiderers should have an eye for color, and know something of drawing, and at the same time they should have a love of flowers, and cultivate the habit of observing them carefully. They will then instinctively avoid those which are beyond the range of their art, and content themselves with such forms and colors as can be pleasingly rendered in silk and wool. It is good practice to take up one character at a time, and make a regular study of it in this way. Is is a pretty device to have on the chairbacks and teacloth in the drawing-room, which require to be changed now and then for the sake of variety, only such flowers as are in bloom at the time. During the greater part of the year this is quite practicable. In the whole range of embroidery there is nothing more charming than a set of dessert mats, worked on cream-colored satin with outline silks, and edged with delicate lace, each having a garland of the prevailing flower—violets in April; pansies in May, cornflowers in June, forget-me-nots in July, single dahlias in August, grapes and vine leaves in September, and in the winter Virginia creeper leaves.—American Queen.

Crazy Cushion.

Take a square cambric the size you wish your sofa cushion to be, then baste your pieces of silk, satin or velvet on the cambric, just as they are, that is, in any shape or size they may be, fitting them so that no part of the cambric will show; turn in the edges and stitch them down with silk of various colors. Different fancy stitching may be used making as great a variety as possible.

A sofa pillow can be made of Java canvas in this neighborly way. The owner makes a wreath on a square of canvas and then passes it around among her friends and each one works whatever she chooses, using colors as suits the fancy. Another method is to divide the canvas into small squares by a simple pattern of cross stitch, and fill center square with some design, and have friends fill up the other squares. When all the rectangles are wrought, line with some firm material, and make the under part of bright colored fabric. Fill with curled hair, and finish the edge with cord ornamenting the corners with tassels.

Sore Shoulders in Horses.

Farm horses are most liable to have sore shoulders in early spring, when unaccustomed to work. If humanity does not lead to care in prevention and cure, interest will prompt it, for certainly a horse with sound shoulders will do more work than if these be swollen and lacerated. Prevention is better than cure. The first point is to secure good, well fitting collars, those of soft leather, of equal hardness on both sides. Many collars are stuffed more solidly on one side than on the other, and should be rejected. The horse should be fitted to a collar at the shop, as two very seldom have shoulders exactly alike. I have often wondered that farmers do not have collars made especially for each horse. The cost would be amply repaid, as is it slight compared with the increased service that would thus be secured. I prefer a collar stuffed with hair. The leather should be kept well oiled, especially where meeting the shoulder. Pure neat's foot oil makes the leather soft and pliable, and is a good preventive and cure for sore shoulders. Cloth collars are now made, and cloth pads to cover the entire collar face. I know that they are good and recommend them to other farmers. Early in the spring, at least two weeks before plowing commences, begin bathing the shoulders of each work horse with strong salt brine. I keep in the stalls an old fruit can, and a bag tied to the end of a cob; and it takes but a moment to throw in a handful of salt with some water, stir it up apply the brine. It toughens and hardens the skin and cools it, allaying inflammation. I do this each evening; after work begins I first wash off the shoulders with clean water. I have never been troubled with sore shoulders since I have taken to carefully selecting collars, keeping them soft with oil and bathing frequently with the salt water. The best cure for sore shoulders is rest, and this may be secured without stopping work, by removing the pressure from the irritated spot. One method is to cut a long, narrow slit in the home groove opposite the soreness, remove part of the stuffing and make a little depression by pounding the face over the sore. The slit will not injure the collar. Another method is to use pads above and below the tender spot to keep off the pressure. After considerable experience I consider the best pad one made by stuffing a coat sleeve with hay, about one inch thick between the collar and shoulder, but thinner where it passes under the hames. Hay works into lumps less than rags, hair or wool, and is elastic enough to spring the collar from the shoulders when the draft slackens, giving them opportunity to cool and rest.—J. M. S, in American Agriculturist.

Feeding Calves.

Cows are now so high in price that it will pay to raise nice heifer calves for the dairy, provided they can be raised on skimmed milk. There is frequently some difficulty in doing so and have them always do well, as the milk is not always in the right condition and suited to their digestion. Many who have only thoroughbred calves allow them to run with their dams, the most healthful method possible; but with the ordinary cow this cannot be done. It will not pay to do it and the calf must be grown on skimmed milk if at all. Some are very successful in this and others have difficulty. The calves do not eat well or they have the "scours" or other troubles of indigestion. A great portion of the difficulty may be removed by feeding only sweet milk in the beginning and at a proper temperature. Those who have had much experience consider more frequent feeding the great preventative of diseases. Mr. E. Burnett of Massachusetts, an experienced dairyman, said at the Vermont dairyman's meeting the difference between feeding calves three times a day and twice a day might seem a small matter, yet in his experience, it frequently made the difference between a live calf and a dead one. Calves allowed to run at large with their dams take their food at short intervals, and therefore little at a time; or, even if they take it from the cow twice a day, they are much longer in getting their fill and get it the right temperature and in a more natural way. When they are fed from the pail they take it very fast and very little saliva is mixed with it to prepare it for digestion. The intervals between feedings are frequently 14 hours, and if the calf gets a large quantity of milk not at the right temperature, and swallowing it in a few moments, no wonder it has indigestion or some other trouble. The only wonder is that so many live through that are treated this way.

A better plan which Mr. Burnett suggests, and which has been tried by others with good results, is to feed the calf three times per day, giving only the same milk that would be fed in the other way, and never to overfeed. Excessive feeding after a long fast has a very injurious effect on all animals, and especially young ones, and if it does not kill them outright will weaken their digestion and do them permanent injury. Let those who have had trouble with their calves try this way of feeding three times, and take pains to have the milk at the right temperature and never overfeed. Probably many calves that die suddenly, and, as supposed, from unknown causes, are the victims of injudicious and overfeeding. The stomach becomes so distended that it cannot act, the food sours and poisonous gas is formed and the animal dies in a few hours.

Not in Politics.

I heard a very sensible thing recently from a young man who had just plucked the political bee from his bonnet. "What are you going to run for this spring?" I asked. (He has been a standing candidate for some position or other for several seasons past.) "I am not a candidate for anything," he said, "and I don't want you to get me mixed up in politics any more. If you ever catch me running again before I'm 50, I want you to proclaim me a swindler. No, sir; I've been there and I've been burned. It's only one man in a hundred that succeeds in politics. The other ninety-nine, if they stick to the business, will wind up in the poor-house; or, what is equally bad, as stool-pigeons in a gin-mill. I speak from an experience of three years, and know I've just stopped on the brink of a precipice. I'm going to attend to business for the rest of my life—at least till I'm 50—and then, if an admiring nation wants to make me a justice of the peace, I'm willing. But no high aspirations, O, no!" Ninety-nine out of every hundred of the young men who make a business of politics ought to cut this out and swear by it. It is applicable to the horde of office-seeking youth who come from all sections of the state when the legislature convenes, as well as to many who are afflicted with the political mania in Trenton.—Trenton, N. J. Times.

Sound Doctrine.

From the Toledo Blade.

Every physician and every scientist who has made a study of the physical and mental organization of man will tell him that no man can violate any of the laws of nature without taking from himself something which he can never get back. This is true of the physical, mental and moral man. No matter what a man's religious belief many be, there are certain rules of morals which, if he violates, he pays the penalty for, and no matter what his ideas of physical life may be there are rules governing just as inflexible, the violation of which brings a penalty just as certain. The indomitable ambition and the wonderful will of Napoleon impelled him to labor when he should have slept, and he died young. An unusually strong constitution may enable a man to eat or drink too much for years, but he pays the penalty in a shortened life and a premature old age. A man may drink so much beer a day and live to be 100—without it he would have lived to be 150.

"What Shall We Name It?" is the title of a new dictionary giving the meaning and history of two thousand names for children.

CAPEL IN GOOD HUMOR.

Not Acquainted with "Billy" Florence—Theatres—Politics.

"Now, what do you want of me sir?" was the salutation of Monsignor Capel, his eyes twinkling under his bushy brows, as he greeted a N.Y. Tribune reporter who called at John Mack's house, No. 365 Fifth-ave. The reporter replied that he wished to make a few inquiries about the Monsignor's trip through the west, from which he had just returned.

"You shall not ask me any questions," said the prelate, talking so rapidly that a stenographer would have fled from him in dismay," but I wish to correct a few stories that are floating around in the newspapers. One is that I met 'Billy'—'Bil'—'B'"—

"Florence?"

"Yes, 'Billy' Florence, and that he offered to take me to the theatre. Now I have not yet the honor of 'Billy' Florence's acquaintance, and I have not been to a theatre in four and twenty years. The fact is, I was dining in a hotel at St. Paul, not Chicago, and there was an English company of singers there. One of them came over and spoke to me, saying that they were disputing as to whether I was Capel or not and it ended by their offering me a box at the theater that night. I refused on account of my habit, as I have stated. Now, I did not say the devil was preached at the theatre. I hold that every man and woman must settle for themselves whether the theatre does them harm or good, because it acts differently with different people. I believe that the theatre can be made an immense power for good. Such it was in the days of the old miracle plays and in such instances as the passion play at Oberam Mergan."

"How about Shakespeare's plays?"

"Oh, I believe in producing good plays, classic works, anything that disseminates good literature and upholds good morals. I do not go to the theatre but I read the criticisms of the plays in order to find out what strikes the popular heart. The stage holds the mirror up to human nature now as much as in days gone by, and if a play does not please people it fails. So I keep track of what the age demands in the drama.

"Now, there's that other story that I have declared my preferences for one of the Presidential candidates. My dear sir, it is not so. I have taken no sides in the contest, though I have learned the difference between Republicans and Democrats. The former are 'ins' and the other 'outs.' I am a guest in this country. It would be extremely inappropriate for me to express any views on your political matter here, and, moreover, I do not meddle in politics at home, unless when some question of morals or education comes up. I never tell any man how to vote and my own parishioners do not know how I vote at home. I cast my individual ballot independently, as every one should."

The Woman Farmer.

"Yes, my husband has been dead fifteen years," said an old lady to a Boston Globe correspondent, "and I have run the farm ever since myself, and, in fact, I have had the whole care of it for twenty-one years, for within a year of our marriage my husband had a stroke of paralysis that left one side entirely useless, and it is over a score of years since we moved here."

It was an old lady in Kennebec county, Maine, who made the above statement, and she seemed to see nothing remarkable about the fact that she, entirely unaided, should be running a farm of sixty acres, in spite of her threescore years and ten.

"Do you do the work yourself?"

"Yes, almost all," she replied. "I never hire by the month, but in the busiest season I hire a man to help by the day in haying and such work."

"Do you take care of your stock yourself?"

"Oh, yes; but I have not as much stock as I had formerly, having sold many, including as fine a stock bull as they had in the country."

"Do you take the daily papers?"

"No, I can find all the lies I want to in the ordinary story and religious papers without pestering my head with fresh ones made up every day."

"Are you not lonely in the winter?" asked the reporter. "I notice your house is off the main road, and you must find it hard getting down to the village."

"Yes, you are right there," responded the old but energetic lady. "Sometimes I can't get out for five or six weeks unless my neighbors take the trouble to come and shovel me out, but I don't mind much, and manage to get through all right. Howsomever, I don't see anything much about this; but there is a funny idea about you newspaper fellers, and people seem to take anything they see in print for gospel. For instance, I knew two neighbors was always fighting about the way to cultivate a field, and then both declared the other was a fool. Finally one got his notions printed in a farming paper, and the other feller saw the piece, and not knowing whose ideas they were he thought he had learned something and went home and followed the advice of the man he had called a fool, just because he saw it in print. Don't you want to come to see the farm? It don't amount to anything, though," she added.

The writer walked out to the door, and the first thing that attracted his attention was a tombstone in front of the piazza. He was about to ask if it was erected in this certainly unusual spot at the particular request of some near and dear relative, when he noticed that a ring was passed through the top of the marble stone and that it served the purpose of an ordinary hitching post. Therefore he forebore lest he should touch on a forbidden topic, and even the broadest hints did not elict any information on the subject of the sepulchral horse fastener. Everything about the farm, to use a localism, was in apple-pie order, just as one might find the farm of an old farmer with able-bodied sons to help him.

At a recent funeral of a deceased free thinker of South Beach, Conn., the church was brilliantly illuminated, a scientific poem was read and the services were conducted without a prayer or the mention of a supreme being.

NO TEARS.

"No tears to weep!" And wherefore not?
Say is thy sorrow such?
And has thy heart no tender spot
That sympathy may touch?
Can no kind word unlock the springs,
And give thy tears their flow?
Are human woes such selfish things
That none their depths may know?

"No tears to weep!" Nay, speak not thus,
For tears can bring relief,
And God has sent them unto us
To wash away our grief.
When earthly sorrow, pain and care
Our souls in sadness steep,
We pray to him who heareth prayer
To send us tears to weep.

'Tis true the world is sometimes dark
With gloomy clouds that rise,
And trembling Hope, with waning spark,
Fades faintly out—and dies!
But when some heavenly vision fair
Steals o'er us in our sleep,
We wake with joy to feel that there—
There are no tears to weep.

JIM'S WIFE.

I never saw his face, nor hers. But I sometimes saw his hands, long and thin and white, with that pallor peculiar to plants grown in the dark and human beings shut out from light and air.

It was midsummer, and the broad street, that ran down the open plaza around which Comanche is built, was white with dust, and already reflected back the hot glow of a scorching sun, although it was yet early when I drew back the curtain that draped my little window and looked out, on the morning after my arrival. The heavy shadows of an immense live-oak cooled all the front of the low, irregularly-built log-house into which I had come as a summer guest, but the big, square county jail, nearly opposite, stood naked and bare to the light, absorbing the heat into its solid white stone walls and casting it out again in quivering rays that thrilled all the breathless air.

Everything was still just at that moment; she herself was so motionless standing there in the middle of the street with the child lifted in her arms, his little bare legs showing white against her rusty black dress, and his head almost hidden beneath the faded yellow sunbonnet that covered her face; the sky was of so deep and strange a blue and the shadow of the single scraggy mesquite beyond her lay so sharp and black upon the dazzling sand, that I had a curious sensation as if I were looking into a picture. But only for a moment. A clattering group of horsemen, booted and spurred, rode past; she moved a step or two out of their way, stooped and placed the child upon the ground, then stood erect and lifted her face again toward the dark, narrow upper window of the jail. And I, too, looking up, saw for the first time those long, pallid hands folded about the rusty iron bars!

I dropped the curtain and turned—to be smothered in morning kisses, as the children, glowing, rosy, bright, came trooping in from their early breakfast.

Toward noon of the same day I stepped out upon the vine-hung gallery. A glad life-giving wind was blowing down from the great purple flat-topped mountains, just over beyond the bright sweep of open prairie set about the open town, and the mesquite groves up on the hillside were tossing their feathery branches in it joyously. The wonderful lapis-lazuli blue sky was flecked with white masses of slow-moving clouds; one of these laid half the village square in shade, in the midst of which I could see the town well, with its broad stone curbing, and the knot of men and boys grouped about it, their hats off and foreheads bared to the wind. A cow-boy in picturesque costume came riding across the sun-lit half of the plaza, and his gay laugh floated on to me as he answered a mellow hallow from far off in the distance. It was a pretty scene, and I stood reaching for the flower that swung above my head, and letting my gaze wander in delight from purple mountains to golden valley and back again, until it fell suddenly upon a black spot in the street close by, and I realized with a shock that she was still there. The child lay at her feet, apparently asleep, a little white heap in the dust; the hands had disappeared from the window-bars above, but just where I had seen her first she stood, straight, slender, silent, motionless. The flower fell from my hand and the heart seemed all at once to go out of me.

She was always there. When I lifted my curtain in the wee gray of early morning, I found her there, or I saw her trudging down the sandy road, with the child in her arms, toward her dreary post.

Day after day the pitiless August sun beat down upon her as she kept her station before that gloomy facade. Sometimes, but not often, she sat down prone in the dust, but always in the same spot—the spot whence she best could see those clinging hands. People went up and down the street; the tide of labor back and forth; men rode in to the various courts and rode out again; wagons creaked by, covered with white canvas, from beneath which the curious eyes of sallow women and shock-headed children peered down at her. But none of these things seemed to enter into her consciousness; she looked neither to right nor left, and the weeks wearing away found her with face still turned upward to the narrow window, patient, quiet, fixed, the child always beside her, mute and motionless as herself. Sometimes a second pair of hands grasped the bars. "That's Jim's younger brother," they told me. "It's nigh about six years sence they dropped ther man and 'twan't cool-blooded murder neither. They've trailed about God knows how and He only knows when, keepin' out'n the Sheriff's way, and wherever they've went she's went too, and sence they've been here she comes in every little while and stays round like this yer. Jim's her husband, you know." Ah, as if I didn't know!

My heart ached for her and I used to long, yet dread, to see her face. But I never did, though once she removed the faded sunbonnet as she passed me in the dim twilight, going down to the camp in the edge of the thicket, where she and the child slept at night under the dark sky with its solemn star. But it was so late that I could see only a lonely pallor and sunken eyes that seemed not to see.

One morning, at last I saw her climb into a rickety open buggy, drawn by the meagre gray horse that had been staked near her camp. I saw her settle the child in her lap, grasp the reins and drive slowly up the long hill that leads out of town. At the top of it she paused and stood up in the buggy looking back. Her slender form was sharply defined against the early morning sky for a moment—I can see it yet! Then she sank back in her seat and presently she had passed out of sight.

II.

The mountains that had been wrapped in purple mists when they had sent their sweet fresh breezes into the heart of the midsummer, stood up blue and clean against the cold, gray sky of November. All day long a norther had been roaring down from them, twisting the bare, thorny branches of the mesquite thickets, creaking the limbs of the great, isolated, olive-colored live-oaks; whistling through the dry grass of the little prairie, striking like a solid thing upon the shivering sides of the shelterless, gaunt, long-horned cattle, and sweeping with a moan into the streets of the town. The little town itself, all the warmth and color blown out of it, looked deserted, for it was Sunday, and every man was housed with his own in the glow of his hearth fire.

As night fell the wind grew keener, with a suggestion of sleet upon it. The old stage lumbered in, arousing the dogs as it passed; but presently these dropped into stillness again. The lights behind the windows began early to disappear, and one by one went out, except in a house far down the hollow, where the divine hour of a woman was approaching—there only twinkled all night the feeble rays of a lamp.

There, in the square stone jail where the guards watched and dozed alternately in the hall below, and in the cells above the prisoners shivered on their scanty pallets.

Down the long hill, close upon midnight, into the midst of this stillness and gloom, rode two score and more of men. Grim, silent, and pitiless, with faces veiled and belts bristling with weapons, they came like phantoms from some unknown Dark.

The heavy thud of a ponderous beam upon the door of the jail! The guards within start to their feet. The prisoners grasp each other in a hush of expectation into which creeps the hope of deliverance. Again and again the dull sound mingles with the ever-increasing roar of the wind and the crash of splintering wood and a rush like that of doom, silent and mighty, up the narrow stairway, with the white and sticken guards driven on before. Deliverance? The solid key groans in the lock, the smoky lamp throws a ghastly glare into the cold cell. * * And presently emerges into the freezing night air a long, double file of men whose faces are hidden but whose clenched hands betray too well a lack of mercy; and in the midst thereof walked two bare-footed, half-naked, shivering creatures, with the ropes already knotted about their necks.

And so silently hurries this ghostly procession up the wind-swept hill and across the barren heath, that not even the watch-dogs are aroused from their slumbers. One old hunter, indeed, lifts his head from his pillow with the instinct of danger upon him; rises upon his elbow and listens to the soughing of the wind, while the glow of the dying fire reddens the barrel of the rifle swung above his door, laughs contentedly as he hears nothing else and dropped back into dreamland.

Behind, the jail-doors are left wide open, but the other prisoners, frozen with horror, cowed back into their cells and pray.

And out yonder the work is finished; finished remorselessly and in silence. One of the victims indeed, begs for the life of his young brother, and the other prays that he may be shot. But that is all. But white and cold already, before death has had time to freeze the blood in their veins, they are left swinging to and fro in the frantic gusts of wind, while those veiled phantoms of the night, mount their horses and ride swiftly back into the unknown dark from whence they came.

The little town sleeps peacefully on, and midnight has not yet sounded.

It is still the Lord His Day.

III.

Ah, but over yonder, more than fifty miles away, that Sunday morning, a slender little womanh ad climed into an old rickety, open buggy. I have told you that I never saw her face, but I make no doubt that at that moment her face beneath the faded sunbonnet was beautiful; a lovely light as of first youth and first love, played over the lonely palor of her cheeks; her sunken eyes shone and a bonny smile parted her lips as she leaned forward and gathered up the reins and started the bony, slow-moving horse on the long and wearisome journey. For "the boy's" bond had been signed. To-morrow they would be set free—for a time at least—and a respite meant everything. No need now to look beyond the overwhelming gladness of the one thought that to-morrow they—he—would be free, and she would be there to receive them once more into light and air and life!

Fifty miles, why, that is nothing!

Across long and lonely reaches of "rough," where the old horse ploughs his way painfully through the heavy sand, stumbling every now and then upon the shin-oak roots that twisted their loose, ugly knots over the road; through bits of brown, dreary prairie, where the uncertain wheels creak over great clods of black earth, lumped by the cold into solid masses as hard as a rock; down the ravines deep washed-out, where shadows lie heavily and where wild things, with eyes that shine, creep stealthily from crevice to crevice; over soggy, bottom-lands, strewn with wrecks of over-loaded freighters, where the crows caw in the big cotton-woods and discuss angrily the pale passer-by.

Fifty miles, why, that is nothing.

It is cold and the wind stings her face like so many needles; her bare hands are blue and stiff and her feet are numb. But do you think she feels on her forehead the frozen air which presently melts into a blinding rain, as she sits far forward on the seat and urges the old horse along.

A mule-rabbit, with long, pointed ears and glittering coat of fur, gathers himself up at the side of the road, prepared to speed away, but aware of no unseeing eye, settles himself comfortably in his bed of dry grass and stares out at her; a couple of deer, tawny and sleek, lying in the shelter of the hollow, lift their heads and drop them again as she goes by. The few horsemen she meets pass her without the customary salutation, awed into silence by the remoteness of her gaze; yet turn to look afterward, remembering the joyous smile upon her lips.

And night falls and those awful phantoms are somewhere veiling their faces!

The next day is well worn when she crosses the low flat and ascends the hill at the foot of which nestles the town. It is still cold, but the clouds have broken and a sudden flood of light bathes the valley, and turns the windows to coppery gold. A bird somewhere in the distance, as the jaded old horse breaks into a stumbling trot, throws out upon the frosty air a succession of joyous notes that are caught up and answered by another still further off. She pushes back her bonnet and draws a long, restful-breath. Ah, there is the big stone school-house and the snug little cottages on either side of the street; and there is the low log-house so full last summer of merry laughter and music and light—why, what a crowd about the jail-door! Oh, yes, they are there to welcome the boys; why, of course, and how kind! Only she longed to be the first to meet him.

The old horse slackens his pace and creeps on; she leans out eagerly, letting the lines fall, and clasping her hands, while the color comes and goes on her pale cheeks. She does not see them! But then her eyes are dimmed no doubt by the wind and rain and cold. Stand aside there gentlemen! She has come to meet them; do you not understand?

She is lifted gently down and her faltering steps are supported as she moves blindly forward. The pitying crowd parts; two or three men rise hurriedly from beside the things that lie white and stark and rigid upon the ground.

Well? Well, the meeting is over.—M. M. Davis, in the Current.

A Fashionable Wedding.

Here is an item with a few figures in it which may be of interest to our girl-readers. The cost of a fashionable wedding is given in detail in one of the so-called New York society journals "for the benefit of such young ladies as may desire to be married in good form this winter." This society journal says that the cost given is not that which would make the display that would be expected from a leader of fashion; "only a pretty, genteel affair, proper to any middle-class family!"

In this list, the trousseau, including furs, ball-dresses, and other equally necessary articles, is set down at two thousand five hundred dollars; refreshments for five hundred people will cost at least another thousand dollars; the use of the church, carriages, policemen and detectives to watch the presents, two hundred dollars more; cigars and champagne, three hudred; floral decorations, from one hundred to a thousand dollars. After the bridesmaids' dresses and other items are added, the father of the bride may congratulate himself if five thousand dollars can be made to cover the cost of this, "only a pretty, genteel, affair, proper to any middle-class family!"

The expenses of the bridegroom, including pins for the ushers, a farewell bachelor dinner, a boquet for the bride at one hundred dollars, and a wedding journey, mount easily up to two thousand dollars.

This estimate is not for the millionaire, who wishes to rid himself of his superfluous cash, but for the "middle-class" man of moderate income, whose daughter, in all probability, carries no dower into her new home, or rather her new rooms in a stylish, gossiping boarding-house, or her suite of apartments in a French "flat."

A recent traveler in Brittany gives an account of the wedding of a farmer's daughter which he saw. It took place on a summer morning in the church. The children of the village scattered flowers in the way of the pretty bride, as she walked with her husband at the head of the procession to her father's house, where her friends and neighbors partook of a simple, plentiful meal.

Then, in procession again, they escorted her to her new home, which with shining windows and open door waited for her, and left her there. "A Breton girl," he adds, "would feel disgraced if she had not saved or earned plenty of plenishing and a substantial dower, which with her love should bring comfort and ease unto her husband's house."

"Look upon this picture and on that!" girls, and say honestly, in which is there the most promise of happiness?—Youth's Companion.

Discoursing upon the fact that at the close of the year 1854 wheat was selling lower in the markets of the world than ever before in the history of modern commerce, the Philadelphia Inquirer says: Wheat has been a standard of value, a measure of price ever since the human race has progressed far enough to barter one commodity for another. When wheat goes down, all other staples go down with it, except when there are influences at work in special cases counteracting the general tendency. As will be seen by comparisons of prices all the leading articles of agricultural, mining and manufacturing production have declined coincidently with the decline in breadstuffs; some more and some less, of course, but all to an entent more equivalent to the average range of profit. According to the census of 1880 we had at that period a product of 459,479,509 bushels of wheat. The average range for No. 2 red winter, at Chicago, about the close of that year was not far from one dollar per bushel. At this rate the product was worth $459,479,505. The crop of this year is not yet fully determined, but in recent calculations it has been estimated at 5400,00,000 bushels. The Chicago quotation for No. 2 red was about 70 cents. At 70 cents this year's product is worth $378,000,000. That is to say, 80,000,000 bushels more grain is valued at nearly $81,500,000 less money. Similar comparisons can be made with all the agricultural staples, with corn, oats, rye, cotton, tobacco and hay. Also with iron and with most manufactured goods. Now, that wheat is worth seventy cents, money goes begging at three per cent. or lower. The financial philosophers are out in their calculations on this point, and, indeed, have failed altogether to compass the causes of the pesent phenomenal depreciation of values.

THE YEAR'S CONSOLATIONS.

From the New York Sun.

When January's cold is here,
And all the days are chill and drear;
When air and earth are thick with snow,
Leaden above, and white below;
Then let us, as we face the blast,
Give thanks for blessings in the past,
And lovingly remember
Dear days of sweet September.

When February's sleet and hail
Cause men to shiver and to quail;
When on the ice and through the snow,
Slipping and stumbling mortals go;
Then, as we grumble and complain,
Let us, to soothe the biting pain
Of days so dull and sober,
Remember bright October.

When March is February's heir,
And snow and slush are everywhere;
When fierce winds hustle us about,
Putting our hopes of spring to rout;
Then let us sweeten every day
With thoughts of blessings passed away,
And thankfully remember
That golden, fair November.

When April, foster child of March,
Sullen instead of gay and arch,
And giving frowns in place of smiles,
On agony fresh sorrow piles,
Prolonging winter's gloomy reign;
Then let us, as we bear the pain,
Look backward, and remember
Bright days of mild December.

MY FRIEND'S WIFE.

BY FLORENCE REVERE PENDAR.

"It is no use, Tom, I can not rid myself of the feeling. It tortures me at times beyond endurance. Perhaps I am jealous, as you say. But you shall judge for yourself. Come with us to the theater to-night, and if you can give me your word of honor that you notice nothing unusual in this infatuation of my wife for Claude Devine, I will try to believe that it is merely because he is the rage—that she, too, is anxious to add her plaudits to those of his many admirers."

"My dear fellow," I here interposed, "I think you are working yourself into a fever for a mere chimera of the brain. Your wife is the last lady I should judge capable of conceiving an illicit passion for any man. And I have heard that this rising star—Claude Devine is not given to kneeling at the feminine shrine; in fact, that he is vastly bored by all the adoration he is the recipient of from his numerous lady satellites."

"God forbid!" exclaimed my friend, "that I should suspect my wife of anything beyond great admiration for the actor; but she is young and he is undeniably handsome and fascinating, I dare say, in the eyes of women, while I am considerably her elder, and was never celebrated for a superabundance of beauty."

"How is it," I asked, "that you engaged a box for to-night? It would have been easy enough for you to have made some excuse."

"Why is it," he answered, "that the moth flutters around the candle? To tell the truth, it is not easy for me to refuse her anything. I never did but once, and I have never forgotten the strange startled look that then shone in her eyes. It was a small matter, too. You know the dislike I have always entertained toward private theatricals. I have no objection to visiting a theatre and making one of the audience; but I protest against being mixed up with anything of the kind. Laura and I had been engaged about a week, I think, when the ladies of the house where my betrothed and her aunt boarded took it into their heads to get up one of these amateur affairs, and were for inveigling Laura into their plans. Miss Spruce, Laura's aunt, smilingly acquiesed. She had never had the heart, she informed me, to refuse her niece anything from the time her dying sister had left the child in her charge. When Laura mentioned to me about taking part in these theatricals it happened that I had been considerably riled a moment before by overhearing one of our boarders, a brainless idiot, dilating to a ditto companion upon the charms of my intended, who was to figure as 'Juliet' to his 'Romeo,' in tableau, he averred; consequently I was not in a very pleasant frame of mind to converse with upon the subject, and answered, somewhat hotly:

"'If you have any respect for me Laura, you will keep out of such exhibitions.'

"'Why, Philip! what harm is there in them?' was her surprised question.

"'Harm!' I repeated hastily, 'I had rather see anyone belonging to me dead than connected in any way with theatricals.'

"She turned so white at my words that I thought she was about to faint, but she said quietly:

"'Very, well, Philip, it shall be as you wish.'

"It was a week or so though before she seemed to be quite herself. Since then not a cloud has ever come to mar our happiness until——Would to God! I could stifle these vague fears."

The door opened, and as sweet a vision as I would e'en feast my eyes upon, paused upon the threshold. Clothed in something white, soft and filmy, that seemed to float in graceful folds about her slender figure. Crimson roses blushing upon her breast, and nestling coquettishly in the shining braids of her dark hair, the vivid scarlet of her lips outrivaling the flower's hue—Mrs. Philip Stanton made a picture that an artist would have reveled in. A smile lit up the dusky depths of her beautiful eyes as crossing the room she bade me welcome, then as her small fingers toyed with the silver fringe of her opera cloak, she addressed her husband with:

"Had we better not be going, Philip? Of course Mr. Harley will accompany us," this with a glance at myself, followed by, "I shall pleased to have you—I do so dislike being late—on his benefit night, too."

Philip had already left the room to don his overcoat, so did not catch his wife's last words, which produced a rather unpleasant effect upon me. She, however, appeared unconscious of this mistake of words, for such I was convinced it was.

We arrived at the theater just as the curtain rose on the first act, but it was not until near the close of the scene that the star appeared. At his entrance a delicate color crept into Mrs. Stanton's cheeks, and her eyes fairly sparkled with excitement as she leaned eagerly forward, apparently forgetful of everything but the actor, who stood, unable to proceed with his lines, owing to the deafening applause that greeted him.

Phillip, growing ghastly as he noted the rapt attention of his wife, shrunk back out of sight behind the curtains of our box. At the end of the second act there were loud calls for the star, and as he stood gracefully bowing his acknowledgements his gaze for an instant was directed straight toward our box, and I could have sworn a look of recognition passed between him and Mrs. Stanton. The next moment the curtain had shut the actor from view. The exquisite bloom of Mrs. Stanton's cheek had deepened, and I was decidedly puzzled by the proud, happy light that shone in her eyes, as, turning to us, she said:

"Oh! Isn't he grand? I——" The rest of the sentence died upon her lips as she caught sight of her husband's white face, and a little nervously she added: "What is the matter? Are you ill, Philip? Shall we go home?"

With a forced laugh he replied:

"Matter! Why, what should be? This place is confoundedly hot. I think I'll step out a bit. If I'm not back when the theater's out, Tom, I know, won't mind seeing you home;" and, without waiting for the words that trembled on his wife's lips, he left us.

More than one tear drop glistened on Mrs. Stanton's dark lashes as she said:

"I don't think Philip is looking well, do you, Mr. Harley? I have noticed that he has not been himself for the last week."

I murmured something about "I guessed he was all right—a little upset by the extreme heat, perhaps." My words seemed to relieve her, for, with a smile like a glint of sunshine amid an April shower, she once more turned her attention to the stage, and the thought crossed my mind if there be guile there, surely it was ne'er onclosed in so innocent a form before.

As we elbowed our way through the crowd after the performance, Mrs. Stanton suddenly remarked:

"Would you do me a favor, Mr. Harley? I—I should so like to speak to Mr. Devine a moment, if you don't object going with me to the stage door;" adding hurriedly, "I won,t detain you a second."

My face must have expressed my excessive surprise, for, without waiting for me to reply, she continued with:

"You think my request strange; but Mr. Devine is a—an old friend, and I thought—you see it would be almost unkind not to let him know how pleased I am at his success."

"Yes," I answered vaguely, wishing Philip had not been so ready to trust his wife to my care. Then aloud, I said: Don't you think Philip will be uneasy at your prolonged absence? Would it not be more advisable to call with your husband upon your—your friend in the morning?"

"My husband! Oh, no. He dislikes actors; that is he does not care to associate with them, and Claude (another slip of the tongue) leaves early to-morrow morning for Liverpool."

So I think she is posted as to this star's movements.

"O! woman, woman!" I mentally ejaculated, "thank heaven I have so far escaped your allurements."

With an inward anathema at the predicament I found myself in, I offered the lady my arm, and we proceeded, without a word on either side, toward the stage entrance. To my astonishment the stage doorkeeper was evidently acquainted with Mrs. Stanton, for he saluted her with:

"Well, now, that's right. Come in and sit down," waving his hand toward a chair of the sit-on-me-if-you-can style, adding, with a confidential air, "Mr. Claude will be out in a minute."

True to the doorkeeper's words, the star almost immediately came hurrying toward us, although I doubt if he noticed me, for with a pleased exclamation, he coolly took my friend's wife in his arms and kissed her most affectionately. And I was actually aiding and abetting this clandestine meeting.

"It does me good, it does, to see how fond them two be of one another," observed the old doorkeeper to me, as he indicated with a backward movement of his thumb the young actor and my friend's wife.

"Oh!—it does?" I answered, sarcastically, feeling as if I should like to punch the old fellow's head, as he, quite unconscious of my sarcasm and malicious desire, continued with:

"You see, I know 'em when they weren't no higher than the table. Mr. Claude takes after his father, who was an uncommon good actor. It's a pity she's married to such a straight-laced chap. Now, I believe in letting a woman have her own way, 'cause if you don't she'll take it anyhow. Beside you can't go agin nature. It isn't to be expected as she'd give up Mr. Claude, even if her husband is kinder set agin him."

I began to think I must be taking leave of my senses. My friend's wife being made love to under my very eyes, while I listened to an account of said friend's unreasonableness in objecting to such a proceeding.

Two seconds afterward I was shaking hands with the star, feeling as if a bombshell had been suddenly lifted from off my heart. The modus operandi that led to this lightning result had its birth in two words used by Mrs. Stanton in making the actor and myself known to each other. Proudly leaning upon his arm, she had advanced toward me, saying:

"My brother, Mr. Harley."

My face, I expect, betrayed me, for, apparently taking in the situation, Claude Devine said:

"It is very distasteful to me to be obliged to meet my sister in this clandestine fashion, but unfortunately Mr. Stanton has a prejudice against actors, and Laura fearing that she might lose his love if he became aware of her relationship to one, exacted a promise from me that I would never make known my kinship with her until she had paved the way thereto. My stage name of course effectually prevented recognition in that quarter."

"Oh, but I am afraid it is as far off as ever," here spoke Mrs. Stanton the tears glistening in her pretty eyes.

"As far off, not a bit of it!" I managed to exclaim. "You don't know what a relief it will be to Philip to know the truth. I wouldn't be afraid to wager that he'll be willing to accept half the profession as kinsmen in gratitude for the revelation of to-night. Just give me fifteen minutes start and I promise you a hearty welcome from your brother-in-law, Mr. Claude," and before they could stop me if they had so wished I was off.

Dashing into my friend's suite of apartments, I saluted him with:

"Look here, Philip, we have been a couple of confounded jackasses." Having thus sufficiently startled him into wondering whether I was exactly sane or not, I proceed to point out wherein our jackassedness lay. I must have acquitted myself to his entire satisfaction, for my concluding words brought forth the exclamation:

"Good Heavens! Tom, what a fool I have been."

"My opinion precisely," I answered, holding up a warning finger to two approaching figures just crossing the threshold as he continued with:

"What a tyrant he must believe me—my darling—my misjudged wife."

At this point my finger ceased to have any opposing force for one of the figures. Whereupon two white arms played sad havoc with my friend's moment before immaculate necktie, as a tearful voice murmured:

"Oh, Philip! I never thought you anything but the dearest and best of husbands, and I felt sure you would one day forgive my brother for being an actor—for my sake."

"And for his too, I hope," answered my friend, cordially holding out his hand to young Claude, as he added. "I have indulged a foolish prejudice, but I trust my eyes have been permanently opened."

SULLIVAN AND HIS SANDBAG.

Just How the Distinguished John Lycurgus Keeps His Muscle Up.

From the Boston Herald.

One feature of the daily devotions of the world's pugilistic champion is at present religiously performed at "The Abbey," on Harrison avenue, near Beach street, where the officiating abbot is Patsey Shepperd. In a square room of the second story, devoid of the ordinary furnishings, an oval shaped ball of leather inflated by means of a bladder which it incloses, hangs suspended from mid-ceiling attached to a cord which passes through a ring above and, running across the ceiling and down the wall, is held in a cleat, which enables the ball to be elevated or lowered at pleasure.

"Hello,——! How are you? Come up stairs. I'm going to have a little exercise," said the champion, as he reached the stoop of "The Abbey" and shook hands with the writer. After the customary "passing of the time of day" the man of peace and John L. Sullivan mounted the stairs and entered the apartment, from the ceiling of which hung the motionless ball. "This is a pretty good place. I come here once a day some times twice, and find I can get as much work in half of three-quarters of an hour as anyone who works hard would care for. I'm not very heavy—only a few pounds over 200—and I intend to get down to 195 in the next ten days."

By this time Sullivan had divested himself of his clothing, and, straightening himself out, he looked an ideal model for the artist. Covering the cap of his right knee with a silk protector, and standing without stockings in his shoes, he adjusted the leather oval to the proper height, then shielding his knuckles with glove kid, he struck the ball with his right hand and it flew upward striking the ceiling with a loud noise. Then it was noticed that the ceiling had been covered with half-inch boards in the form of a circle, which measured seven or eight feet in diameter.

"Draw your watch on me while I work," quoth the champion, and his request was complied with.

"Whack!" went a powerful fist against the oval and "crash!" went the object of attack against the circle of wood. Again and again it mounted upward and rebounded like a boomerang; yet, unlike the boomerang, was met with another and another blow, first with the dexter and then with the sinister "bunch of fives." The matched boards yielded as the ball struck them and once or twice Sullivan looked up as if to see whether he had done any damage. The ball moved in every direction and the utmost agility was required to meet it with a blow as it swung to and fro. Whack! bang! whack! bang! it went without intermission for four minutes, and the perspiration was oozing from the pores of Sullivan's neck and shoulders, while a healthy glow covered his face and body to the hips. Once only did he lose direction in striking, but the next blow was heavy enough to compensate for what was lost.

Six minutes and fifteen seconds had expired and the champion had fought the bag much harder than any one is called on to fight in a glove contest. So fast and hard had he continued the work that he supposed fourteen or fifteen minutes had elapsed. Then he took a chair, rested a minute and gave an extra four minutes to the ball, after which he ceased play, saying he would try it again in the afternoon. He was then rubbed down, took a shower bath and a "swim," and proceeded to get into his clothes.

Memento of Kossuth.

Ex-Mayor Cowan, of Lewiston, Me., has a memento of Kossuth. It is a Hungarian bond, bought in Lowell, Mas., in May, 1852, when Kossuth was in America. The bonds were largely sold as a medium of benefaction to Hungary. The bond is engraved on parchment. It is headed "Hungarian Fund" and promises that "one year after date of establishment of the Hungarian Government the holder of the bond shall be entitled to $1, payable at the national treasury or at either of the agencies in London and New York, or exchanged in sums of $50 or over for certificates bearing four per cent. interest, payable in equal installments, four years after the establishment of the government." The bonds are signed by L. Kossuth.

The next brilliant wedding in England will be that of Lady Ermyntrude Russell, daughter of the Duke of Bedford, with Sir Edward Malet, pleasantly remembered in New York and Washington society, and recently appointed Ambassador at Berlin, where, as in London, the union is looked forward to with great interest. The Duke gives his daughter the handsome dot of $750,000. The English colony in the German capital are building up great expectations as to the entertainments that will, in due course, be given at the British Embassy.

NERVOUS ORATORS.

Men Who Always Shake and Tremble Before Making a Great Speech.

Great orators are almost invariably nervous with apprehension when about to make an important speech. Luther, to his last years, trembled when he entered the pulpit; the same is true of Robert Hall. Mr. Gough confesses that he is always in a tremor when coming before an audience. Many of the leaders of the House of Commons have given similar testimony. Canning said he could always tell in advance when he was about to make one of his best speeches by a chill running through him, caused by a fear of failure. Lord Derby, father of the present Earl, when a young man, was one of the best speakers in Parliament. He was known as the "Prince Rupert of debate," and seemed so self-possessed as to be incapable of embarrassment. But he said: "When I am going to speak, my throat and lips are as dry as those of a man who is going to be hanged." He also told the late Sir A. Allison that "he never rose to speak, even in an afternoon dinner assembly without experiencing a certain degree of nervous tremor, which did not go off till he warmed to the subject."

It is recorded of Cicero that he shuddered visibly over his whole body when he first began to speak." In the "Life of Lord Lyndhurst," by Sir Theodore Martin, we are told that he did not prepare his speeches. "Though like all great orators, he never rose to speak without nervous emotion, this is no way interfered with his power of thinking as he spoke, and calling into play the fittest language to express what he thought. The intensity with which his intellect worked became contagious. He got his hearers minds within his grasp, he made them think with him, see things with the same clearness he himself saw them, and so led them insensibly up to his own conclusions." Tierney, whom Lord Macaulay calls one of the most fluent debaters ever known, said he never rose in Parliament without feeling his knees knock together. It is one of the compensations of nature that the nervous temperament which occasions the trembling is also one of the causes of oratorical success. In fact, it may almost be said that no one can be a great orator, or a really effective speaker, who does not experience the feeling.

A Lord Chancellor's Reception.

A New England governor had a way of making unexpected visits to institutions under the control of the state; and some amusing encounters, in the way of remarks about himself, etc., have been the consequence of his incognito; but we believe it has never subjected him to the inconvenient joke of being mistaken for a patient at an insane asylum. ◆

When Sir Edward was Lord Chancellor of Ireland, he paid a visit to a lunatic asylum near Dublin, somewhat by surprise, as he wished to ascertain its real condition. The only notification of his coming (which arrived a very short time before he did) was sent by some wag of his witty nation who evidently had a mind to get some fun out of it. It happened that the superintendent was absent when this notice reached the establishment, and the subordinate official received it in good faith, and acted upon it accordingly. What the notice was may be guessed from what follows.

On Sir Edward's arrival, he found himself rather unceremoniously treated and after waiting in the parlor for the return of the proprietor until his patience was exhausted, he signified his intention to go through the establishment without more delay; whereupon the attendant struck him, aghast by coolly informing him that he could not be allowed to do it by any means.

"Can't be allowed to do it! What do you mean, fellow!" asked the indignant chancellor.

"I mean just what I say, thin. You can't go, so you may as well be quiet."

"What do you mean, sir, by this insolence? Open the door, sir, and show me to my carriage. I shall report your conduct, sir, and if your master does not punish you, I shall take steps to make him and you respect my authority."

"Oh! be asy now with your authority. Keep quiet, I tell you. Divil a foot you'll stir out of this till the docthur comes back, and puts you where you want to be sadly."

"What—what is the meaning of all this? Don't you know who I am, fellow, or are you mad?"

"Faith, there's one of us mad, sure enough; an' I know you very well, if that's all that's troubling you."

"You can't know me, or you wouldn't dare to behave thus to me. I am Lord Chancellor of Ireland."

"Lord Chancellor? Well, sure you're welcome home to us,—we have three or four Lord Chancellors here already.

And the story goes that Sir Edward Sugden had to submit to the contrainte par corps,

"Patience, perforce, with wilful choler meeting," until the return of the proprietor and manager of the asylum, an hour or two later; when with some difficulty he established his identity and sanity, and was once more a free man.—John O'Connell's Recollections.

A Test of Pure Water.

Dr. Baker, of the Michigan State Board of Health, suggests the following simple tests for drinking water: Color—Fill a bottle made of colorless glass; look through the water at some black object; the water should appear perfectly colorless; a muddy or turbid appearance indicates the presence of soluble organic matter, or of solid matter in suspension. Odor—Empty out some of the water, cork up the bottle and place it for a few hours in a warm place; shake it; remove the cork, and, if the odor is in the least repulsive, the water should be rejected. By heating the water to boiling an odor is evolved that otherwise does not appear. Taste—Water fresh from a well is usually tasteless, even though it may contain a large amount of putrescible organic matter. Water for domestic use should be perfectly tasteless, even after it has been warmed. Heisch's test for sewage contamination—Fill a clean pint bottle three-fourths full of water, dissolve a teaspoonful of loaf or granulated sugar, cork the bottle and place it in a warm place for two days. If the water become cloudy or muddy it is unfit for domestic use. If it remains perfectly clear, it is probably safe to use.

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

John Taylor, the Mormon President, in a recent address, complained of the persecutions to which Mormons are subjected, and hinted that they would make another flight for safety, and to a foreign country.

Mrs. Dudley, the English woman who attempted to kill O'Donovan Rossa, is admitted to have been at a former period of unsound mind, and this will probably be her line of defense for the shooting of Rossa. Undoubtedly she is what is known here as a "crank" of the style of Guiteau, as assassins usually are.

Though the Cullom interstate commerce bill passed the Senate by a large mojority, there being only twelve votes in the negative, it is pretty certain to fail in the House, which adopted the Reagan bill by a handsome majority. A compromise is barely possible, but the impression prevails that the whole matter will go over to another session.

John Bright states that in his estimation one of the effects of the new Franchise bill will be to improve the position of English farm laborers and to cause such revision of the game law as will admit the principle that the game belongs to the farmer and not to the landlords. This will do away with a sacred privilege of the ruling class.

The secretary of the interior has recommended to congress that about seven million acres of land included in the Blackfeet, Fort Peck and Fort Belknap Indian agencies, Montana, be restored to the public domain and opened to settlement, and that the Indians be paid $75,000 annually at each agency for fifteen years. There are many other Indian reservations in the country that will be served in the same way, if not wholly taken for settlement.

After a full discussion of the Lovering Pension bill the Massachusetts Department of the Grand Army of the Republic has declared against it. The bill, as is well known is a proposition to pension every man who served in the war of the rebellion sixty days, regardless of his present condition or pecuniary standing. The vote was sufficiently decided to show that the sentiment of the men who comprise the posts in Massachusetts is hostile to the proposition after a careful consideration of its merits.

The fame of Los Angeles, the metropolis of Southern California, as a health resort, has given it a remarkable degree of prosperity. Improvements are going on in every direction, money is plenty, and the people are happy and hospitable. The population has largely increased within a few years. No severe cold is ever experienced, 28 deg. above zero being the lowest ever registered in Los Angeles, and that in only one instance. The mean average temperature of January—a representative winter month—is 52 deg., but 15 deg. lower than the mean average of July.

The Grand Army, according to its commander John S. Kountz, is growing rapidly in numbers and importance. There are now 6,000 posts, having a total membership of 275,000. Pennsylvania has a larger number than any other state. There are a million men living who fought for the Union, and it is thought that the membership of the Grand Army will reach half a million. There is a much larger number of Grand Army posts in the South than one might expect to find. All of the larger cities of the South have one or more posts. New Orleans has three.

A committee of the Pennsylvania state senate reported against a bill to punish wife-beating with the lash, to be administered in the presence of witnesses in the jail yard, at a whipping-post. The strength of the growing sentiment in favor of the whipping-post for this class of offenses was shown by the senate voting down the report, and voting to take up and consider the bill by 32 to 16. This does not necessarily insure the passage of the bill, but it indicates a growing conviction that wife-beating is not at present adequately punished, and the necessity of more ignominious and personally painful treatment than is now prescribed by the laws for such an ignominious offence.

In reply to the Senate's request for information in regard to the proposed opening up for settlement of the Oklahoma lands in the Indian Territory, ceded to the United States by Indians for the use of Indians and freedmen, Secretary Teller says that the Interior Department has always held that no person had a right to settle on those lands without the Indians' consent. The Department had never permitted leases or licenses for grazing. The area of the lands is 1,887,300 acres. It is valuable for stockraising and agriculture, the game has disappeared and there no longer remains a good reason, he says, why they should be held for the Indians to roam over. The objection that opening the lands to settlement will break our covenant with the Indians may be obviated by a new treaty with the Indians' consent. He says it is not proposed to despoil them or compel their acceptance of less than the full value of the lands surrendered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK SUMMARIZED.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Special Telegram, Feb. 6.—The Gazette will to-morrow publish letters from a large number of Iowa postmasters concerning the operation of the prohibitory law. Of 410 cities and towns heard from, including all sizes, the law is reported as enforced in 160 and in 100 there were saloons previous to July 4. In many places where the law is reported as enforced there is still drunkenness, and intoxicants in various forms are sold. In many of the towns where drinks are sold openly some of the saloons have quit, and occasionally reports show more saloons now than before the law. In some localities where the law was enforced before the election, it has been disregarded since, and the assertion is made by many of the postmasters that the St. John movement has greatly injured the cause. The law is regarded as much in the small interior towns in some counties as in the larger places, and where it is enforced by the action of the citizens' league, the saloons open up again as soon as the movement against them ceases. Drunkenness on the whole has decreased somewhat and the number of saloons reduced, though more strong drinks are used and less beer than before. In brief, it appears that the law is enforced in whole or in part where public sentiment and a majority of the voters favor it, and disregarded where those favoring license are in the majority. No Democrats are reported in favor of the law, while many Republicans oppose it. The prevailing belief as expressed by the postmasters is that the whole matter depends upon the result of the election next fall. The people are greatly agitated throughout the state, and the prohibitory law is the chief topic of discussion everywhere.

The Kansas Tragedy.

INDEPENDENCE, Kan., Feb. 6.—The coroner returned this evening from Radical City after holding an inquest on the bodies of Mrs. Canham, son and daughter, who were murdered Tuesday night. Some are inclined to suspect the elder son, who maintains he was at the time of the murder seventy-five miles away. It is generally believed that he will prove himself innocent. The mother was sleeping down stairs and was struck on the head with a hatchet, and her throat cut with a butcher knife. The son, the next victim, was asleep up stairs, and was killed with a hatchet and never moved after he was struck. The daughter, aged about twenty-five, sleeping in the next room from her brother, was aroused and got up. She made a desperate fight, receiving sixteen wounds from a knife and a hatchet, and at last started down stairs and was killed at the door. The murderer then examined a drawer in a bureau and left spots of blood on the clothing. The young lady's room is covered with blood and shows evidence of a great struggle. Excitement is high, and should the young man fail to prove his whereabouts since Monday he will be in great danger of hanging. The county will offer $500 reward and the state $500 more. Appearances indicate that the murderer secured the hatchet at the stable and the knife in the kitchen, and when through with the work washed and wiped his hands before leaving the house.

The Cœur d'Alene River.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 6.—W. A. Jones, major of engineers, after an examination of Cœur d'Alene lake and river and St. Joseph's river, reports to the war department that in his judgment congress should give $3,000 for the clearing of both rivers of snags and deepening a bar in the lake at the mouth of the Cœur d'Alene. He says:

The river has some very marked characteristics. Below the mission it is like a magnificent canal with a width varying between 100 and 150 feet, and a tolerably uniform depth of about thirty feet over the greater part of said width. Above the mission it is an ordinary mountain stream, shallow and with great velocity of current. It approaches the mission with considerable velocity and passes suddenly into the deep water portion with a sudden and almost total loss of velocity. There are now three steamers on these waters, one a large, fine one, and more will soon be built. A considerable shipment of gold is now made, and as the forests about the headwaters of the St. Joseph's river are very extensive and rich in magnificent specimens of red and white pine, cedar, red and white fir and tamerack, there will be a rapid development of this navigation in the near future.

He Lived in Fine Style.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 6.—The officers of the Provident Life and Trust company state that the speculations of their defaulting clerk, Glenmore Todd, of Burlington, N. J., arrested and held to bail in $10,000, will not reach as high a figure as $150,000 and may be considerably less. Todd was a leading society man of Burlington. He belonged to the Presbyterian church and was a very liberal and active member of the Young Men's Christian association. He lived in a beautiful cottage. He belonged to almost every society, had fine horses and carriages and lived in grand style. When arrested he had just drawn $1,250 from a Burlington bank, preparatory to a trip to Florida. Todd lived with his mother and aunt.

The Specter of a Special Session.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 6.—It is by no means settled yet that there will not be a special session of congress, although there can be no doubt that the Democratic leaders regard with disfavor the idea of having one. The simple truth is, that Mr. Randall and some of his Democratic associates are more concerned about the formation of Mr. Cleveland's cabinet than they are about perfecting the appropriation bills and getting through the legislation required to avert an extra session. Some of the largest and most important appropriation bills are yet to be considered by the house, and it is becoming evident that the senate will have to accept some of the measures involving many millions of dollars without having an opportunity to properly consider and discuss them if they are to become laws this session. But twenty-two legislative days remain, and it will require constant hard work to secure the passage of all the appropriation bills within that time.

The Case of Jerome Collins.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 6.—Mr. Buchanan of Georgia, who is chairman of the subcommittee appointed by the house committee on naval affairs to take charge of and report on the testimony taken last winter in the investigation set on foot by Dr. Collins of Minneapolis in the matter of the Jeannette retreat, said to-day that the report had been completed and sumitted to the committee on naval affairs, but not acted upon. He would not say anything about the verdict of the committee, and the matter has been kept so quiet that nothing can be learned elsewhere. The report is not a long one. It will be voted on probably next Tuesday.

London Cable: It is stated that James G. Cunningham, the suspected Tower dynamiter, has broken down in consequence of having been additionally identified as one of the men concerned in the underground railway explosions. Inspector Frederick Jarvis, of the Whitehall police, who has charge of the case, now believes that Cunningham will turn informer and that his revelations will lead to the largest haul of dynamiters that has ever been made.

In the Morrow court martial, but two witnesses were examined, and their testimony confirmed the statement made for Col. Morrow by his counsel, Ex-Gov. Boutwell. The latter submitted the case to the court with a brief argument, contending that Col. Morrow had acted in good faith in the whole matter, although he may have committed some errors which he now regrets. The judge advocate made no argument and the court took the matter under consideration.

From the La Crosse Chronicle: White Beaver will remove to St. Paul on the 1st of May next. "Doctor Frank" has endeared himself to our citizens by his social qualities as well as by his professional skill, and La Crosse will sincerely regret his loss. No man has done more to advertise this city during the past few years than he. St. Paul gains what we lose—a thorough physician and surgeon, a kindly, energetic, honorable man, one of the warmest of personal friends, and an enemy to be avoided.

It is said upon the authority of one of the counsel for Gen. Swaim that the findings of the court in his case are in substance as follows: As to the first charge, that of conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman not guilty. On the second charge of conduct predjudicial to good order and dicipline in failing to report to the secretary of war his knowledge of the alleged duplication of Col. Morrow's pay accounts, guilty, with the recommendation that Gen. Swaim be temporarily suspended on half-pay. No information is as yet obtainable at the war department as to the findings of the court.

DEATH OF S. S. MERRILL.

He Breathed His Last on Sunday Morning—Characteristics of a Man Who Rose from Brakeman to General Manager.

Sherburne S. Merrill died in Milwaukee at 12.20 last Sunday morning, aged sixty-seven years. He suffered a third paralytic stroke last Tuesday, and his death since that time has been almost hourly expected.

To the thirty thousand or more, employes of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway company, General Manager Merrill was commonly known as "The Old Man." The sobriquet was an indication of the character of the great manager, not of his age; for the appellation originated in a general and remarkable regard, which the term itself indicates was filial in its character. Probably no commander of troops ever wielded an equal army of men so thoroughly loyal to a single individual. In proof of this, it may be noted that strikes have been entirely unknown to the experience of the railway company which Mr. Merrill has developed from insignificant beginnings into the greatest corporation of its kind on the continent. Only those who have had personal acquaintance or often contact with Mr. Merrill can fully comprehend the degree of power which he could exercise over other men, or bodies of men, at his will. The faculty was not based upon diplomacy, for few men were more candid in any sort of negotiations; it was not the result of oratory or manners, for he was careless of speech, and abrupt at all times; it did not come from studied effort, for conscious strength of will and mind were inborn in the man. It was due wholly to his always evident determination, as indicated in the straightforward-looking gray eye, the firmly drawn lips and erect posture—he was built in straight lines—to be just to himself as well as others. Strength of purpose was always noticeable in every line of face, glance of eye and gesture of person, no matter how trivial the business at hand might be. He lacked grace or dignity, but made up for it tenfold by force of dignity. These were elements which compelled respect, but they do not wholly account for the veneration in which he was held by all of his subordinates. Back of all his mind and will power was a natural adaptibility, so to speak, to persons. In his presence the newest brakeman on the line would be relieved of all embarrassment—even if "the old man" was venting his rage at some dereliction of duty—for there was always a subtle something in the great manager's manner which seemed to say, "Stand on your own responsibility and be a man, is all I ask of you!" In other words, without the slightest tendency to familiarity, he naturally treated every man in his employ as though he considered him as good as a king if he was good enough to occupy a place or position with him. He elevated his men to his own level—for the time being, at least—instead of descending to theirs; and it made him the idol he was. Mr. Merrill's has long been noted, has been striven for by other large employers, but has not been achieved. And it is equally well known that he has never been compelled to grant specified conditions when trouble has threatened. During the great railway strikes of a few years ago Mr. Merrill's management was put to the test. Early one August morning four or five hundred men marched out of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul shops in Milwaukee, gathered at their guild hall on Wisconsin street, held a secret meeting and resolved to follow the example of their Chicago brethren unless certain conditions of time or pay were changed to meet the demands of other strikers. Mr. Merrill was, of course, apprised immediately of what was going on. "Oh," said he, "the boys are all right, and will go back to work after they have appointed a committee to come and see the Old Man." Soon the committee—for of course one was appointed—waited upon the manager. A number of persons were in Mr. Merrill's office when the committee arrived, and all were requested to leave, Mr. Merrill saying: "My boys always like to see me alone at our family gatherings." The committee, composed of five men, was met at the doorway by the manager, who addressed each and every by his sirname, and invited them in with the remark: "We must hurry through this meeting, so that you can get back to work at 1 o'clock," implying, of course, that a strike was not among the possibilities. In about ten minutes the committee came out, returned to their hall and reported that there was no use of thinking about striking, "for the Old Man wouldn't hear to it nohow."

"Does he agree to the demands of the resolution?" inquired one.

"No. He wouldn't agree to anything, only that he should expect us all to be at work when he drives up that way this afternoon."

In the discussion that followed the committee could not give any clear idea of the why or wherefore, but unanimously argued that they knew it would be best to return to work, "because the Old Man said so." And after two or three speakers had admitted that "whatever the Old Man said was best, was always true," the meeting adjourned and the men returned to work, confident that in some way Mr. Merrill would set things right, in his own good time and pleasure. This is a fair illustration of the beginning and end of all "labor troubles" between Mr. Merrill and his men.

HIS RELATIONS WITH NEWSPAPER MEN.

It required time, a reputation for accuracy and a favorable reputation generally on the part of a newspaper man, before much progress could be made toward the good graces of Mr. Merrill. When John C. Gault was his assistant the interviewer was invariably turned over to that gentleman's genial capacity for talking long and familiarly without letting any news escape. Later R. G. Lennox, who has long been a sort of good right hand to the great manager, has pretty effectually barred the way between Merrill and reportorial inquisition. But when it did happen that Mr. Merrill was favorably disposed toward a particular reporter, he would take a good deal of personal pleasure in affording that individual opportunities for "scoops," being one of the few human beings who have existed outside the pale of journalism and yet have been able to comprehend the importance of first place in the race for news. Generally, he was considered by newspaper men about as hard to corner as Ben Butler or Vanderbilt. However, Mr. Merrill fully appreciated the power of the press, and when he had news to give out which related to the concerns of his company he was painstaking in giving the information to reporters, that even slightest errors in statement might be avoided. At such times he invariably expressed his thanks to the reporter, seeming to appreciate that his company was the debtor, a conclusion that many railway magnates always fail to arrive at.

J. B. Olcott expresses the opinion that going hungry to bed is poor business for a dyspeptic if he can command fresh air in a sleeping room, by himself, and can get the food that always satisfies his reasonable appetite. That ought to make a man sleep as all animals sleep when they are well fed.

Wealth in Banana Culture.

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

Honduras is rapidly assuming importance among the larger countries in Central America. It has increased 50 per cent in population within the last ten years. The lands outside of the main town are being bought from the Government by citizens of the United States and by Germans. The object of these new settlers is to establish banana plantations. The soil of Central America is peculiarly adapted to the growth of this fruit, which can be raised at what seems to be a rediculous expense. The market for bananas in New York is good and the sale of them pays a profit of about 20 per cent. The purchase of these lands has netted the Government about $1,500,000 during the last year, and as it owns about 1,000,100 of acres, there is a fair prospect of its enriching itself within the ensuing five years.

Arrived in Chicago one recent day 1,422 railway cars loaded with live hogs. The Prairie Farmer figures that this would have made a continuous train eleven and one-third miles long. The animals would have covered completely more than twenty-one acres of land and stretched in continuous line seventy miles.

Man is a harvester. He begins life at the cradle; learns to handle the fork; often has rakish ways and sows wild oats; thrashes his way through the world, and when he arrives at the sere and yellow leaf, time mows him down, and his remains are planted on the hill-side.

A farmer drove into Washington, Kan., a few days ago with 2,000 pounds of corn, which netted him $3, and a dozen pounds of butter, which brought $3 and some cents.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

HOUSE.—Bills were indefinitely postponed increasing the bounty for the killing of wolves; extending term of office of officers of Stillwater; prohibiting the sale of dime novels. Bills were introduced fixing the annual school meeting in September instead of July.

Mr. Holland introduced a bill proposing the regulation of the railroads and the conduct of warehouses. It contains the usual features contained in the bills covering the subject, but provides for the election of a board of one for each congressional district, the commissioner to have supervision and jurisdiction within his district, substantially as the present railroad commissioner now has. The duties of the commissioners, so far as railroads are concerned, are the same as those given the present railroad commissioner.

Mr. Drake introduced a bill providing for a commission to revise the names of lakes of Minnesota. It appears that names of lakes are duplicated a great many times—some no less than a dozen.

Mr. Stephens' bill, amending the school law, provides that the annual meeting shall be held in September instead of June.

SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE—Appropriating $100,000 for fair ground buildings for the state agricultural society; increasing the fees of jurors in justices' court; extending term of notaries public from two to seven years; amending tax law in relation to publication and sales; to provide for a state public school for neglected children; to establish a board for the inspection of steam boilers; to create an additional judge in the Twelfth judicial district; appropriating $2,000 for the employment of help in the public examiner's office; regulating garnishment in justice's courts; regulating the practice of pharmacy; authorizing St. Paul to issue bonds for certain purposes. Senate bills passed: Amending statutes relating to the insane asylum; providing for the hearing of demurrers in civil actions; amending statutes relating to the drawing of jurors. House bills passed: Sundry bills authorizing St. Paul to issue bonds; detaching Aitkin county from Crow Wing for certain judicial purposes; prohibiting the catching of fish with seines in Todd county; appropriating $5,000 annually for the support of the state board of immigration.

Mr. Stordock has reintroduced in the house the bill which passed the senate two years ago providing for an inspection of all boilers not now inspected under the United States law. The work of inspection is reposed in a body of commissioners, to be compensated by fees.

Mr. Wendelschaffer believes that 50 cents is not enough of a fee for a juror in a justice's court, and has introduced a bill proposing to increase the compensation to $1.

Mr. Pattee proposes to extend the term of notaries public from two to seven years.

SENATE—Bills introduced making special and general appropriations for the state normal schools; amending the incorporative articles of the village of Duluth; amending the statutes relative to sale of real estate for taxes. The O'Brien liquor bill was defeated by a vote of 27 to 13. The senate bill creating an additional judgeship in the Seventh district. Senate bills were also passed changing the county lines in Polk and Marshall counties and relieving county commissioners of penalties under the general drainage law. House bills passed authorizing the county of Pine to issue $10,000 bonds, detaching Aitkin from Crow Wing county for judicial purposes.

Attorney General Hahn, in reply to Judge Wilson's resolution as to legislation needed to allow of the taxation of the mortgage owned by the Minnesota Railway Construction company, states that the state auditor and public examiner have drawn up bills amending the tax laws, and the passage of such bills will obviate all difficulty in the matter.

There was a long and tiresome discussion over the bill creating an additional judge for the Seventh judicial district. It finally passed by a vote of 31 ayes to 5 nays. Judge Collins was present during the discussion.

HOUSE—A resolution for a state license law went over under the rules. Bills were introduced amending the statutes relating to the foreclosure of mortgages; proposing to give the firemen's relief associations half the sum raised by taxation on insurance companies; to establish a state school for neglected children; providing for township insurance companies to insure against hail, tornado and cyclone; requiring the filing of statements of the business of township insurance companies; providing for the establishment of a normal school at Crookston; requiring that legal notices be published in a designated paper; memorials for the adjustment of the direct tax for war purposes; to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery; repealing portions of the statutes relating to guardians. Senate bills were passed: Fixing the time of holding court in the Second district. House bills passed: Amending statutes relating to the duties of sheriffs; to secure railroad companies certain rights in the purchase of rolling stock; recommending that the electors vote for a constitutional amendment. The railroad bill, which was the special order was referred back to the railroad committee upon their request.

A great deal of the time of the members is now taken up in committee work.

Mr. Canning has introduced a bill for location of a normal school at Crookston. The bill provides that this shall not be done until at least five acres of ground and $5,000 have been donated to the state by citizens of Crookston, when an appropriation of $10,000 is made for a suitable building.

Mr. Griffin's bill relating to the publication of legal notices makes it incumbent upon the county commissioners to designate one paper, which shall have been published for a year preceding, in which all legal notices are to be made. The act proposes to prevent the practice of working legal publications in all sorts of out of the way papers.

SENATE—Bills introduced: To provide a state school for indigent children; to regulate the time of commencement of action on lands, time for redemption having expired; to make both husband and wife liable for bills for family subsistence; amending the statutes relative to loan, trust and safe deposit companies. The senate bill passed authorizing Morrison county to issue bonds to fund floating debt. The committee on hospital for insane made an historical and statistical report. In the afternoon session bills were introduced by Senator Castle to prevent spread of contagious diseases among domestic animals, to prevent pollution of sources of water supply, and regulating the carrying on of offensive trades and occupations. In committee of the whole, Senator Pillsbury's bill to assess upon state banks compensation for additional examination was indefinitely postponed.

The four bills introduced by Senator Castle were so introduced by request of the state board of health, and the subject matter they embrace was discussed at length in the recent conference of the physicians and then reported. The first bill would give Dr. C. N. Hewitt $2,500 instead of $1,000. The second bill has been abstracted previously except one or two comparatively unimportant changes which were pointed out later. The fourth bill is to prevent the establishment and the maintenance of soap-making and rendering factories except in localities assigned them. The third bill is to prevent pollution of rivers and sources of water supply. It provides that the state board of health shall have general supervision of all springs, wells, ponds, lakes, streams or rivers used by any town, village or city as a source of water supply.

Senator Wheat, chairman of the hospital for the insane committee, read a special report from that committee. He went into the history, present condition and plans of the hospitals given at length in the reports of the trustees, and syllabized in the governor's message. The committee favor detached wards and think if properly constructed they are not dangerous from liability to fire. The committee recommended the appropriation of $72,000 for the Rochester rebuilding. The committee extends thanks to the officers of the insane hospital for courtesies extended. The report was accepted and ordered printed. Dr. Wheat was personally of the opinion that with the detached wards proposed the state could get along for five years without a third hospital for the insane.

HOUSE—A bare quorum present. Bills were indefinitely postponed: Relating to fees in justices' courts; relating to the sale of poisons by druggists; prohibiting the catching of fish in lakes in Wright county; two bills relating to the licensing of the liquor traffic in townships in which there are village organizations. Bills were introduced: Relating to appeals in justices' courts; authorizing the issuance of $300,000 in bonds for a Ramsey county court house; relating to trials of actions for real property; for a commission to locate a third state hospital for the insane.

Mr. Sadley's bill for a commission to locate another insane asylum names Dr. C. K. Bartlett, Dr. W. H. Leonard, Dr. C. N. Hewitt, H. H. Hart, M. J. Daniels and the governor ex-officio to select the location, and stipulates that it shall not be located south of the south line of Stearns county. It is similar to the Sackett bill in the senate.

The railroad committee of the house has amended the substitute (H. F. No. 227) formerly reported. The amended bill, in the first place, provides for the appointment instead of the election of the railroad and warehouse commissioners. Section 10 and parts of another section are consolidated into one section, but without affecting the purport of the bill. Section 16 is combined with section 19 and makes a section of the new bill numbered 18. Sec. 24 of the new bill, relating to a decision of a majority of the board, is incorporated in sec. 1. Secs. 22 and 23 of the old bill are included in other sections, but their provisions are not eliminated. Sec. 25 of the old, which becomes sec. 21 of the new, and relating to schedules, is materially amended and provides that the commissioners shall make "and file in their office for public examination" for railroads doing business in this state "when upon complaint or otherwise they deem it necessary," schedules of reasonable maximum rates, etc. The latter part of the section, relating to publication of schedules, is eliminated. The bill is made to take effect in thirty instead of sixty days after passage, as originally drawn. The board of appointment, consisting of the the state officers who, in the original bill, made appointments until the next general election, by the amended measure are made a permanent board of appointment.

SENATE.—There was a lengthy debate morning over the Wilson bill to prohibit the giving of bonuses, by counties, to railroads or other corporations, which came up for passage on third reading. Senator Waite strongly opposed the bill as contrary to public policy. Senator Wilson favored it because as a legal proposition, he believed roads had no right to these bonuses, and as a question of general right the bonuses were bad policy. The bill finally passed 27 to 19.

The senate committee have reported a bill providing for the taking of the state census. It provides that the assessors of the several towns in the state, under the direction of the county auditors, shall make the census for their respective towns, and where there are no assessors the county auditor shall appoint one or more assistants to make the census. The secretary of state shall prepare such blanks as are necessary to permit of there being shown the name, sex, age, deaf or dumb, blind, insane, person of color, nativity of persons of foreign parentage, number of families, number of churches, value of church property properly held by church associations exempt from taxation.

The following bills were passed:

Fixing the compensation of county commissioners. (Peck.)

Reimbursing Winona, Dakota, Ramsey, Hennepin and Washington counties for boarding convicts. (Traux.)

Appropriating 1 per cent of the insurance tax for the support of sick or disabled firemen. (Judiciary committee.)

Legalizing the incorporation of certain colleges and other societies.

Forbidding counties to issue bonds in favor of railroads. (Wilson.)

Amending the laws in regard to elections. (Judiciary committee).

Paying estate of L. B. Hodges $600 for two years' services on forestry commission. (Pillsbury).

Amending the statutes relating to the appointment of guardians ad litem. (Hall).

Legalizing the filing of certain affidavits. (Peck).

Legalizing the acknowledgment of conveyances in certain cases. (Sackett):

Concerning secretaries of boards of equalization. (Committee on taxes and tax laws).

Amending the statutes as to the sale of lands forfeited to the state. (Same committee).

To make routes of travel by boats, cars, coaches, etc., criminal districts, and to punish offenses committed thereon. (Judiciary committee.)

Amending the statutes of 1878 relating to guardians. (Judiciary committee.)

Amending the statutes of 1878 relating to costs. (Goodrich.)

Making valid the proceedings of religious corporations by which name of corporation was changed. (Judiciary committee.)

Relieving F. C. Cates, Mille Lacs county, and perfecting title to his land.

The house railroad bill in its amended form was reported back and was re... and ordered printed. Mr. Drake moved to make it the special order for Saturday at 11 o'clock, but Dr. Evans moved to amend to make it Tuesday morning, and Mr. Drake accepted the amendment, and Mr. Reese moved to make it the special order for Friday at 11 o'clock. The bill was made the special order for Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

A large number of bills, mostly local were introduced:

Another bill for the protection of the dairy interests was presented in the house yesterday. It provides penalties against the sale of adulterated milk, and for the manufacture of butterine, oleomargarine and all other spurious products except under certain conditions, the bill being a pretty close approximation to the New York law on the same subject. The bill differs chiefly from the others which have been presented in appropriating $5,000 to make the law operative, and providing for the appointment of a commissioner at $1,500 per year and expenses, charged with the duty of enforcing the law.

Mr. Stordock brought in another bill for the location of a third hospital for the insane, his bill authorizing the appointment of a commission of five by the governor to locate the asylum at some point north of the south line of Stearns county, after certain conditions have been complied with by the towns which may be applicants for the asylum.

Two amendments to the road law were introduced yesterday. One of these, fathered by Mr. Griffin, cuts off the power to sue the county for damages for road openings. Mr. Carson's bill makes legal roads which have been opened the documentary evidence of which is lost, and makes it an offense to close roads of this character.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

Changing the boundaries of school districts in Polk county.

To authorize the Red Wing and Trenton Transit Ferry company to maintain a ferry at Red Wing.

To authorize the county commissioners of Goodhue county to cause certain tracts of land to be surveyed and certain town plats to be filed.

Authorizing St. Paul and Ramsey county to issue $300,000 for a court house.

Appropriating money for the maintenance of the Mississippi river commission.

Relating to publication of town ordinances, etc.

Making it the duty of the county coroner to make and file the testimony taken in all cases.

Amending sec. 283, chap. 66, General Statutes 1878, relating to civil action, relating to the recording of assignments.

Amending the Statutes of 1878 relating to satisfaction of judgments.

Relating to the distribution of property among their creditors.

Amending sec. 20, chap. 57, Statutes 1878, relating to administrators and guardians.

Relating to the time of opening judgments heretofore entered.

To regulate employment bureaus and offices.

Repealing the charter of the village of Taopi.

SENATE.—Bills introduced amending the dog law; making the minimum liquor license $500; transferring the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg to the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northern Railroad company; amending the statutes relating to the assessment for and collection of taxes. The senate indefinitely postponed the bill for a Dakota conference commission. The Wilson bill providing for the taxation of railroad land, title to which has passed, was recommended to pass in committee of the whole.

Senator Houlton's bill for the amendment of the statutes relating to the issuance of licenses for the sale of malt, vinous and spirituous liquors fixes the minimum amount to be charged for such licenses in any county, village or city in the state at $500.

The Senate military committee will report favorably on the bill appropriating $5,500 additional annually for the state guard, with sundry amendments which do away with the objectionable features of the bill. No one is to receive officers' pay, while on duty, who is already in receipt of a salary from the state, and the assistants to the department commanders are to be appointed with the consent of the governor and hold their commission during the term of the executive. It is understood that the additional pay to officers will not amount to more than $1,000 per year.

HOUSE.—The committee on elections reported in favor of Hugh J. Byrne retaining his seat, and the report was adopted. Indefinitely postponed: Changing time of holding county commissioners meetings; bill amending road law; providing for conditional pardons. Bills were introduced: To protect dairymen; to regulate probate court publications; declaring dogs personal property; for the adjustment of claims of W. H. Dike; to legalize certain mortgage foreclosures; defining the duties of the state prison chaplain; changing boundaries of Cass and Crow Wing counties; amending statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer; increasing the salary of the superintendent of the state fruit farm; to secure prompt decisions by district judges; for conveyances of real estate in cases of insanity; appropriating $7,000 for a Grand Army camp; a high license bill. The railroad bill was made the special order for 11 a. m. Tuesday.

THERE were over five thousand northern school teachers at the New Orleans exposition during the holidays.

General Northwestern News.

Minnesota Dairymen.

New Orleans, Special Correspondence, Feb. 2.—Minnesotians are jubilant over the list of premiums taken by our dairymen in the dairy division of the agricultural department of the great exposition at New Orleans. There were entries from 200 individuals and firms, representing all of the dairy states. There were forty-five premiums awarded, exclusive of the pro rata and the sweepstakes, in butter. These represent $2,750 in money. Of these Minnesota takes fourteen premiums and $800 in money. In the pro rata list Minnesota had six out of nineteen successful competitors, winning $314.49 out of $1,000. The following is the list of premiums awarded to Minnesotians on butter.

Grand Sweepstakes Premium on Butter Made at Any Time or Place—W. H. Patten & Co., Le Sueur, $150 and gold medal.

June-Made Creamery—First premium, A. P. McKinstry, Winnebago City, $100; second, New Ulm Creamery company $75.

October-Made—Second, Marvin & Cammack, Rochester, $75.

December-made—First, W. H. Patten & Co., Le Sueur $100.

June-Made Dairy—First, F. D. Holmes, Owatonna, $75.

Print and Ornamental Butter—First, F. D. Holmes, Owatonna, $50.

Roll Butter—First, F. D. Holmes, $20.

Granulated Butter—Second, J. R. Williams, Elgin, $30.

Butter in Fancy Designs—First, Mrs. Mary D. Kelley, Farmington, $75; second, Mrs. C. V. Holmes, Owatonna, $50.

Butter Packed for Warm Climates—Third, F. D. Holmes, Owatonna, $25.

Best Butter Made in Fourteen Northwestern States—Second, N. Olson, Spring Grove, $50; third, F. D. Holmes, $25.

Largest and Best Display of Butter by any Individual manufacturer—Third, A. P. McKinstry, Winnebago City, $50.

Pro Rata Premiums—Marvin & Cammack, Rochester, $51.90; N. Olson, Spring Grove, $51.35; New Ulm, Creamery company, $51.65; R. E. Wilcox, Rushford, $50.80; A. P. McKinstry, Winnebago City, $21.90; Raymond & Gray, Luverne, $51.35.

This showing is particularly creditable in view of the fact that the dairy interest in Minnesota is scarcely five years old. The tests at New Orleans have proved beyond question that Northern Minnesota, at least, is peculiarly adapted to the manufacture of butter that possesses in high degree the qualities which cause butter to hold its flavor for the longest time. The manufacture of cheese in Minnesota is comparatively limited. Yet the quality of that produced is excellent, as shown by the fact that five premiums were taken in cheese, as follows:

June Cheese—Second, Marvin & Cammack, Rochester, $75.

Largest and Best Display by any Individual or firm—First, Marvin & Cammack, $100.

Best Five Boxes of Sage Cheese—Second, Marvin & Cammack, $50.

Switzer Cheese—Second, G. Boos, Leroy, $50.

Three Cases of Limburger Cheese—Second, G. Boos, Leroy, $50.

Settlers have been arrested at Dell Rapids, Dak., by United States Deputy Marshal Pay for taking boulders from the school section.

The list of contemplated building improvements in Yankton, Dak., the coming season foots up $800,000.

At Ottumwa, Iowa, eighteen saloonkeepers were arrested and fined $50 each.

At the recent term of district court in Harrison county, Iowa, $3,500 in fines was imposed on Missouri Valley saloonkeepers. One man, John Henry, who was fined $500, went to jail for five months rather than pay.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul ran a special train over the Council Bluffs road, carrying physicians to vaccinate all agents, section men, and other employes of the road. All who would not submit to vaccination were discharged.

The board of normal school regents in session at Madison, Wis., elected Albert Salisbury president of the Whitewater normal school, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. W. Stearns, who occupies the chair of pedigogy in the state university.

The son of the pastor of a church near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, came to the latter city recently in search of his sister, whom he found in a house of ill fame, and took her home. The Republican says she had been led astray and her life wrecked by a villain in her native town—a man who possessed the confidence of her father and is still a "bright and shining light" in the Sunday school of the man whose child he ruined.

At Austin, Minn., the spring bed manufactory of J. L. Nevins caught fire from the stove which had been lighted up shortly before. Loss, $4,000.

S. J. Goodwin of Beloit, Wis., aged seventy-six is dead. He was one of the old residents of the state, and was widely known in connection with the hotel and opera house bearing his name. He was very wealthy, possessing large blocks of American and United States Express and Western Union Telegraph stocks, besides real estate and building property to a large amount.

S. O. Hammerslaugh, a Chicago traveling man, who stole a sealskin cloak, valued at $350, from the Decker house, Maquoketa, Iowa, was apprehended at Anamosa and brought back, the cloak being found in his sample case. He was bound over for trial.

The residence of George Balters, in Little Falls, Minn., burned. Loss $1,110.

Edward E. Price died at White Earth, Minn., on Jan. 27, aged sixty-four years. Mr. Price was born in Queen Anne county, Md., where he lived during the early days of his boyhood. He came west in 1845, and enlisted in Company D, First United States dragoons, Col. Kerney commanding. He was promoted to the rank of first sergeant in which capacity he served during the war with Mexico. He was mustered out at Fort Ripley, Minn., July 8, 1850, and removed to Henderson, where he resided until the stormy days of "61," when he enlisted in Company I, First Minnesota volunteers, where he was again tendered the office of sergeant, which duty he performed until his discharge on May 5, 1864. He re-enlisted in Hancock's corps and served until the company disbanded, when he returned to his old home at Henderson.

A. J. Brown, of Mabott & Brown, Mount Vernon, Dak., whose store building and stock were burned, committed suicide.

Near St. Charles, Minn., the house of Mr. Burns was burned, with two of his small children.

Fletcher Bidwell of Yucatan, Minn., was arrested on complaint of James Farley, his father-in-law, of criminal assault upon his daughter, Lizzie Farley.

The store, saloon and dwelling of Mr. Nuwash, in Waverly, Minn., were burned with their contents. Loss, $7,000; insurance, $3,677.

At Stevens' Point, Wis., Joseph Cornfield was caught in a belt in a mill and ground to pieces.

F. J. Grier, formerly secretary of the Homestake Mining company in the Black Hills, has been appointed superintendent to succeed the late Sam McMasters.

The second annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the department of Dakota will be held at Huron March 18.

A special from Glyndon, Minn., states that John Anderson committed suicide in that city in the St. Paul & Manitoba section house. He was dead when found. The cause was the abnormal effect on his mind produced by serious frost bites.

After the funeral of ... Snell and her child, murdered near Larimore, Dak., the people assembled in a hall, filling it to overflowing, and addresses suitable to the occasion were made by Reverends W. G. Huntley of Fargo, McGregor of Inkster, and J. Nelson Jones of Grand Forks, after which, the afflicted husband, Rev. Mr. Snell, said he was informed that strong threats of lynching had been made should the guilty man be caught, and he wished it distinctly understood that such a course would be contrary to his wishes in the matter. He said: "Let the law be impartially enforced; let there be no mob law, but rather let the dignity of our courts be maintained."

William Wright, chairman of the town board of Thorpe, Wis., was shot and instantly killed, recently by his son Robert, aged twenty. The old man had been drinking very hard and had been coming home every night and terrorizing his family by threatening to kill them.

How They Squeal.

The millers and the elevator men make a terrible squealing before the committees on the proposed railroad bill and say: "Would you confiscate our property?" The farmers and every business man in this plundered country reply: "Yes, gentlemen, if you call being placed upon a par with other buyers here having your property confiscated, WE WOULD FOR A FACT!" There is no probability of their ever being placed in the vise where they have held the farmers like grim death for so long, but if there was is it any worse for them to have their little property in this country confiscated through their present system of confiscating the whole property of the farmers? "Turn about is fair play," gentlemen, and if you are in any danger of losing a little now it is just what the farmers have had to stand a great deal of AND IT IS WHAT WE OBJECT TO. Now, we do not bear any grudges. We do not wish to crush out anybody. WE ONLY WANT FAIR PLAY and, "BY THE ETERNAL" (as Gen. Jackson said on like occasion) we mean to have it! This thing has gone just as far as human nature can stand and there must and there will be a change soon—for the better or for the worse. We hope and trust that it will be for the better. We hope so for the good of all—not only the people of the great Northwest, but also the elevator people and the millers. There is such a thing as piling on the last straw and the load is sufficiently burdensome already! The Legislature should act at once.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING.

One reason why farmers should raise some stock, and perhaps the best reason that can be given is that it furnishes a good market for his barley, oats, peas and other grains. Wheat is now the only grain raised that can be depended upon to furnish the ready cash and this has been proved to be disastrous. We have no reliable market for any other grain and this is wrong. If a sufficient amount of stock was raised upon every farm to consume the surplus of barley and oats raised, this would at once create a good market for their grains. The returns in milk, butter, pork and beef would be found more profitable than selling the barley and oats in the market to be sent to outside markets with a big freight bill to pay. As long as this country does not supply itself with butter, beef and pork, those who engaged in the business of supplying the demand would find a very lucrative business, and it will be many years before this will be overdone. Beef at only 4 cents per pound on foot, butter at 15 cents per pound and pork at 6 cents per pound, dressed, is better than oats at 15 to 20 cents, barley 30 to 35 and wheat at 50 cents per bushel. Everybody cannot go into stock at once, but if there was a great deal more stock in the county more grain would be needed to feed them and hence the amount of oats and barley in the hands of those who had them for sale could be sold at far better prices than they are now or can ever be under the present system. It is true that this is an unusual year yet the intelligent farmer will see in the lessons it teaches the absolute necessity for a change in the present system. It shows conclusively to our mind that it is not safe to rely upon one crop wholly as we have been doing and while wheat will doubtless bring better prices next year yet if flax raising can be made a successful competitor as a money crop it will be far better as the more flax we raise the less wheat will be produced and if the present crises is owing to over production why the simple remedy is to raise less wheat. Farmers MUST raise some crop that will bring the ready money. If flax is as good a crop it would pay to raise say one-half the usual wheat area flax the balance wheat. This makes less wheat and of course better prices. This, with stock enough to consume the other grains it seems to us affords the true solution of the great problem now before this country. Legislation will do much to cure existing evils in the wheat trade but when you get right down to the kernel in the nut you will find that it was BRAINS that originated the present wheat system, BRAINS that is backing it up and it requires BRAINS to solve the problem successfully. BRAINS in this country, brains among the farmers and we cannot expect the Legislature to furnish everybody with that useful lever, especially when they haven't any great surplus of the article to spare. They can and doubtless will do a great deal but it is hardly right for everybody else to sit quietly down and expect our Legislature to do it all. As well might we expect them by act of Legislature to make every farmer a rich man. We must inteligently apply the means we have at hand ourselves and we expect to see a happy, rich and contented country right here when this is done.

HOLSTEIN DAIRY.

"Mr. S. F. Johnson, the Prairie Creek farmer and dairyman, has furnished us with the following statement of his expenditure and results in his dairy for the year 1884.

Expended for feed, besides hay and pasturage.

17 tons bran, $6 per ton	$102.00
4 " shorts, $9 " "	36.00
200 bu. oats, 29c per bu. ground	58.00
Total	$198.00

Amount of butter made, 4,522 pounds. Average amount per cow, for nineteen cows milked, 238 pounds. Seven of the cows were two year old heifers. Nineteen calves were raised, nine of which sold for $225. Ten of the cows were grade Holsteins."

The above extract from the Northfield Journal, one of the oldest and most reliable newspapers in the State, is a practical answer to remarks we frequently hear that "you can't make stock raising pay in Minnesota!" We call attention, however, to one significent point which those who say stock-raising don't pay are prone to overlook, and that point is that the above statement is of a HOLSTEIN dairy. Now we know that in Minnesota, with its long winter, in order to make stock-raising the greatest success every facility offered must be taken advantage of and one important fact (liable to be lost sight of) is that it COSTS NO MORE to feed such cows as Holsteins, Ayrshires, Guernseys, Alderneys or Jerseys, that will yield four to one over common, native stock in milk and butter than it does to feed and care for the native stock. A cow that will yield four times as much as a native is ACTUALLY WORTH more than four times what the native will bring yet how many of our farmers recognize that fact? "A cow is a cow" and only worth about so much NO MATTER HOW MUCH CLEAR MONEY she will return to her owner. When you come to think of it that is a very mistaken notion yet is it not the general rule adopted by buyers? If stock-raising can not be made to pay in Minnesota how is it that Minnesota takes the sweepstakes prize of the world for the production of the best butter? Now there are those from honest convictions that will tell you that stock raising don't pay because some man or several men have tried it and failed. Well, now does that fact PROVE anything? Would the same men who have failed in stock-raising have made a success of ANYTHING they undertook? Were they men of intelligence, sobriety and industry, and did they go about it as such men would? Did they apply intelligent methods to the business, such as would be necessary or success in any line? It is barely possible that there may have been something with the men themselves, and, in view of the fact that hundreds in Minnesota have made big money in stock we are inclined to take that view of the case. Look at Southern Minnesota. Not long since she was nearly bankrupt trying to raise wheat. What is her condition to-day? Prosperous, contented and happy! What has wrought this wondrous change? The cow; that animal that some of our friends tell us "don't pay!" We have persistently urged our readers to raise more stock believing that they would do far better thus than by one eternal round of wheat raising and we have not depended wholly upon our own judgment in the matter but have drawn from the experiences of those who have made stock-raising pay in support of our position, well-knowing that we were addressing intelligent, practical farmers who know enough to accept all that is good in what we have said and subject all that is not practical. There is one thing in this matter that is well-known and cannot be disputed. This country has reached a point where wheat-raising does not pay, and if a system of diversified husbandry will not the farmers had better hang up their fiddle at once and go where something will pay! No cavilier can climb over that fence, nor get around it. Intelligent farmers, who before now have found themselves in the same box in this State have turned their attention to stock-raising and found the relief they sought. And the opportunities to-day are as great as ever. But a man must go about it intelligently just the same as he must to make a success of any business. When he does this he will succeed and it is because we know that farmers as a rule are practical men that we have said, and still insist that there is money in stock-raising in this country. We do not wish to be understood to say that farmers, to be successful must drop everything else and raise stock exclusively. We don't mean that and have never said it. But we do mean that if he expects to be successful he must diversify. He must raise some cattle, some hogs, some sheep, some horses, same grain to feed them and some wheat. And all of those things must be the very best that can be procured!

After the Elevators.

Tower City, Herald.

Colonel Morton, of Fargo, don't propose to let the elevator monopoly rest at all. He fires a hot line shot at the N. P. elevators on Monday in The Fargo Argus in the shape of a transfer check issued to him for 5,000 bushels of No. 1 hard wheat sold the company at Fargo, and they propose to deliver it to him at Duluth upon payment of the following charges:

Freight, 5,083 20-60 bushels at 23c per 100 lbs	$701 50
Inspection	2 50
Cleaning	25 42
Extra Storage	34 63
Handling Charges	125 00
Total	$889 05

Now just look at the gall and fealing. Freight is charged for over eighty-three bushels more than the ticket gives him. A charge of $11.50 extra for dirt in the wheat after they have docked it; $25.42 for cleaning wheat, after they have graded it No. 1 hard. It will be noticed they charge for hauling the dirt, and for cleaning the dirt. Here seems to be a direct steal of either $11.50, or $25.42. It shows how the farmer is wronged. He is docked on his wheat at the hopper, he is charged for cleaning after the dockage, and still further, is compelled to pay for hauling the dirt to Duluth. And still the immaculate board of grain inspectors cannot see any intentional wrong in the elevator system.

Now where are legislators? The friends of the people. The servants of their constituents. Let them awake from their lethargy and mark out justice alike to crime, whether in places high or low. An outraged people and the future of North Dakota demand it.

She Took the Trick.

An Auburn lawyer's little daughter goes to Sabbath school, and is in a class with other little girls. Possibly the Auburn legal luminary hasn't allowed for the sharp ears and the bright eyes of his little one as much as he might.

It was in a review last Sabbath in her class. The teacher was going over the good old story of King Solomon and his wisdom.

"Now, dears, who was the great queen who traveled so many miles and miles to see this king?" Silence prevailed in the class.

"Why, you do know, all of you. The queen who came to see the king."

The name had been forgotten by the class.

In order to help them the kind but misguided teacher began to offer a little assistance. "You do know, I am sure. The name began with S, and she was a very great queen."

Just then up shot a little hand and out spoke the triumphant voice of the little Auburn girl. She transfixed the listening school-room with the following brief statement, in a clear, business-like voice: "I know teacher; it was the queen of spades."—[Lewiston Journal.

Peterson's Magazine for March opens with a beautiful steel-plate of two girls caught in a snow storm, and entitled "The Sisters," illustrating a powerful story by Frank Lee Benedict. In addition, there is the usual double size fashion plate, printed from steel, and colored by hand; "Peterson" being the only magazine to give these expensive and refined fashion-plates. Besides this, there is a colored pattern for a Tidy on Java Canvas; a capital humorous illustration, "The Beleagured Garrison," and some fifty wood cuts of fashions, embroideries, work table designs, and other things useful to ladies. The principal article is an illustrated one, entitled "Washington City: Its Pictorial Side," a remarkably well written and discriminating paper on the Federal City, considered artistically, architecturally, socially, etc. The stories, as always in "Peterson," are the very best of their kind. The continued novelet—"The Lost Ariadne," by Mrs. John Sherwood, of New York—increases in power with every number. Every lady, as we have often said, ought to take the magazine. The price is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLSTEIN CATTLE.

Breeders' Live Stock Journal.

The time has come when the thrifty, provident farmer and dairyman can no longer overlook the claims of the wonderful breed of cattle known as the Holsteins. Their enormous milk records, the superior quality of their milk, rich alike in butter and cheese; their beef qualities; all tend to make them both desirable and profitable for either milk, butter, cheese, beef, or all four combined. They are preeminently and unqualifiedly the most economical, profitable and satisfactory dairy cattle we know of for general dairy or farm purposes. By nature, of quiet and gentle dispositions in stable and in field, they assimilate their food readily, and are good, hearty, but economical feeders. In form, generally straight and square, with fine heads, horns, necks and limbs. Large in size, with good, well-placed udders and teats, as a class their value cannot but be apparent to all parties interested in cattle, as a profitable and valuable acquisition to the dairy or farm. They acclimate themselves to the various climates, temperatures and soils of our vast and varied country with marked readiness.

In almost every State they have been tried, and from all parts the most flattering reports are received as to their adaptability, product, and general character as dairy cattle. They are fast coming to be known as the great dairy cattle of our country and the world.

Their powers of prepotency are unusually strong, and bred on to cattle of almost any other breed they carry with them the prominent characteristics of the Holstein bread, color, milk and form.

We need no longer rely alone on mere assertions of interested breeders, but can give records made in the stables of farmers and dairymen, with common care and keep, that fully verify the enormous reports already made public. While we admit that statistics are often dry and uninteresting, we are forced to use them in order to thoroughly maintain our position and establish proof of our assertions. We therefore beg the reader to carefully examine the following records by actual weight of each milking, selected from the many herds and stables of our acquaintance, situate in different parts of the United States.

Although the breeding of these cattle in this country may be said to still be in its incipiency, we are enabled to give the following butter records made in different herds and under varied circumstances, in support of our statement that they are a butter breed:

Janneck, 7 years old, made 2 pounds 2¼ ounces of butter in one day, 19 pounds 15 ounces in seven days, and 28 pounds 6 ounces in ten consecutive days.

Aaggie, 6 years old, made 2 pounds 8¼ ounces of butter in one day.

Lady Walworth, 8 years old, made 19 pounds of butter in one week, and 37 pounds 6 ounces in two weeks.

Eltona, 7 years old, made 17 pounds 14 ounces of butter in seven days, and 35 pounds 3 ounces in fourteen days.

Mink, 5 years old, made 29 pounds 6 ounces of butter in ten days.

Frieda, 8 years old, made 6 pounds 8 ounces of butter from milk of two days.

Violet, 4 years old, made 15 pounds 6 ounces of butter in one week.

Ophelia, 2 years old, made 13 pounds 5 ounces of butter in one week.

Georgie, 2 years old, made 12 pounds 2 ounces of butter in one week.

Texalaar made 17 pounds 14 ounces of butter in six days.

Limited space does not admit of our adding to this list many others equally remarkable.

Holland, the native country of this breed of cattle, has long been noted for its cheese, both for its quality and quantity. It is made almost exclusively from the milk of these cattle, and this fact alone sufficiently substantiates our statement as to their cheese making qualities. Chemical analyses have proven that Holstein milk is richer in caseine (cheese matter) than any other.

As beef animals, they compare favorably with Short-horns and Herefords, as the following weights attest:

	Age.	Weight.
Isis	7 years	1,880
Neilson	6 "	1,565

The symmetry, the glossy coats, the uniformly clean and distinct black and white color, all combine to render the Holsteins one of the most attractive and beautiful races of cattle known.

In conclusion, we feel justified is saying that the Holstein breed of cattle possess more desirable qualities and that they more fully meet the demands and supply the wants of this country than any other, for in them are combined size, fine form, finish, wonderful development, uniformity of color and general appearance, vigor and the production of remarkable quantities of prime milk, cheese, butter and beef.

How They Squeal.

The millers and the elevator men make a terrible squealing before the committee on the proposed railroad bill and say: "Would you confiscate our property?" The farmers and every business man in this plundered country reply: "Yes, gentlemen, if your call being placed upon a par with other buyers here having your property confiscated, WE WOULD FOR A FACT!" There is no probability of their ever being placed in the vise where they have held the farmers like grim death for so long, but if there was is it any worse for them to have their little property in this country confiscated through their present system of confiscating the whole property of the farmers? "Turn about is fair play," gentlemen, and if you are in any danger of losing a little now it is just what the farmers have had to stand a great deal of AND IT IS WHAT WE OBJECT TO. Now, we do not bear any grudges. We do not wish to crush out anybody. WE ONLY WANT FAIR PLAY and, "BY THE ETERNAL," (as Gen. Jackson said on like occasion) we mean to have it! This thing has gone just as far as human nature can stand and there must and there will be a change soon—for the better or for the worse. We hope and trust that it will be for the better. We hope so for the good of all—not only the people of the great Northwest, but also the elevator people and the millers. There is such a thing as piling on the last straw and the load is sufficiently burdensome already! The Legislature should act at once.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING.

One reason why farmers should raise some stock, and perhaps the best reason that can be given is that it furnishes a good market for his barley, oats, peas and other grains. Wheat is now the only grain raised that can be depended upon to furnish the ready cash and this has been proved to be disastrous. We have no reliable market for any other grain and this is wrong. If a sufficient amount of stock was raised upon every farm to consume the surplus of barley and oats raised, this would at once create a good market for their grains. The returns in milk, butter, pork and beef would be found more profitable than selling the barley and oats in the market to be sent to outside markets with a big freight bill to pay. As long as this country does not supply itself with butter, beef and pork, those who engaged in the business of supplying the demand would find a very lucrative business, and it will be many years before this will be overdone. Beef at only 4 cents per pound on foot, butter at 15 cents per pound and pork at 6 cents per pound, dressed, is better than oats at 15 to 20 cents, barley 30 to 35 and wheat at 50 cents per bushel. Everybody cannot go into stock at once, but if there was a great deal more stock in the county more grain would be needed to feed them and hence the amount of oats and barley in the hands of those who had them for sale could be sold at far better prices than they are now or can ever be under the present system. It is true that this is an unusual year yet the intelligent farmer will see in the lessons it teaches the absolute necessity for a change in the present system. It shows conclusively to our mind that it is not safe to rely upon one crop wholly as we have been doing and while wheat will doubtless bring better prices next year yet if flax raising can be made a successful competitor as a money crop it will be far better as the more flax we raise the less wheat will be produced and if the present crises is owing to over production why the simple remedy is to raise less wheat. Farmers MUST raise some crop that will bring the ready money. If flax is as good a crop it would pay to raise say one-half the usual wheat area flax, the balance wheat. This makes less wheat and of course better prices. This, with stock enough to consume the other grains it seems to us affords the true solution of the great problem now before this country. Legislation will do much to cure existing evils in the wheat trade but when you get right down to the kernel in the nut you will find that it was BRAINS that originated the present wheat system, BRAINS that is backing it up and it requires BRAINS to solve the problem successfully. BRAINS in this country, brains among the farmers and we cannot expect the Legislature to furnish everybody with that useful lever, especially when they haven't any great surplus of the article to spare. They can and doubtless will do a great deal but it is hardly right for everybody else to sit quietly down and expect our Legislature to do it all. As well might we expect them by act of Legislature to make every farmer a rich man. We must intelligently apply the means we have at hand ourselves and we expect to see a happy, rich and contented country right here when this is done.

HOLSTEIN DAIRY.

Mr. S. B. Johnson, the Prairie Creek farmer and dairyman, has furnished us with the following statement of his expenditure and results in his dairy for the year 1884: [illegible]

Expended for feed, besides hay and pasturage:

17 tons bran, $6 per ton	$102.00
[illegible] shorts, $[illegible]	86.00
200 bu. oats, 29c per bu. ground	58.00
Total	$[illegible]98.00

Amount of butter made 4,522 pounds. Average amount per cow, for nineteen cows milked, [illegible] pounds. Seven of the cows were two year old heifers. Nineteen calves were raised, nine of which sold for $[illegible]. Ten of the cows were grade Holsteins. [illegible]

The above extract from the Northfield Journal, one of the oldest and most reliable newspapers in the State, is a practical answer to remarks we frequently hear that "you can't make stock raising pay in Minnesota!" We call attention, however, to one significant point which those who say stock raising don't pay are prone to overlook, and that point is that the above statement is of a HOLSTEIN dairy. Now we know that in Minnesota, with its long winter, in order to make stock raising the greatest success every facility offered must be taken advantage of and one important fact (liable to be lost sight of) is that it COSTS NO MORE to feed such cows as Holsteins, Ayrshires, Guernseys, Alderneys or Jerseys, that will yield four to one over common native stock in milk and butter than it does to feed and care for the native stock. A cow that will yield four times as much as a native is ACTUALLY WORTH more than four times what the native will bring yet how many of our farmers recognize that fact? "A cow is a cow," and only worth about so much NO MATTER HOW MUCH CLEAR MONEY she will return to her owner. When you come to think of it that is a very mistaken notion yet is it not the general rule adopted by buyers? If stock-raising can not be made to pay in Minnesota how is it that Minnesota takes the sweepstakes prize of the world for the production of the best butter? Now there are those from honest convictions that will tell you that stock raising don't pay because some man or several men have tried it and failed. Well, how does that fact PROVE anything? Would the same men who have failed in stock-raising have made a success of ANYTHING they undertook? Were they men of intelligence, sobriety and industry, and did they go about it as such men would? Did they apply intelligent methods to the business, such as would be necessary for success in any line? It is barely possible that there may have been something with the men themselves, and, in view of the fact that hundreds in Minnesota have made big money in stock we are inclined to take that view of the case. Look at Southern Minnesota. Not long since she was nearly bankrupt trying to raise wheat. What is her condition to-day? Prosperous, contented and happy! What has wrought this wondrous change? The cow; that animal that some of our friends tell us "don't pay!" We have persistently urged our readers to raise more stock believing that they would do far better thus than by one eternal round of wheat raising and we have not depended wholly upon our own judgment in the matter but have drawn from the experiences of those who have made stock-raising pay in support of our position, well knowing that we were addressing intelligent, practical farmers who know enough to accept all that is good in what we have said and subject all that is not practical. There is one thing in this matter that is well known and cannot be disputed. This country has reached a point where wheat-raising does not pay, and if a system of diversified husbandry will not the farmers had better hang up their fiddle at once and go where something will pay! No cavilor can climb over that fence nor get around it. Intelligent farmers who before now have found themselves in the same box in this State have turned their attention to stock-raising and found the relief they sought. And the opportunities to-day are as great as ever. But a man must go about it intelligently just the same as he must to make a success of any business. When he does this he will succeed and it is because we know that farmers as a rule are practical men that we have said and still insist that there is money in stock-raising in this country. We do not wish to be understood to say that farmers, to be successful, must drop everything else and raise stock exclusively. We don't mean that and have never said it. But we do mean that if he expects to be successful he must diversify. He must raise some cattle, some hogs, some sheep, some horses, some grain to feed them and some wheat. And all of those things must be the very best that can be procured.

After the Elevators.

Tower City Herald.

Colonel Morton, of Fargo, don't propose to let the elevator monopoly rest at all. He fires a hot line shot at the N. P. elevators on Monday in The Fargo Argus in the shape of a transfer check issued to him for 5,000 bushels of No. 1 hard wheat sold the company at Fargo and they propose to deliver it to him at Duluth upon payment of the following charges:

Freight, 5,083 20-60 bushels at 25c per 100 lbs	[illegible]01.50
Inspection	2.50
Cleaning	[illegible]
Extra Storage	[illegible]4.63
Handling Charge	[illegible]2.00
Total	[illegible]88.05

Now just look at the gall of the thing. Freight is charged for over eighty-three bushels more than the [illegible]. A charge of $[illegible] extra [illegible] wheat after they have [illegible] for cleaning wheat after they have graded it No. 1 hard [illegible] they charge for hauling the dirt and [illegible] cleaning the dirt [illegible] direct steal of [illegible] $22.42. It shows how the farmer is wronged. He is docked on his wheat at the hopper, he is charged for cleaning after the dockage, and still further is compelled to pay for hauling the dirt to Duluth. And still the immaculate board of grain inspectors cannot see any intentional wrong in the elevator system. [illegible]

Now where are our legislators? The friends of the people? The servants of their constituents? Let them awake from their lethargy and mark out justice alike to crime, whether in places high or low. An outraged people and the future of North Dakota demand it.

She Took the Trick.

An Auburn lawyer's little daughter goes to Sabbath school, and is in a class with other little girls. Possibly the Auburn legal luminary hasn't allowed for the sharp ears and the bright eyes of his little one as much as he might.

It was in a review last Sabbath in her class. The teacher was going over the good old story of King Solomon and his wisdom.

"Now, dears, who was the great queen who traveled so many miles and miles to see this king?" Silence prevailed in the class.

"Why, you do know, all of you. The queen who came to see the king."

The name had been forgotten by the class.

In order to help them the kind but misguided teacher began to offer a little assistance. "You do know, I am sure. The name began with S, and she was a very great queen."

Just then up shot a little hand and out spoke the triumphant voice of the little Auburn girl. She transfixed the listening school-room with the following brief statement, in a clear, business-like voice: "I know, teacher, it was the queen of spades."—[Lewiston Journal.

Peterson's Magazine for March opens with a beautiful steel-plate of two girls caught in a snow storm, and entitled "The Sisters," illustrating a powerful story by Frank Lee Benedict. In addition, there is the usual double size fashion plate, printed from steel, and colored by hand; "Peterson" being the only magazine to give these expensive and refined fashion-plates. Besides this, there is a colored pattern, for a Tidy on Java Canvas, a capital humorous illustration, "The Beleagured Garrison," and some fifty wood cuts of fashions, embroideries, work table designs, and other things useful to ladies. The principal article is an illustrated one, entitled "Washington City: Its Pictorial Side," a remarkably well written and discriminating paper on the Federal City, considered artistically, architecturally, socially, etc. The stories, as always in "Peterson," are the very best of their kind. The continued novelet—"The Lost Ariadne," by Mrs. John Sherwood, of New York—increases in power with every number. Every lady, as we have often said, ought to take the magazine. The price is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HOLSTEIN CATTLE.

[illegible] Live Stock Journal.

The time has come when the thrifty provident farmer and dairyman can no longer overlook the claims of the wonderful breed of cattle known as the Holsteins. Their enormous milk records, the superior quality of their milk, rich alike in butter and cheese, their beef qualities, all tend to make them both desirable and profitable for either milk, butter, cheese, beef, or all four combined. They are preeminently and unqualifiedly the most economical, profitable and satisfactory dairy cattle we know of for general dairy or farm purposes. By nature of quiet and gentle dispositions in stable and in field, they assimilate their food readily, and are good, hearty, but economical feeders. In form, generally straight and square, with fine heads, horns, necks and limbs. Large in size, with good, well-placed udders and teats, as a class their value cannot but be apparent to all parties interested in cattle, as a profitable and valuable acquisition to the dairy or farm. They acclimate themselves to the various climates, temperatures and soils of our vast and varied country with marked readiness.

In almost every State they have been tried, and from all parts the most flattering reports are received as to their adaptability, product, and general character as dairy cattle. They are fast coming to be known as the great dairy cattle of our country and the world.

Their powers of prepotency are unusually strong, and bred on to cattle of almost any other breed they carry with them the prominent characteristics of the Holstein breed, color, milk and form.

We need no longer rely alone on mere assertions of interested breeders, but can give records made in the stables of farmers and dairymen, with common care and keep, that fully verify the enormous reports already made public. While we admit that statistics are often dry and uninteresting, we are forced to use them in order to thoroughly maintain our position and establish proof of our assertions. We therefore beg the reader to carefully examine the following records by actual weight of each milking, selected from the many herds and stables of our acquaintance, situate in different parts of the United States.

Although the breeding of these cattle in this country may be said to still be in its incipiency, we are enabled to give the following butter records made in different herds and under varied circumstances, in support of our statement that they are a butter breed.

Janneck, 7 years old, made 2 pounds 2½ ounces of butter in one day, 19 pounds 15 ounces in seven days, and 28 pounds 6 ounces in ten consecutive days.

Aaggie, 6 years old, made 2 pounds 8½ ounces of butter in one day.

Lady Walworth, 8 years old, made 19 pounds of butter in one week, and 37 pounds 6 ounces in two weeks.

Eltons, 7 years old, made 17 pounds 14 ounces of butter in seven days, and 35 pounds 8 ounces in fourteen days.

Mink, 5 years old, made 29 pounds 6 ounces of butter in ten days.

Frieda, 8 years old, made 6 pounds 8 ounces of butter from milk of two days.

Violet, 4 years old, made 15 pounds 0 ounces of butter in one week.

Ophelia, 2 years old, made 13 pounds 5 ounces of butter in one week.

Georgie, 2 years old, made 12 pounds 2 ounces of butter in one week.

Texalaar made 17 pounds 14 ounces of butter in six days.

Limited space does not admit of our adding to this list many others equally remarkable.

Holland, the native country of this breed of cattle, has long been noted for its cheese, both for its quality and quantity. It is made almost exclusively from the milk of these cattle, and this fact alone sufficiently substantiates our statement as to their cheese making qualities. Chemical analyses have proven that Holstein milk is richer in caseine (cheese matter) than any other.

As beef animals, they compare favorably with Short-horns and Herefords, as the following weights attest:

	Age.	Weight.
Isis	7 years	1,880
Neilson	6 "	1,505

The symmetry, the glossy coats, the uniformly clean and distinct black and white color, all combine to render the Holsteins one of the most attractive and beautiful races of cattle known.

In conclusion, we feel justified in saying that the Holstein breed of cattle possess more desirable qualities and that they more fully meet the demands and supply the wants of this country than any other, for in them are combined size, fine form, finish, wonderful development, uniformity of color and general appearance, vigor and the production of remarkable quantities of prime milk, cheese, butter and beef.

Struck Ile.

On THE JOURNAL stock farm, on the south half of Sec. 8, Crookston township, Mr. Ira D. Blanchard has been engaged since Oct. 1st endeavoring to obtain a flowing well. His efforts were crowned with success on Thursday, Feb. 5th, when he struck a 50 barrel flow square in the face. The difficulties under which he has labored, if fully understood, would fully explain why this was not thusly before. When he had reached a depth of 178 feet, about the latter part of October, the inventor of the well boring machine, Mr. Chapman, appeared upon the scene. He went out to see how Mr. B. was getting on, and upon examining the nature of the dirt in which Mr. B. was then at work he said, "Oh, you never can get a flowing well in this kind of dirt; you may develop a pump well, but a flowing well you cannot get inside of 500 feet. You had better pull up to your small vein and try to develop that." Mr. B. thought that the man who made the machine, and who had sunk a great many wells, must know something about the business, and so he took his advice and pulled up, attempting to develope a pump well. But somehow the old thing did not develope to any alarming extent. Then business called him away for a week or so, after which the sickness and death of his little girl prevented his being able to attend the well. However, on Monday, February 2d, he secured the services of Mr. James Dupuis, who is also, professionally, a well man, and together they resumed Chapman's dry well; and at a depth of 190 feet, only 12 feet from where Chapman averred no WET water could ever flow out, they obtained a fifty barrel well. Had the expert, Chapman, kept away a day or so longer water would have been obtained last fall. Mr. Blanchard is said to have one of the best machines made and is now ready to tackle a "yob" for any one who may want to obtain a nice, healthy flowing well.

Euclid Items.

News items scarcer than ever this week.

The irrepressable John Keeley is again in our midst, and intends to spend the balance of the winter with pa.

Geo. Harris made a short visit here last Thursday. He reports everything O. K. at Warren, but says that Euclid seems more like home after all.

Wm. Davidson arrived here with the carload of cattle for the Keystone farm last Friday.

Some one remarked that the Lily of the Valley had begin to fade.

John Strauser, of Argyle, arrived here to-day and at once proceeded to labor in the cause of temperance after the fashion of Switchel in the play of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

M. P. Losey has turned revivalist and is doing a grand work repairing damaged souls.

A delegation from the Angus literary society visited the Euclid literary society Wednesday night.

We are pleased to learn that Robert Shultz, of this town, recently drew a prize of $5,000 at the last drawing of the Louisiana State lottery. Several persons are jubilant over his good fortune.

At the last dance one of the managers announced that as soon as the dance was over there would be conveyances ready to take them to a funeral and requested a full attendance.

We understand that Mr. T. D. Knapp, foreman on the Bull farm west of here, has been offered the position as superintendent on the Grandin farm in Dakota.

DIED.

On January 28th at 1 o'clock p. m., Mrs. Jas. McArthur, aged 51 years. The funeral was held at her late residence at 9 o,clock on Saturday and was attended by many friends of the family. The body was interred in the Grand Forks cemetery. The sympathy of the community go out to the bereaved family. Mr. and Mrs. McArthur and family of three daughters and two sons came to this town from Ontario, Canada, in the spring of 1883, and since their residence here she has shown herself to be a good and true wife, a devoted mother, and a true christian woman in every way.

It has been rumored for some time that John Labree, of Thief River, has left for parts unknown. He is under $1,000 bonds to appear at St. Paul next June to answer to the charge of selling liquor to the Indians, but it looks as if he didn't intend to show up.

The new station agent, Mr. J. S. Briggs, who is to take the place of W. B. Pease, arrived yesterday. Mr. Pease left on the same train for his old home in Illinois, where he will spend his vacation of one month. He will take his new station, Michigan City, about March 1st. We all hope that Billy will be as successful there as he has been here.

A man calling himself Golic Nelson, was arrested by constable Patterson last Friday on the charge of obtaining money and wheat on false pretenses. His plan was to hire a team and go around the country and ask farmers to give him some money or wheat for a sick man in the Thirteen Towns. He seemed to be very successful as he sold two loads of wheat at the elevator here that he had collected in that way, but instead of sending the proceeds to a sick man he spent it in the saloons. He was examined before Judge Morgan and in default of $600 bail was taken to the county jail to await the June term of court.

FLAX GROWING.

From Experience in Beaver Creek Valley, Minnesota.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Assuming the object to be to obtain the best results, as to both quality and quantity, first, if your ground is old, before plowing, give it a good coat of barnyard manure. Plow it well under at a depth of not more than four inches. Also, in plowing, be sure not to turn a wider furrow than your plow does properly cut—say, for example, that a sixteen inch plow should not be allowed to take more than fourteen inches of land to the furrow. Observing that rule, you have your land all plowed, ready for the harrow. A smoothing harrow is far the best for working the under surface of the land. Your land should be made free from lumps and hollows. Go over with the harrow from two to four times, and if your seed bed is not then smooth and level, you should go over the ground enough more times to make it smooth. In harrowing your land, cross harrow every other time, or, in other words, you should not harrow the same way twice. Your ground being ready for the seed, take the shovels off from your seeder and go to seeding. If your seed is of the large kind, you should sow twenty quarts to the acre; if of the small kind, twenty-four quarts to the acre. The small seed is not profitable to sow, for its yield is not more than half as much as the yield of the large variety.

Having finished sowing, take your smoothing harrow and harrow the ground once over carefully, so as to be sure that you leave no spot unharrowed. Always harrow crosswise from the way you sowed your flax. This is for fall plowing. For spring plowing work your land just the same, with the exception of harrowing. You should keep your fresh plowed land well harrowed up, even with the plow.

Sow your flax seed in the spring, as soon as the ground is fit to receive any other kind of seed or grain; but it may be sown with good results up to the 10th of June. Here in this valley I know of flax seed that was sown as late as the 15th of July, and gave a very good yield; but it is not best to sow so late in the season, for the seeds do not all get ripe, the straw does not mature, and the frost has to ripen the seed. I have heard that frost-ripened flax seed does not grow good.

This last season I sowed forty acres of breaking to flax seed. I sowed it between the 18th and 28th of June. There was not moisture enough in the sod to sprout the seed and it lay in the ground until about the 15th of July; then came a good rain, and with favorable weather afterwards, the flax seed sprouted and came up and grew well. I cut it the last of October and threshed it the first of November, and had eleven bushels of good clean seed to the acre; while upon thirty-seven acres of corn stubble land (spring plowed, without any manure) I averaged nineteen bushels to the acre.

There is a great difference in the soil for this product. Some soil is not adapted to flax raising, say, a soil that is very heavy and very sticky when wet by too much rain—such as is sometimes called "gumbo"—will not produce good crops of flax seed. The best soil for flax seed I ever saw is this Bevera Creek soil, a very dark gray loam, with a clay subsoil, and gently rolling. As to this Beaver Creek region, let me say, it is not very thickly settled as yet. There is, say, fifty per cent. of the land owned by speculators, men living in the East, and who never intend to come here to work their land. It can be bought for from $10 to $15 per acre, and some for less, with long time. There are not many improved farms for sale except those owned by these speculators. Improved farms can be bought for from $15 to $20 per acre, with long time if desired.

P. A. WELCH.

Beaver Creek, Minn., Jan. 1885.

FARM NOTES.

Farm, Stock and Home.

One of the most prosperous farmers in Northern Minnesota is responsible for the statement, that to-day (Jan. 17th, 1885,) there are harvesters, seeders, plows and other farm implements in Minnesota and Dakota, standing in fields without cover or protection, that would represent in money over one-half million dollars. If this is the true situation, is it due to the absence of material or means to provide protection, or is it laziness? Farmers! if you would thrive, protect your implements; save your money.

How many farmers are there who read this, that could tell us how much it costs them per day to feed their stock? Again, how many of you can tell us the profit you have make after selling ten pounds of butter at 20 cents per pound? In this connection we want to say: If the merchants of our country were all to conduct their business in as unbusiness-like manner as the majority of our farmers do, it would drive three-fourths of them from the commercial world within twenty-four months.

A good cow should not be fat, even when not giving milk. Her sides should appear fat, but rather by the deepness of her body than by its narrowness. Her head should be small, neck thin and flat, and chest deep. In a very young heifer it is impossible to decide what her bag and teats will be, but an animal that shows these three points is worth saving and trying as a cow. One that has a round body and a coarse, bull-shaped head will be worth more for beef than for milk.

One of the largest, if not the largest, importers of cattle in this State, says he can winter, under the same conditions, six head of blooded stock on the same amound of feed that it takes to winter three head of natives; and then, the full blooded stock will be in better order in the spring than the three natives.

IMPORTANCE OF METHOD.

No greater element of success can be introduced into the habits of the agriculturist, than a strict, methodical manner of conducting the business of the farm; and no deficiency will more largely detract from his prospect of success, than a lack of method. The contrast between the man of method and the man without, is vivid in the extreme. The business affairs of the one are in all manner of forms and conditions, save in a prosperous form; while those of the other are, in sailor parlance, "snug trim and all ataut." The contrast in prosperity and general enjoyment of life is fully as great as in the externals of business affairs. The successful management of a farm requires a vast amount of care and attention, a close oversight; in short, an incessant watchfulness. There must be brought to the task no insignificant quantity of the most multifarious talents, and they must be steadily and sturdily exercised. The details of farm management are of the most extended and complicated character, and can by fully and successfully compassed but by the active exertion of a disciplined and educated mind, which must call out its full resources, not forgetting the systematic arrangements for labor and skill. "A place for everything and everything in its place" is an old saying, but it should be added, that the place be under a shelter. The farmer who lacks method has many places for everything, and far too frequently places of full exposure to the vicissitudes of the weather. The loss consequent upon such exposure is no small item in the year's account, and the loss of time, though too little heeded, will often engulf the year's profits.

CLEAN STABLES.

There is possibly no more repulsive sight than a filthy cow-stable, and one in which dairy cattle are housed is especially offensive. It has been demonstrated that cows that are neglected in this respect fail to yield a perfect flow of milk, and it is reasonable to suppose that such is the case. The richest of food may be given them, but if their condition in the stall is neglected, they will not thrive. The foul odors of a filthy barn must necessarily permeate not only the animal's hide, but it has been proved that the meat of stall-fed steers, that have been fattened under these circumstances, will, when put upon the block and cut up, taste of the stable impurities. It would seem, therefore, that owners should appreciate the force of the old adage that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and beyond the fact that they are enabled to receive additional profits by closely watching their stock and providing clean quarters for them, advance even one step higher, and from the standpoint of the humanitarian at least treat their stock with common decency. City consumers often detect to a greater or less extent the presence of the barnyard odor in their milk. Barns for the accommodation of dairy cows should receive the same care as those devoted to the average horse. Their health depends largely upon their surroundings, and reeking piles of manure, with the foul air which naturally arises therefrom, are not conducive to health, nor is it possible under these circumstances to furnish good pure, wholesome milk.

SAVE THE CALVES.

The season of the year is near at hand when the calves will commence coming. We wish we could impress upon every farmer the necessity of raising all of his calves, instead of disposing a portion or all of them to the butchers. It is true that a ten dollar bill looks like a pretty good price for a calf five or six weeks old, but even at these figures, there is money in keeping them until they are two, or three, or four years old. The more calves we raise on the farm, the more stock we shall have, and in these days of diversified industry, stock pays about the best of all of our industries. It is a universal complaint over the whole continent, that at this time there is a lack of stock. For the past few seasons parties from the South and West visited every nook and corner of Minnesota, and purchased every yearling and two year old they could get hold of. This fact makes it the more necessary that farmers should raise their calves this year. No matter if they are indifferent ones, don't let the butcher have them for veal. Make out in dollars and cents all the money there is in them. Their growth is worth more to farmers than money at interest. It will be only two or three years before they will be fat bullocks, or cows giving milk. Depend upon it, there is money in raising calves.

MAKE BETTER BUTTER.

We are well aware that there is a good deal of good butter made in the Northwest, but there is, too, a good deal of butter annually made that is not so good. There is no earthly reason why Minnesota and Dakota should not excel in the product of good, first-clall butter. The cows are healthly, the food, both summer and winter, for the cows, is plenty, the water is good they drink, the climate is favorable, and there is no reasonable excuse for the making of a solitary pound of poor butter. It is true that there must be proper facilities in order to accomplish the manufacturing of good butter. Butter is the solidified oil or fatty matter of the milk. It is necessary that the latter, during the summer months, should be placed in a cool cellar or a cool milk house. It is equally as necessary, that the utmost neatness should be observed, not only in milking the cows, but in handling the milk. Every utensil used should be perfectly fresh and clean. In fact, the great secret in making good merchantable butter is neatness. The introduction of the creamery system has greatly improved the quality of butter in the West. Many private daries have learned to make a good article, through the influence of the creameries, and it is not too much to expect that this influence will continue, which, with other combinations, the day is near when all of our butter will be good.

Warmth makes milk; frost shrinks it. Factory men know this. The cow should, therefore, never see a frosty night; should never know there was any bad weather. He formerly gave his cows little attention until calving, but had learned better. They should not be exposed to the weather at all, whether in milk or not.

'ROUND HOME.

Burt Bivins has taken possession of the Truax residence and is now living at home.

Services will be held in the Norwegian Lutheran church by Rev. A. C. Anderson, at 7:30 p. m. on Sabbath next.

The masquerade at the opera house on Saturday evening was well attended and a very fine affair.

Sheriff Zwickey is expected home next week. He reports that New Orleans is a no 'count place anyhow—a good place to leave.

A private letter from representative Canning reports wheat matters satisfactory in the House but expresses doubt about the action of the Senate.

J. M. Palmer was down from Angus last Saturday to present his wheat case before Senator Steenerson. The case occupied most of the time Saturday and Monday.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

"While the cat is away the mice will play" or in other words while Zwick is taking in the big show at New Orleans, Ed Charbaneau and Dennis Dwyer are filling his shoes with grace and dignity.

The little folks are anticipating a big time at their masquerade party at the opera house to-morrow evening. We know what lots of the little maskers are going to represent but we are not going to give it away. Go and see for yourself.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

Mr. W. Leman, of Angus, was in the city on Saturday, as a witness on the Palmer wheat case. He has for some time been known as the only Democrat in Angus and he now contemplates going to Washington to witness the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March next.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

On Friday last Mrs. Maggie Dalbeck, nee Broulard, died of consumption at the age of nineteen years. Mr. and Mrs. Dalbeck had been married less than two years. The funeral was attended on Saturday by a large number of the friends and relatives. The remains were interred in the new Catholic cemetery.

C. P. Steele, the man who used to st——, we came very near saying "buy"—wheat of the farmers at Angus in '83, was down from Winnipeg on Saturday to show cause why Pillsbury & Hurlbut should not pay J. M. Palmer for the excessive dockage of fourteen pounds per bushel. From what we heard of his testimony we should say he might as well have stayed in Winnipeg for all the good he did.

Hack & Gallasch are selling at cost to make room for spring stock. For bargains call on them. 33tf

Senator Steenerson was appointed arbitrator in the Palmer wheat case and came up on Saturday last to take the testimony in the case. We expected to have got the papers in the case, but the time was so far consumed that Steenerson did not have time to give us a copy. He rendered his decision but did not say what it was, but we infer from what we heard of the testimony, that Mr. Palmer will get some remuneration for his loss. We expect to get a full report of the case next week.

Flannels, 54 and 56 inches wide, in all the new shades, reduced from $1.00 and $1.20 to 75 cents, at the New York store. The nett cost on these goods was 85 cents.

The Lake Park railroad has withdrawn its proposition to Polk County, for the present, for good and sufficient reasons. We believe the Brainerd road is on deck yet with its proposition for $200,000. On general principles it is always best to go slow on these propositions to incur large indebtedness but there are cases wherein such a proposition as this would be of commensurate importance to pay. For instance. It now costs from 21 to 23 cents to lay our wheat down in Minneapolis, St. Paul or Duluth markets. If this road should give a good and sufficient guarantee to deliver our wheat at those points for say ten cents per bushel, and return all of our incoming freight in like ratio, it would pay for the county to entertain their proposition. This, we understand, they do not and cannot do. We cannot see wherein this road, running only to Brainerd can bring the desired relief we need but we can see wherein this present proposition can be of incalculable damage to the county if it should be the means of preventing operations being commenced on the Duluth & Winnipeg road, which road, we are told, have now got their matters so shaped that it is their intention to resume work early next spring. It seems to us that if Polk County is going to help any road it should be that one which connects her directly with the head of navigation, (and everybody knows we mean Duluth.) The D. & W. road have already several miles of roadbed graded, own valuable frontage at Duluth and would be by far the most valuable road to this country. But the Brainerd road has not said what she does want yet and we shall wait till we see what she does propose to do anyhow.

Eiken Bros. have made arrangements to handle sash and doors and building paper. They have ordered a carload which is daily expected.

Ben Clements has just received another carload of goods which is not very remarkable (for him) as he is doing that sort o'thing almost every day.

Gaze upon Ben Clement's ad and go and see what he will do. When a man talks big that way there is some meaning to it. He is prepared to do just what he advertises.

John Loo has received intelligence of the final decision in his contest case. He has for some time been after a quarter of Section 12 in Crookston township and by this decision his right to go on and become an honest granger is declared. He will doubtless build and go to farming in the spring.

The St. Paul Globe, whose double-barrelled ad appears elsewhere seems to have lost none of its newsy qualities under the new administration. Mr. H. P. Hall, who retired on the 1st of Feb. was one of the hardest working publishers in the business and had succeeded in placing the Globe foremost in the ranks of live newspapers and his successor, Mr. Baker must be a good one if he sustains its reputation. It looks like he is doing it.

It is rumored that Camp & Walker intend to move their Minneapolis saw-mills to this city in the spring. We are informed that they have been offered ten acres on one of the Additions and probably accept. This enterprise is significant of the future greatness of our city and far reaching in its results. Should this be all it would cause our population to be double in a few years time but it is not all. It will result in making Crookston a great manufacturing centre and will call in other large enterprises which will give us such a substantial boom as we have never had before. Notwithstanding the dull times everywhere else prevailing, Crookston never had so bright prospects as she has at this time. She is bound to come to the front as a manufacturing point and that at an early day.

Grand Forkers are talking oil-mill and rope manufactory. Why would not this be a fruitful subject of conversation for the Crookston Chamber of Commerce to consider? Is there a place in the whole valley better adapted to either or both enterprises than Crookston? We have before shown, in the vast amount of binding twine consumed here, the importance of a twine manufactory and should an oil mill be erected here it would stimulate the raising of flax. If farmers could dispose of their flax straw also there would be more flax raised and, of course less wheat. There is no place that offers greater natural advantages for these enterprises and we feel assured that the right parties would here receive such encouragment as they could not well refuse to overlood. "There's millions in it!"

The place to buy remnants is at the New York store.

Euclid Items.

From the Olive Leaf.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Lucken are charged with the parentage of a 13½ pound infant.

Our winter took a fresh hold on the 9th and hangs on well.

Almost everybody living in this part of the country have given a birthday party this winter, and still there's more to follow.

The editor took in the opening of the Warren Roller Rink last Wednesday night. There was a large crowd of skaters and spectators present. A lady and gentleman from Crookston were the only good skaters there. What the others lacked in skill they made up in energy, and the floor (part of the time) looked like pictures we often see of battle-fields.

Another party next week at the Keystone farm.

At the last meeting of the Literary Society the committee on program announced the following exercises for the next meeting. Every member shall sing a song, tell a story or pay a fine. Several of the members have already been bribed and others threatened with personal violence if they follow out the program.

Saturday afternoon some excitement was caused by a horse race between Si. Mead's runner and Thos. Teal's plug. Mead's horse won the race and now every farmer in the country has a running horse that he wants to pit against the winner.

Not much wheat being marketed here at present, but plenty of oats and barley for sale in this vicinity.

This part of the country is being flooded with cards from Peasey, Wheeler & Co., of Minneapolis, who promise to make lots of money for their patrons if they can send a few dollars to P. & W. to be invested in wheat margins. This is a little too late in the season for fish.

Deputy Sheriff Dwyer was in the city on business last Tuesday.

Rev. J. P. Sollell preached the funeral sermon of the late Mrs. McArthur last Sunday. There was a large attendance and an excellent sermon.

Chas. Misner is making preparations to move out on his farm next spring. He is tired of city life and wants to be a granger and with the grangers stand, a horny-handed mossback, and raise No. 1 Hard for fifty cents per bushel.

Lenten Regulations for the Vicariate Apostolic of North Minnesota.

1. All the days of Lent, Sundays excepted, are fasting days of obligation, on which but one full meal is allowed.

2. The use of flesh meat is allowed, by Apostolic dispensation, at the principal meal only, on all days except Wednesdays and Fridays, and also Saturday of the second or Ember-week, and the last four days of Lent. (Those who are exempt from fasting may oftener than once partake of flesh-meat on days not enjoining abstinence.)

3. The use of eggs, butter, milk and cheese is by custom allowed throughout Lent, and also the use of lard instead of butter for cooking, though on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday lard is forbidden.

4. Fish and flesh-meat are not permitted to be used at the same meal.

5. A collation or repast may be taken in the evening, but it ought not to exceed the fourth part of an ordinary meal; and a cup of coffee or tea, mixed with a little milk, may be taken with a small slice of bread by those that need it, in the morning.

Besides Lent, there are during the year, the following days of fasting and abstinence:

1. Wednesday, Friday and Saturday in every Ember-week.

2. The Virgils of Pentecost, of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, of All Saints' Day and of Christmas, on Saturdays during the octave of St. Peter and St. Paul App. fasting and abstinence is recommended.

3. All Fridays during the year are days of abstinence from flesh-meat; on Saturdays the use of flesh-meat is allowed again for this year, by Apostolic dispensation, except that in case a fasting day falls on Saturday.

All must consider themselves as strictly bound to this fast; those only are exempt from fasting (though not from abstinence) who are under the age of twenty-one, and such persons as are sick, infirm, convalescent or otherwise of a delicate constitution and whose strength is impaired by old age, nursing, or by hard labor. Such as are seriously sick are also exempt from abstinence. Those who entertain any reasonable doubt about their obligation to fast or to abstain, ought to have recourse to their respective pastors for advice or dispensation.

Given at St. Cloud, on the 8th day of February, in the year of our Lord, 1885.

RUPERT SEIDENBUSCH, Bishop.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet at the residence of Mrs. P. A. Dufour next Friday afternoon, at three o'clock. It is hoped that the ladies of Crookston will become interested in temperance work.

MRS. R. J. STANTON,
Sec. and Treasurer.

Notice !

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of this Board that there are in the public schools of this city some cases which, if not soon attended to by parents or guardians will develope into Itch—a decidedly unpleasant and staying malady, it is earnestly hoped that each person whose childeren or wards attend the schools and have symtoms of this contagious disease, will give their respective cases prompt and energetic attention.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, Pierre Dulude, as mortgagor, did on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of July 6th, A. D. 1881; whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The south half of the northwest quarter, and the south half of the northeast quarter, of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west, of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of three hundred and twenty-five dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgager to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881 at 2:45 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "B" of mortgages, on pages 87, 88, 89 and 90; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and fifty-eight and 10-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of July, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of three hundred and seventy-seven and 40-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. [illegible] appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammoned, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and [illegible] recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postofice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated February 18th, A. D. 1885.

THOMAS A. HAMMOND, CHARLES E. BUSH, THAD M. CHAPMAN, Administrators of the estate of John L. Hammond, deceased.

CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS.

The Houses of Congress, in Joint Session, Count the Votes for President and Vice President.

The Ceremony Proceeds Without Excitement, and Cleveland and Hendricks Are Declared Elected.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—In the house to-day, at a few minutes before 12 o'clock, the speaker pro tem. requested the members to clear the first two rows of seats for the accommodation of senators. At precisely 12 the senate of the United States was announced, and headed by Mr. Edmunds and the officers of that body, the senate filed in and took the seats assigned them, the president of the senate seating himself by Acting Speaker Blackburn. Senator Edmunds, in calling the assembly to order, said:

The two houses of congress have met in pursuance of the constitution and laws and a concurrent resolution for the purpose of executing the duty required by the constitution and laws in the matter of counting the electoral vote for president and vice president of the United States, cast by the electors of the several states, for the term commencing on the 4th of March, 1885. The tellers appointed by the two houses will please take their place.

Senators Hoar and Pendleton and Representatives Clay and Keifer having taken their places at the clerk's desk, Senator Edmunds said:

The president of the senate will open the certificates of the several states in alphabetical order and now opens the certificate for the State of Alabama. He hands the chairman of the tellers on the part of the senate the certificate from Alabama received by mail, and to the chairman of the tellers on the part of the house of representatives the certificate received by messenger.

The certificate was read by Senator Hoar and announced ten electoral votes for Grover Cleveland for president and ten electoral votes for Thomas A. Hendricks for vice president. Senator Sherman asked unanimous consent that only operative parts of the certificates be read, the formal parts being inspected by the tellers. This was agreed to and only the statements of votes cast read.

The certificate from New York was read by Clay of Kentucky, and as some vague rumors were in the air this morning that trouble would be made over the counting of the vote of New York, a murmur of relief went up when Mr. Clay finished the reading and announced that the certificate of electors was certified by Grover Cleveland, governor. A slight manifestation of applause was promptly suppressed by Senator Edmunds, who ordered the sergeant-at-arms to arrest any person who disturbed the order of the proceedings by applause or other manifestation. Senator Edmunds then rose and said:

I have now opened the certificates of the electors of all the states, and their votes have been reported. The tellers will now make their computation and report the state of the vote.

After the tellers had devoted themselves to figuring for several minutes Senator Hoar read and handed the result of their computation to the presiding officer, who said:

Senators and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: The tellers have reported to the presiding officer the state of the vote, from which it appears that Grover Cleveland of the State of New York has received 219 votes for the office of president of the United States, and that James G. Blaine of the State of Maine has received 182 votes for the same office; that Thomas A. Hendricks of the State of Indiana has received 219 votes for the office of vice president of the United States, and that John A. Logan of the State of Illinois has received 182 votes for the same office. Wherefore, I do declare that Grover Cleveland of the State of New York has received the majority of the votes of the whole number of the electors appointed, as they appear in the certificates read by the tellers, and so appears to have been elected president of the United States for the four years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1885, and that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana has received a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed as they appear in the certificates read by the tellers, and so appears to be elected vice president of the United States for the four years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1885, and the president of the senate makes this declaration only as a public statement in the presence of the two houses of congress of the contents of the papers opened and read on this occasion, and not as possessing any authority in law to declare any legal conclusion whatever.

THE CANADIAN POSTOFFICES.

OTTAWA, Ont., Special Telegram, Feb. 11.—Postmaster General Carling laid on the table of the house this evening the annual report of his department. Mail travel has been increased by about one million and a half miles. The conveniences of remitting by money orders has been extended between Canada and other countries. There was a general increase of business both domestic and foreign. The report states that the time has arrived when a postoffice savings bank can be be established in Manitoba. The expenditure was upward of half a million more than revenue. The postmaster general states that as regards a letter passing between the United States and Canada, a uniform charge would, no doubt, be acceptable to Canada, but he was of the opinion that doubling the rate on newspaper matter would exclude from the newspaper post many classes of matter now included therein. The registration fees would have to be reduced to 10 cents and drop letters to two cents. All these changes would be necessary to harmonize the Canadian with the United States rates, and would not be satisfactory to the public of this country.

Hendricks Hits the Pipe.

Kingman L. Page, who was in Paris last summer when Mr. Hendricks was there, tells me that they went together on a trip up the Seine, and stopped at a landing where there was a shooting gallery. As they sat in a booth lazily watching the marksmen fire at the heads of clay pipes at a distance of four rods, Mr. Hendricks suddenly said: "I wonder if I couldn't do something at that; it's a long time since I tried my hand, but I used to be a fair shot." Going over to the range, he picked out a rifle and fired shot after shot until he had broken seven pipes in succession. "There," said he, "seven's a lucky number; I'll quit while my score is good."

COLLEGE ORATORY.

BELOIT, Wis., Special Telegram, Feb. 11.—A state oratorical contest, in which there were speakers from the Beloit, Ripon and Milton colleges took place to-night in the First Congregational church. The speakers and their subjects were as follows: W. W. Lloyd, Beloit College, "International Relations"; L. C. Randolph, Milton college, "The Influence of a Life Purpose;" Miss Ida Owen, Milton college, "Longfellow's Evangeline;" H. B. Blair, Ripon, "Two Scenes in the Life of Charles Sumner;" W. J. Gray, Beloit, "American Puritanism;" G. S. Weiss, Ripon, "The Love of Truth." The decision was in favor of W. J. Gray of Beloit first, and G. S. Weiss of Ripon second.

The Valley City Church Row.

VALLEY CITY, Dak., Special Telegram, Feb. 11.—The church row seems to be settled for the present at least. The examination of Messrs. Root and Peake for interfering with the holding of services ended to-night by the holding of the defendants to the grand jury in nominal bail for trial before the district court. It is claimed that possession of the church will again be attempted by surreptitious means.

Dominion Legislation.

OTTAWA, Ont., Special Telegram, Feb. 11.—In the house to-day, Sir Tilley said the public debt on Jan. 1, 1885, was $253,789,146. The premier stated that the government had no intention of creating a divorce court. A motion for the better supervision and inspection of banks was voted down.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 12.—The senate, after spending two long executive sessions and the entire afternoon in a chaotic debate, passed the house bill to repeal the pre-emption and timber culture laws by 26 to 20. It is safe to say that no bill has been passed this session which is in a worse muddle and is less understood. The discussion to-day was on Palmer's amendment. This was simply the old and much-described Ontonagon land grant bill, which was successfully tacked on the repeal. The original bill is virtually the bill which Gen. Washburn got through the house two years ago. It was passed by the house last June. The amendment provides:

Whenever public lands have been withdrawn from sale by grants made to aid in construction of railroads, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of congress, executive order, or order by the land department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre and purchased in good faith or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the land department have issued certificates or patents in accordance with this purchase without such lands having first been proclaimed by the president and offered at public auction; and where on the 25th of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto or statements thereon, all such entries, etc., are confirmed and declared valid and legal.

Morgan amended Palmer's amendment so as to except two hundred or more settlers who have gone on the disputed lands in Northern Michigan and entered homesteads. The Palmer amendment passed by a close party vote. Senator Vest produced a sensation by reading a letter from a Michigan citizen, charging that the proposition covered a big steal, in which a few capitalists were interested. Senator Palmer, in a very temperate speech, denied the aspersion, but the letter produced a hub-bub for some time afterward. Commissioner McFarland says there are between 100,000 and 200,000 acres of land embraced in the Ontanagon amendment. The original entry men, having paid $1.25 for them, and having paid taxes in many cases for fifteen years, will now have their patents endorsed as regular. The senate amendments to the original house bill are numerous and sweeping—so much so that there is no expectation that they will be concurred in. The final vote was almost a strict party one, Edmunds being the only Republican to vote against the repeal, and Brown the only Democrat to vote in the affirmative.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The resolutions offered yesterday by Messrs. Ingalls and Hoar, relating to the electoral count, were, on motion of Mr. Hoar, referred without comment to the committee on privileges and elections.

A resolution offered by Mr. Sherman was agreed to, authorizing the president of the senate to appoint a committee of three senators to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the president-elect.

SENATE—The senate, in spite of strong efforts by Mr. Van Wyck to have the Texas Pacific land grant forfeiture bill considered, voted to take up the bill prohibiting the importation of foreign contract labor. This measure was debated at great length without action.

HOUSE—A bill passed amending the Pacific railroad act so as to authorize the construction of a road from Sioux City, Iowa, to Granger, Wyo. The senate bill regarding jurisdiction over the Yellowstone National Park passed. The postoffice appropriation bill was considered. The chair overruled a point of order against a paragraph allowing additional compensation to American steamships carrying ocean mails, and on an appeal the decision was sustained. Afterward, by a vote of 105 to 97, the house struck out the paragraph in question. An evening session was held for the consideration of private pension bills.

There was an animated discussion, during which the scandal over the Pacific mail subsidy in the Forty-third congress was referred to by Holman, Mills and Blount as a warning against affirmative action. Bayne of Pennsylvania made the decisive attack on the clause, charging the Democrats with utter incompetency and with being led by the agents of Jay Gould. When the vote was taken on the motion to strike out the subsidy advocates were paralyzed by the discovery that they were defeated and that their pet scheme was punched out of the bill.

SENATE.—The day was mostly devoted to the Indian appropriation bill. The provision for the payment of claims for Indian depredations was struck out.

The nomination of E. A. Kriedler, to be marshal of Montana, was taken up, and, at the request of Senator Cameron of Wisconsin, was laid over till Monday.

The house passed the postoffice appropriation bill to-day. The advocates of the steamship subsidy clause made the most determined efforts to overcome the adverse vote of yesterday in committee of the whole, but their efforts were unavailing. The principal objection to this clause was that the entire amount of the appropriation—$600,000—would be absorbed by the Pacific Mail Steamship company, in whose special interest it was charged the clause was drawn. This allegation was given color by the fact that Mr. Louderback, a prominent director of the company, has been here most of the winter nursing this scheme, and it was given further confirmation to-day by his presence in the corridor, surrounded by professional lobbyists and notorious strikers, all of whom were actively working for the subsidy clause under Louderback's orders. Considering the persistent and bare-faced operations of this Pacific Mail lobby it is creditable to the house that the action of yesterday in eliminating the subsidy clause was confirmed by an increased vote to-day. Many of those who voted against this clause are favorable to granting proper aid in the form of liberal compensation for carrying the United States mails, but in the case under review no benefit would have followed to the commerce of the country, and no additional facilities would have been furnished the postal service.

The paragraph of the bill which provides for the reduction of postage on letters, as passed by the house, reads as follows:

Upon all matter of the first class, as defined by the laws of congress declared subject to postage at the rate of three cents for each half ounce or fraction, postage shall be charged on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, at the rate of two cents for each ounce or fraction thereof, and drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of two cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter carrier offices, and one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where their delivery by carrier is not established.

The paragraph providing for the reduction of the rate on newspapers reads as follows, and forms part of the paragraph above quoted:

That upon all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of the said act, when sent by the publishers thereof and from the office of publication to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto or to other news agents, shall on and after July 1, 1885, be entitled to transmission through the mails at one cent a pound or fraction thereof, postage to be prepaid as now provided by law; provided, however, that publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of one cent for each four ounces or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto; and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second-class matter, are to that extent repealed on and after July 1, 1885, and any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

SEVENTY-FIVE years ago the first tomatoes grown in this country were cultivated as a strange and showy horticultural curiosity, in a garden in Salem, Mass. Forty-five years ago, or a little more, they began to be used as a vegetable in the season.

EXCITEMENT UNABATED.

That Remarkable Experience of a Rochester Physician Fully Authenticated.

Cleveland, O., Herald.

Yesterday and the day before we copied into our columns from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat an Chronicle, a remarkable statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and the next day we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the "Excitement in Rochester," caused by Dr. Henion's statement. It is doubtful if any two articles were ever published which caused greater commotion both among professional people and laymen.

Since the publication of these two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also one to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given to us as to the validity of the statements published. In answer thereto we have received the following letters, which add interest to the entire subject and verify every statement hitherto made.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor is received. The published statement, over my signature, to which you refer is true in every respect, and I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which snatched me from the very brink of the grave. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made, for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians, and friends. * * *

J. B. Henion, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 21.

SIRS: Acknowledging you favor duly received, we would say: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Henion are entirely true, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Foote, which you are at liberty to use if you wish.

H. H. WARNER & Co.

To Whom it may Concern:

In the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of December 31, there appeared a statement in the form of a card from Dr. J. B. Henion, of this city, recounting his remarkable recovery from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after several doctors of prominence had given him up, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. We are personally or by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we beleive he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally or by reputation well-acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of that remedy, whose commercial and personal standing in this community are of the highest order, and we beleive that they would not publish any statements which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

HIRAM SIBLEY, (Capitalist and Seedsman.)
W. C. ROWLEY, (ex-County Judge, Monroe Co.)
JOHN VAN VOORHIS, (ex-Member of Congress.)

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

There was published in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of December, a statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in its last stages, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I was referred to in that statement, as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured. The statement of Dr. Henion is true, so far as it concerns myself, and I believe it to be true in all other respects. He was a parishioner of mine and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine and would do the same again to any one who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

Gen. Wolseley telegraphs that Brackenburg reports from Dulka Island, about 70 miles above Merawi that Earle's attack was well planned and gallantly executed. It is expected the effect will be to open the way to Berber without further fighting. Earle was among the foremost in the attack and his fall was cause for deep lament from every officer and man in the force. He was killed on the summit of the hill, behind which the enemy was posted. At almost the same time, Lieut. Col. Eyre was killed. The English losses consist of Gen. Earle, Col. Eyre, Lieut. Col. Coventry and nine men of rank and file killed; four officers and twenty-one men were wounded. The English intended to continue the advance along the river by daylight to carry out Wolseley's instructions to Earle.

At Owensboro, Ky., R. Monarch & Co.'s distillery was burned. Loss, $80,000; insurance, $60,000.

Splendid Honors.

The public should note the fact that the only proprietary medicine on earth that ever received the supreme award of Gold Medal at the great International World Fair, Industrial Expositions and State Fairs is St. Jacobs Oil. After the most thorough and practical tests in hospitals and elsewhere, it has universally triumphed over all competitors, and been proclaimed by Judges and Jurors, including eminent physicians, to be the best pain-curing remedy in existence.

The news of Gen. Gordon's death, and of the hideous massacre of all persons in Khartoum who were suspected of any friendship for the English or their cause, comes to London as the crowning horror of the nightmare under which the British have been writhing for a week past. Luckily the bustle and parade of probably the greatest martial preparations that this generation has seen operate to distract the public mind from brooding overmuch on the tragic Nile catastrophe. In military circles the activity and excitement are immense. Outlying regiments are coming in to form a heavy garrison which England needs, or thinks she needs, at the present time and to replace the guards who are hastily preparing to embark for Suakim. The impending levy of volunteers brings the fact of the vastness of the enterprise home to the people and overshadows for the moment the Khartoum shock.

While a daughter of Mrs. Eliza Thomas, of Brooklyn, was cleaning out the pantry, she found an old teapot which she threw with other trumpery into the ash barrel on the street. Later in the day two Italians came along and overhauling the barrel found the teapot. Examining it, they discovered that it contained about $265 in gold, the hard-earned money of Mrs. Thomas, who had put it in a teapot for safe keeping. The gold was recovered from the Italians.

Personal Pointers.

An English lady recently refused to have her baby vaccinated with virus from the arm of a grandchild of Mr. Gladstone, as all her family were Conservatives, and she did not wish the taint of Mr Gladstone's Liberalism introduced into it.

Mrs. Mark Hopkins, who is building a magnificent mansion at Great Barrington, Mass., is warned by the Philadelphia Press that her house eventually will become a college, hospital or other public institution, "the almost invariable fate of great edifices in this country where estates are not entailed."

A daughter of the late General Robert E. Lee is spending the season in Washington. She wears, set as a pendant in California gold, three of the moss agate buttons which once were affixed to the black velvet coat General Washington wore when receiving in state. The coat and its buttons have always been preserved in the Custis and Lee families, to both of which Miss Lee belongs. She also wears a wonderful necklace composed entirely of the finest moonstones.

Myra Clark Gaines, about the year 1840, though the wife of a general in the army, was a peace advocate and lectured upon the subject in the Western cities. The Washington Star says: "Mrs. Gaines has in recent years been attended almost always by her son-in-law, Mr. Christmas. His tall figure, though somewhat bent, presented a rather odd contrast to her short, slight form. Her pinched old face, overhung with a mass of dingy, reddish hair, showed traces of many years filled with disappointment."

Patrolman Richard S. Eldridge of the Thirty-second Precinct, New York, the oldest policemen in that city and probably in the United States, has been placed on the retired list, and granted a pension of $600 per annum. He was born in 1798 and was appointed a member of the city watch in 1822. He claims to have been one of the four watchmen who stood guard at the Battery Wharf when General Lafayette landed there on his second visit to this country.

James F. Legate, who was made conspicuous in the St. John controversy, has figured in Kansas politics for a number of years. His home is in Leavenworth, where at various times he has carried on desperate battles with the redoubtable D. R. Anthony, one of the figures in Kansas history. The hatred between these two men has been of the most rancorous character and out of it grew other feuds, which resulted in several attempts upon Anthony's life. For the last four years a truce seems to have prevailed. About three years ago Legate left the Republicans to join the temperance crusaders.

An Offensive Breath

is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he have any pride, but to those with whom he comes in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, but it has parted not only friends but lovers. Bad breath and Catarrh are inseparable. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

An explosion in a Nova Scotia colliery resulted in the death of Thirteen Miners and the injury of others.

Especially to Women.

"Sweet is revenge especially to women," said the gifted, but naughty Lord Byron. Surely he was in bad humor when he wrote such words. But there are complaints that only women suffer, that are carrying numbers of them down to early graves. There is hope for those who suffer, no matter how sorely, or how severely, in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Safe in its action it is a blessing, especially to women and to men, too, for when women suffer the household is askew.

High Priced Butter.

Dairyman often wonder how their more favored competitors get such high prices for their butter the year round. It is by always having a uniform gilt edge article. To put the "gilt edge" on, when the pastures do not do it, they use Wells, Richardson & Co's. Improved Butter Color. Every butter maker can do the same. I have been a sufferer two years from catarrh or cold in the head, having distressing pain over my eyes. Gradually the disease worked down upon my lungs, my left ear was almost deaf, my voice was failing me. I procured one bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and within five days my hearing was restored, the pain ceased over my eyes, and I am now enjoying good health. I recommended it to some of my friends. One of them sent for a bottle. He told me that half of it cured him. My advice is to those suffering with catarrh or cold in the head not to delay but try Ely's Cream Balm, as it is a positive cure.—John H. Vansant, Sandy Hook, Elliot Co., Ky.

A Bold Counterfeit.

A Bold Counterfeit or Imitation of Dr. C. D. WARNER'S WHITE WINE OF TAR SYRUP and GERMAN HOP BITTERS is being sold in the Northwest. Beware of the dangerous imitations. The worthless stuff is sold to Druggists at $2.50 per dozen, or about 20 cts. per bottle, and they charge you 50 cts. The Genuine WHITE WINE OF TAR SYRUP and GERMAN HOP BITTERS bears the name of DR. C. D. WARNER on label and wrapper and blown in bottle. Take no other.

COMPENSATION.

Not faithful heart nor valiant hand
Wins always honour's guerdon;
Uncrowned, full many a hero falls,
Before the encircling cordon.
The patient delver in the mine
Its wealth may not discover,
And beauty's grace and tenderness
Repay not fondest lover.

Yet still the level balance waits,
Poised true by fate unswerving;
No perfect gift of heaven rewards
The recreant undeserving.
The tinselled baubles fame bestows
Are tarnished in the winning;
The goal attained through tears and pain
But mocks the grand beginning.

O soul that seest thy longed-for prize
Bestowed upon an other,
Be brave to bear thy sore defeat,
Thy grief and anger smother,
Nor back upon thy toiling years
Look with regret forever;
Thou hast the best that life can give—
The rapture of endeavour.

HIS LITTLE LOVE.

A snowy January afternoon.

Through the little window of the warm waiting-room we travelers saw the snow blowing across the whitened fields, and heard the sweep of the wind among the leafless branches and against the window panes.

A gentleman of about 30 stood at the window, one arm resting on a little shelf, and eyes bent on the girlish face beside him. He was not handsome, yet his was a face one would look at with as much or with more interest than if the features were as perfect as Apollo's own.

The eyes and mouth were full of power, the former very expressive, and, as he spoke now, full of easy quizzical regard:

"Are you afraid of me, Miss Marion? Do you think I shall prove a tyrannical or lenient guardian?"

"I am not the least bit afraid of you, sir!" the young lady called Marion answered in a cold, business-like voice, looking him in the eye.

"Not afraid? How strange!" he said, the smile around his mouth deepening.

"Do you generally inspire those who meet you, with awe, Mr. Vann?"

"I am a lawyer," he replied, "therefore blessed with second sight, of course. Not only do we judge by the outward evidence of the thoughts in a client's heart, but the inner working of the vital organ is an open book to us. Your thoughts now——"

He paused.

"Well," she asked impatiently.

"Are not flattering to me. You consider me an unmitigated bore, very cold and professional—not good looking. You long for school left behind in the south, where days like this were unheard of, and where the college students serenaded you and dedicated flowery sonnets to your beauty."

The girl flushed and darted a quick, angry glance at him from the dark eyes under the little tissue veil strapped across her nose.

"You are pleased to be sarcastic," she said, with a little sneer and shrug; "but of what matter is it? If it amuses you, sir, it amuses me infinitely more. I am not afraid of your satire, neither do I like you!"

Jerome Vann raised his brows in unfeigned surprise.

She was so petite, so childish in appearance in spite of her 18 years, and the open animosity was so novel. It was all refreshing and he watched her amusedly as she went to a distant corner and buried herself in a novel, to the complete exclusion of himself.

All he could see beneath the book was a pair of extremely lovely red lips, and these he watched steadily, scarcely aware of it. Five minutes passed, ticked slowly off by the clock in the empty waiting room, and a brown curl appeared above the rim of the book, then one curious and brightly angry eye, which met his gaze and disappeared like a flash.

Jerome laughed. He knew that by that outburst of mirth he totally lost all vantage ground with her, but he could not help it.

Still smiling, he walked slowly to her side.

"Do not freeze me!" he said, pathetically, holding out his hand; "we must be friends, you know."

"Not at all," she said, coldly. "I am absolutely sure that we shall never agree. Better begin as we shall surely end!"

"You dislike me?"

"I have said so," she answered, turning the leaf.

"And why? Because I have been unfortunate enough to have unwillingly offended you?"

"You have laughed at me. I do not know what name they give that in the North; but, in Virginia, we should call that unmannerly."

"If I have been so, Miss Romero, I sincerely beg your pardon," Jerome said, stiffly, and retired to the window, to whistle the "Exile of Erin," in most distracting discord, until the train puffed in.

* * * * * *

Jerome sat by the library fire, a cigar between his lips, his hands clasped idly, his eyes almost closed.

He was listening to a story which interested him.

A younger man was sitting by the fire, a cane in his hand, and his chin resting on the top of it. He was a very handsome young fellow, and the firelight, playing on his head, turned his hair to gold, and made the intense, earnest blue eyes seem black.

"I have loved her from the beginning," he said, slowly. "Through all the past months I have loved Marion silently; now I will tell her of it, with your permission, and learn my fate. Better ultimate rejection than this suspense"

"Ned Buffington, you love my ward?" Jerome asked, calmly, and no evidence that his heart was beating like a boy's could be seen in his face.

"You love her truly, you say?"

"I do! Upon my honor!" Ned replied. "That, surely, is not strange. Could a man, seeing her constantly, as I have done, not lose his heart to her?"

"You know, of course, that she was left a fortune?" Jerome asked again, in the same quiet way.

"I have heard so. Perhaps, indeed, it is the only thing to be regretted, for I love her and have abundance for both," Ned answered regretfully.

Her guardian stood up, and his face was very pale.

"It is no longer to be regretted. Marion has nothing! In the recent failure she lost it all?"

"All!" the young fellow echoed, and there was silence.

"Marion is very proud," Jerome continued.

"If she knew that she was not absolutely independent of my lonely bounty I believe she would not stay an hour longer beneath this roof. But, poor child, she need never know; at least, until after she has been married."

The deep, expressive voice ceased with a regretful ring, and then he concluded, more cheerfully.

"Go, and I wish you success in your wooing."

Ned wrung his hand and left the room, and in a very few moments Jerome followed.

For a while the fire glowed on noisily in the grate, the wind howled and the quiet remained unbroked; then the heavy velvet curtains were drawn back, and Marion stepped out from behind.

Her face was as pallid as a ghosts, her dark eyes were burning with fierce pride, and very angry her lips trembling with excitement and suppressed resentment.

"Great heaven!" she cried, with a passionate stamp. "What deceit! How often have I hurled the fact in his face that I was glad, infinitely, that I owed him nothing. He calmly heard me, knowing that it was a beggar's delusion he was listening to!" She paused and her flashing eyes turned on the chair he had lately occupied. "How he detests me, too," she said. "I have never tried to win his favor—we have never been friendly, and to think that for weeks past, or perhaps months, I have eaten his bread and spent his money, thinking it entirely my own. But it is over—I shall not stay. In the wide world there is surely room for me to earn my bread!"

She drew back the curtain and looked out. The stars were shining frostily, but the wild March wind was making havoc of every stray leaf and fragment in its path.

The streets were deserted. It was an unusually bitter night of that bulsterous month, a night when humanity keeps its head snail-like, in-doors, when the crackle of a good fire is the sweetest sound on earth.

Marion, with a little shiver turns away.

"I must go!" she muttered; "not another night will I stay here a beggar on his bounty. Old Mrs. Chaplin, though she is poor, will keep me for my mother's sake until I get something to do and pay her back." She paused a second by Jerome's arm-chair, and leaned her arm on the back of it. "I wish—I wish he did not dislike me so," she whispered, and the tears tempted the luster of her eyes. "It was my abominable temper at first, and now he is tired of me, and would gladly marry me to the first coxcomb that asks."

This mood only lasted a second, and all the old fierceness returned.

"But what am I doing?" she said, dashing away the tears and trying to control her quivering lips. "Do I not hate this man—this superior being who treats me as a child? Am I not glad by accident I learned the truth of my position? Certainly! Am I not delighted at the possibility of feeling independent, away from his benevolent smile? I am; and the time will come when Jerome Vann will wonder that he ever laughed at me or my vagaries."

All the warm Southern nature aroused, she went to the desk and began to write a note to this detested guardian.

"Sir," it dashed off, "ten minutes since I learned my position in your house, and it is such an undesirable one that I renounce it this night. You, who have disapproved of me so strongly, will no doubt be glad to learn that I have broken from your reins and fled. Good night and good by to you, sir.

MARION.

"P. S.—I distinctly and emphatically refuse to marry Mr. Buffington."

An hour later she was on the street, the wind blowing her cloak, and twisting her veil till it looked like a signal of distress.

There was nothing of the heroine about her as she hurried along, keeping on the darkest side of the street, her head lowered, and her tears dropping thick and fast. Poor Marion! The first touch of the world in which she stood alone, was cold and blustery. The weeks passed on by leaden feet. Advertisments and detectives were both of no avail, and Jerome Vann's face grew strangely old and sad, for Marion's whereabouts still remained a mystery.

He loved her far more than he ever realized. He longed to see that spirited, magnetic face again, and to hear the pert, merry voice which had made such drollery of his well-meant advice.

Day after day passed, each one an exact repetition of the preceding one, and all very weary, sickening blanks to the rich lawyer in his stately home.

It was June. Sunny, soft weather reigned in the city. Roses bloomed everywhere, in florists' windows, in market carts, in wealthy gardens—everywhere the fragrant bunches of different hued flowers waved in the breeze.

Jerome was standing at his library window, looking out at the throng of promenaders and open carriages dashing along. His eyes were no longer filled with suspense, they were far worse—they were calm and hopeless.

He had left nothing untried to discover her whereabouts, and it had all been worse than useless. He had been beating his heart out with pain, in alternate hope and failure, in passionate longing; and now all was over. Without any renewed vigor he was still deep in professional duties, trying, but vainly, to take up the thread of existence as though Marion had never been known and dearly loved.

He took up his hat and cane and went out. His steps led him to Broadway. The thoroughfare was crowded and he walked slowly along, his moody face, with its quietly bitter expression, in marked contrast to those around him.

Many saw and envied the rich and successful lawyer. Could they but have read that rich man's heart! And so, in the supreme blindness of our egregious vanity, do we judge one another.

He paused to look at a picture which attracted a number of people. It was a quaint design in water colors, in the shape of a small screen.

The picture showed the sea on a stormy day, with the floating spars and masts of a wrecked ship appearing above the angry waves in the distance. All the coloring of the picture is centered in two figures on the shore.

One, the dead body of a drowned sailor, curls lying on his forehead, his eyes closed, and his blue jacket torn, showing the powerful chest in which the heart would never beat again. The other, a young girl with a face of extreme lovliness, though convulsed with anguish.

Her dress denoted that she was a fisher lass, and as she bent over the body of her lover, one hand over his heart, the other holding on the little black hood she wore, the expression of her eyes was strangly real and touching. The subject was an old one, yet this little water-color sketch held a quaint, original power of its own.

Jerome looked at it, puzzled and fascinated. There was a strange resemblance in the man to some one he had known; nay, more. With wondering eyes he realized that it was a perfect likenes of himself.

He went into the store and bought it, at the same time obtaining the artist's address, and following the direction with feverish haste.

The house was a small one, in a street which the word "genteel" describes. On inquiring at the door for the artist who resides there, he was told to knock at the door at the end of the passage.

He did so, but, receiving no answer, opened the door, and found himself in a shabby, clean, unoccupied room. Jerome advanced hesitatingly, and stood on the threshold looking in as though his hungry eyes would never be tired gazing at the picture he saw there.

Marion, in a plain black dress, was sitting at an easel, the brush lying idle in her lap, and her eyes turned languidly toward the open window, through which the sunbeams were straying.

Her figure looked very slight, and out of the pale face her eyes shone with unhealthy luster.

She turned her head and saw him standing in the doorway. Without a start or a sound, or any change of feature except the tightening of her lips, she rose to her feet.

Jerome came forward and took the feverish, unresisting hand in his.

What would he say? In what words express the suffering of the past weary months? She was before him now, and the wild, impassioned torrent he had imagined bursting from his lips at this happy moment had completely deserted him.

When he spoke at last, the words were commonplace enough, but they covered the entire ground.

"I never thought to see you again, Marion; but I have found you."

"And you remember me so long?" she asked, with a flash of something like the old defiance.

The expression which came into his eyes answered her, and he took the picture from its wrappings.

"This led me to you," he said, with impressive tenderness, "and it also told me that you had remembered me so long."

Marion flushed and turned away, but she could not deny it. The proof was there.

Jerome drew her to his faithful heart, which had suffered many a bitter throb for his little love, and kissed her with solemn, heartfelt earnestness.

Thus peace was declared between them forever.

A week later they were married in Mrs. Chapin's little front room, and after a Canadian tour, Marion settled in the old house in a new character.

Condiments and Indigestion.

Cayenne pepper may be selected as a typical example of a condiment properly so called. Mustard is a food and condiment combined; this is the case with some others. Currying powders are mixtures of very potent condiments with more or less of farinaceous materials, and sulphur compounds, which, like the oil of mustard, of onions, garlic, etc., may have a certain amount of nutritive value.

The mere condiment is a stimulating drug that does its work directly upon the inner lining of the stomach, by exciting it to increased and abnormal activity. A dyspeptic may obtain immediate relief by using cayenne pepper. Among the advertised patent medicines is a pill bearing the very ominous name of its compounder, the active constituent of which is cayenne. Great relief and temporary comfort are commonly obtained by using it as a "dinner-pill." If thus used only as a temporary remedy for an acute and temporary, or exceptional, attack of indigestion, all is well, but the cayenne, whether taken in pills or dusted over the food or stewed with it in curries or any otherwise, is one of the most cruel of slow poisons when taken habitually. Thousands of poor wretches are crawling miserably towards their graves, the victims of the multitude of maladies of both mind and body that are connected with chronic, incurable dyspepsia, all brought about by the habitual use of cayenne and its condimental cousins.

The usual history of these victims is that they began by overfeeding, took the condiment to force the stomach to do more than its healthful amount of work, using but little at first. Then the stomach became tolerant of this little and demanded more; then more and more, and more until inflammation, ulceration, torpidity and finally the death of the digestive powers, accompanied with all that long train of miseries to which I have referred.—From "The Chemistry of Cookery," by W. Mattieu Williams, in Popular Science Monthly for January.

Increase of Population in Germany.

The German people, who were only 25,000,000 in 1816, are now 45,500,000, and their present rate of increase is greater than that of any European race. The population, which in France only increases by 26 a year for every 10,000 and in Great Britain by only 101, increases in Germany by 115, and this in spite of a vast emigration which, since 1816, has carried away 3,500,000, mostly young adults. There is no sign of suspension in this rate of increase, while there are signs that it is much to rapid for the country to support. The vast, flat, sandy, wind-swept plain which makes up so much of Northern Germany is not fertile; the artisans, though most industrious, find it difficult to dispose of their labor, and in 1882 the Prussian officials discovered that the number of heads of families who must be exempted from direct taxation because they were earning less than $125 a year exceeded 7,000,000, and what was much more formidable, increased with every year.

"I am sure there will be a change for the better in one respect in American dramatic art," remarked Henry Irving to a Pittsburg correspondent of the Tribune. "And that is in the formation of permanent companies which will in a measure replace the stock companies of six or eight years ago."

AN IDYL.

Bonny Nelly standing
At the open door,
Shapely shadow falling
On the sanded floor.
Young and fair is Nelly,
Yet her eyes are sad
Nelly's absent lover
Is a sailor lad.

Loving hearts will quiver,
Though no tempest blow
Gallant ships have foundered
When the breeze was low.
Sailor lads are fickle,
Changing like the wind,
Nelly's lover far away
May a sweetheart find.

Nelly, fie! thus doubting
Sailor lads are true;
I can see a gallant bark
Abreast the billows blue.
I can hear her anchor chain
Rattling o're her side
I see a sailor leap ashore,
Outstripping time and tide.

Nelly, woman, hasten,
Put on your freshest gown,
A sailor lad is coming up
The road that's from the town;
He's looking for a place he loves,
A little garden stile,
A little homely cottage door,
A little lassie's smile.

Oh, faithful sailor laddie,
A king might envy thee;
For such a welcome home as thine
I'd gadly cross the sea.

Flax Blossom in Free Press.

MY SHIP'S CARPENTER.

We were lying in the Penarth Dock, near Cardiff, after having completed that most disagreeable of operations, the taking in of a large cargo of coals, and were only waiting for the tide in order to pursue our voyage to Caen. I was pacing the deck, smoking the first pipe of peace I had enjoyed for some days, when I heard a disturbance at the accomodation-ladder which led from the ship to the quay, and in a few seconds a wild uncouth-looking creature with flashing black eyes and long matted hair came rushing towards me, followed by my chief officer.

"What's the row, Mr. Robbins?" I asked, as the stranger, panting and breathless threw himself at my feet.

"Can't make him out, sir—that I can't," replied the officer. "He's a Dutchman of some sort or other"—in the eyes of sailors all foreigner are Dutchmen— "and he comes aboard sayin' as how he wants to be taken on as a carpenter, 'cos he hears as how the Sunderland is a-goin' to a French port. We tells him as how we're provided; but he won't take no denial, and says he must see the cap'en."

"Well, my man," I said sternly, "what is it? We dont want two carpenters—isn't that sufficient?"

"Mon Dieu, Monsieur le Capitaine," the poor fellowed returned, having recovered his breath, "I have come for to go vid you as carpenter, or any mortal sing you like. I do not vant money—no, vill work for nosing; but I you pray to take me vid you, and, if you vill listen to me for von two minutes, I vill tell you vy."

There was something so tearfully earnest in his manner, and he looked such a pitable object, that I motioned the chief officer to go away, and bade the man say all that he wished. So he continued:

"I am a scaramouch, I know—I am dirty, I am in rags; but perhaps ven I tell you a leetle more, you may sink different of me. I come from Rouen, on ze Seine; I vas a ship-builder dere—me and my brozer. Ve vere not rich, but ve vere comfortable, and ve lived on ze Mont Sainte Catherine vid our only sister, zo pauve Jacqueline. She was fiancee to a lieutenant of ze Twelvse Regiment in ze Caserne at Rouen, and she vas going to be married in a few veeks, ven a friend of ours, an Englishman Monsieur le Captaine, fell in love vid her, and he ran off vid her, and me and my brozer has not seen 'zem since. And dis vas tree year ago, and ever since me and my brozer ve have been looking all over ze vorld fir him, and, if ve catch him; vy, den"—and the man looked almost fiendish as he spoke these words, and tapped significantly a formidable-looking knife which hung in a leather sheath at his waist—"vy, den ve shall kill him!"

"Who was he," I asked, "and what was his name?"

"His name was Curtis," replied the Frenchman—"Richard Curtis; a big man he vas—big of six feet, and he vas den ze captain of a ship."

This was strange, for the consignees of my ship at Caen were Richard Curtis & Co., and Dick Curtis, who answered to the description given by the Frenchman, had been an especial chum of mine, although I had not now seen him for some years.

"But, my friend," I said, "surely you are on a wild-goose chase! You might go all over the world for years without meeting him, especially as you say he was a captain."

"Yes, dat is drue," allowed the Frenchman; but I tink he has been sent at Rouen or somewhere near again, and I shall not rest until I find him."

Dick Curtis, I knew, had been a bit of a scapegrace in his youthful days; but I did not think he was the sort of a fellow to run off with a young French girl who was already engaged to another man. Still I was not going to run the risk of a vendetta at Caen, so I firmly told my supplicant that the ship's books were quite full, and that in no circumstances could I take him. He burst, Frenchman-like, into a torrent of tears and protestations; but I was inflexible, and he went away, looking the very picture of misery.

We got off by the evening tide, and were making good way, with the elements in our favor. I was on the bridge alone with the pilot and the man at the wheel. Suddenly in the gloom I saw a figure spring up the bridge-ladder, and the Frenchman stood before me. I was very angry at first, and swore that he should be imprisoned at Caen as a stowaway—for I was really a little anxious for Dick Curtis, as I had reason to know what a revengeful Frenchman meant; but the man was so profusely apologetic, and so earnest in his promises to do anything required of him in order to work his passage, that I relented and told him he might stay on board.

From that moment Alexis—that was his name—became my most devoted and faithful servitor, and, as will be seen, I never had reason to regret having taken him on. He acted fully up to his promises. My carpenter, a Portuguese, was the merest apprentice by the side of Alexis, who was not only thoroughly conversant with the duties of his calling, but was excellent sailor, willing, daring, and industrious, and a good fellow to boot. If I heard sounds of merriment proceeding from the fo'c'stle, I knew that Alexis was the cause of them. He could sing endless songs, he could play the fiddle, he could dance, he could tell the most amusing of stories in his quaint broken English, and in the most trying circumstances was ever ready with a jest or gibe. Of course no one but myself knew his secret, and I must say that it made me very uneasy—for, if Master Dick was not the hero of the escapade, it was one of the most extraordinary coincidences that ever came before my notice.

However, I pondered the situation thoroughly and made my plans. My life as a sailor had been singularly devoid of romance; but, sailor-like, my pet study was romance; so it was with mingled feelings of dread and pleasurable excitement that I looked forward to our arrival at Caen.

We arrived early on a Saturday morning; and, in spite of all the precautions I had taken, Alexis, in the bustle and confusion attendant upon making fast and warping alongside the quay, managed to get ashore before any one else. I lost no time in making my way to the office of Curtis & Co. Dick was there, developed into a portly family man since we had last met, and was delighted to see me; and, as may be imagined, in a very few moments we were talking of old times and exchanging experiences as only old chums can after a long separation.

"You'll come and dine with me, old fellow, he said. As it's Sunday, I don't suppose you'll begin to discharge. I've a nice little place just out of the town, near the race-course; and I'll introduce you to the misses and the youngsters.

"What! Married? I cried. "I should have thought you were the last man in the world to go for that sort of thing, for I know you were always so full of the rights of free unhampered man."

"Yes—married," he replied—"and to a Frenchwoman too; think of that!"

A pallor came over my face I could feel; I knew that what Alexis said was true; and that my old friend was the unsuspecting object of his vengeance. Dick saw the change.

"Why, what's the matter?" he said. "You don't think any the worse of me for having a Frenchwoman, do you? At any rate, you won't when you see her and judge for yourself, and when I tell you that she's the dearest little body in the world—far better than I deserved."

"No," I replied seriously, "I don't think any the worse of you for marrying a Frenchwoman. I'm not such a narrow-minded idiot as that for a good wife is a good wife, be she a Zulu, or a Frenchwoman, or anything you like; but——"

"But what?" said dick impatiently.

So I told him the story of Alexis; and in was his turn to grow pale.

"However," I said, in conclusion, "you leave it to me; it has caused me a lot of anxiety, and I have hit on a plan. But look there; I wouldn't show myself much in the streets to-day if I were you, for that fellow left the ship before I did, and is prowling about now with a knife as long as your forearm, and if he caught sight of you, why"—and I finished the sentence with a significant whistle.

"Anyhow," Dick said, "you'll be up by six o'clock?"

"Yes," I replied; "and don't you be about when I arrive."

So we parted.

I went back to the ship. To my surprise Alexis was on deck, waiting for me.

"Well," I said gayly, "have you found your friend?"

"No, sar," he replied; "I have look very carefully at all ze ships in port, but I can not see him. But I vill have a look ashore dis evening ven ze people come from church."

"And you mean to kill him if you do see him?" I said.

"Mon Dieu, Monsieur le Capitaine, but vat else can I do? He have insult me and my brozer and ze lieutenant and ze ole family! What else can I do?" he answered.

"Well, carpenter," I said, "I'm going to dine and sleep ashore to-night, and I want a hand to carry my portmanteau."

"I vill do it, sar, I vill do it; if you vish me to carry it to ze endl of ze vorld," he offered.

"Very well then; I shall be ready in half an hour."

At the expiration of that time I was on my way to Dick Curtis's house, Alexis following me with the portmanteau on his shoulder. We arrived at the house—a typical French bijou maison de campagne, standing within its own gardens, which betrayed their English ownership by their unusual trimness and neatness.

"Wait outside," I said to Alexis, and entered.

Mrs. Curtis—a pleasant-looking little woman, coquettishly yet modestly attired, a strange contrast to her ragmuffin of a brother outside—met me.

"I must introduce myself," I said, "as a very old friend of your husband's, and he has asked me to dine and to sleep the night here."

Madame in excellent English, assured me that she was charmed to see me, and led the way into a pretty little boudoir, overlooking the race-course.

"You may think it strange," I remarked, "that I have come here so much in advance of your dinner-hour; but I have something very important to tell you."

I said this seriously so that the little woman was alarmed.

"You speak so gravely," she returned, "that I fear something has happened; surely my poor Dick——"

"He is all right, I assure you," I interposed; "but he may not be all right unless we are careful."

"Explain yourself, monsieur, I pray," said Mrs. Curtis, with the tears standing in her black eyes—mild reflections of the fiery orbs of Alexis.

"Simply, madame," I answered, "your brother Alexis is here, and he is searching for your husband."

"Alexis!" repeated Mrs. Curtis, in a horrified voice. "Oh, he will murder us all—I know he wil, for he has such a fearful temper!"

"No, madame, he won't," I said, "if you do as I tell you. You have children; bring them down stairs, and meanwhile I will call in your brother. If his heart is not softened at the sight of your happiness and of your children, then he is not the man I take him for; for, although he vows revenge against your husband, he loves you dearly, and has often talked to me about you."

I rose, went to the door, and beckoned to Alexis.

"Alexis," I said; "there is a lady here who wishes to see you."

"A lady to see me sar?" exclaimed Alexis. "Mon Dieu, I cannot show myself to a lady, in dis cloze"—pointing ruefully to his stained and patched suit of blue jean.

"Surely you are not afraid of your sister?" I whispered.

At these words the poor fellow gasped his eyes started from their sockets, the portmanteau fell from his grasp.

"My sister!" he repeated. "Our Jacqueline?"

"Yes," I answered. "Now just listen to me. I have found out that your sister married an old friend of mine; she is perfectly happy and is the mother of two children. If I let you go in and see her, will you promise that——"

But, before I could complete my sentence, at a single bound Alexis had sprung into the house. I followed and found him with his sister, both of them alternately laughing and sobbing, trying to speak, kissing and embracing and holding each other at arm's length—in fact, behaving as foreigners generally do in similar circumstances.

"And you are happy?" said Alexis, when the first enthusiastic burst of greeting had subdued.

"Perfectly," replied his sister; "and my husband is the best man in the world; and see, Alexis—our children!"—pointing to the two chubby little fellows in sailor costume who stood somewhat timidly aside with their fingers in their mouths, doubtless revolving in their minds what possible connection there could be between their fashionably-dressed mother and the uncouth-looking stranger.

Alexis kissed the boys—much against their will evidently—and then, with a melodramatic gesture, started aside.

"But ze fader," he said; "ve have sworn to kill him, me and my brozer, if ve do meet him. I cannot break my oat; but I cannot kill him;" and, again kissing his sister passionately, he left the room.

Alexis has never left me from that day to this; and never during the whole course of our acquaintance has there been the smallest shade of difference between us. From time to time I have offered him promotion; but he has always remained and swears he will remain until he hears from his brother, My Ship's Carpenter.

A New Anecdote of Alexander H. Stephens.

Perhaps there never was a man so frail in body, but so full of humor as Alexander H. Stephens. We had to set up his great speeches before and after the war, made in the old Capitol of Georgia, and he always wanted to read his proof-sheets, not with great success either. He was a bad speller and a worse proof-reader. After his famous speech in Milledgeville, just before secession, he got the writer to bring him the proof-sheets to his room in the Milledgeville Hotel. We found him and his brother Linton alone. Mr. Alex. had a cane pipe-stem in his mouth, the pipe resting on the water stand, six feet to the front. As we entered he politely beckoned us to a seat, and invited us to take a pipe, shorter than the one he was puffing at. After a few preliminaries we remarked: "Mr. Stephens, this is the grandest effort of your life, but I can't see how you and Mr. Toombs can be friends, politically, any longer. I would be proud to be able to father such a speech as yours; it would send me to congress." Said Mr. Stephens in reply: "Young man, if you want to go to congress learn to sing some good songs. It has been my great misfortune to have no music on my tongue. If I could sing songs like 'Rack-back Davy, daddy shot a bar; shot him in eye-ball, never touch a har,' and 'Old King Cole,' and 'Clar de Kitchen,' etc., etc., I could be president of this probable disrupted nation." We were so amused at the pleasantry of the great man, and so lost to business, that we cut off an important paragraph on the proof-sheet to light our pipe, and had to get a duplicate.

Heavy City Expenses.

It costs a good deal of money to govern a large city. New York's budget for 1885 is $33,881,905, included in which is $3,583,000 which the city has to contribute to the state government. The total is $164,260 less than it was in 1884. One item of expense is $1,409,000 appropriated to pay a judgment for the Navarro water meters. The largest item in the appropriations is $7,681,000 for interest on its debt of $134,000,000. The next largest is $3,859,000 for schools; then come the items of $3,727,000 for the police department; $2,553,000 for public buildings; $1,709,000 for the fire department; $1,200,000 for street cleaning; $1,108,000 for asylums; $1,500,000 for charities; $952,000 for the judiciary; $766,000 for redemption of city bonds; $352,000 for the city courts; $213,000 for stationery; $469,000 for the health department; $849,000 for parks; $250,000 for judgments; $190,000 for election expense; $130,000 for the city college; $109,000 for collecting the taxes, with smaller sums for other purposes.

Statistics from a London Directory.

The population of London is sheltered by 550,000 dwelling houses, and the area of streets and squares embraces 122 square miles. Every day sees an average of 160,000 strangers enter the city, and 123 persons added to population; while each year 28 miles of new streets are laid out, and 9,000 new houses erected. There are 129,000 paupers, upon whom 10,700 police keep a close eye. The population includes 120,000 foreigners, more Roman Catholics than there are in Rome, and more Jews than there are in Palestine. Two thousand clergymen preside over 620 churches and 423 chaples, of which latter buildings the Independents have 121, the Babtist 100, the Wesleyans 77, the Catholics 90, the Calvinists 10, the Presbyterians 10. The number of cats kept by the people is so large (700,000) that "cat's meat" is daily delivered at the majority of the houses. The 8,000 horses which die each week are utilized to meet this demand.

An Indiana couple waited until the ages of 70 and 64 before making up their minds to wed, but, having come to that conclusion, they were so impatient that they rode thirty miles in a snowstorm to get to a clergyman.

Personalties.

Little Ned—"What did pa mean when he said sister Edith must stop getting surreptitious letters? What kind of letters is them?" Little Nell—"Why, don't you know, they is love letters. Her beau leaves them in a little box under the shrubbery and Edith gets them." Little Ned—"But why is they called that?" Little Nell—"Why they is called syruptitious 'cause they's so sweet you know—just like molasses."

Sergeant Bates has found a friend in need in the shape of an admirer, who has just left him a legacy of $13,000. The sergeant did not find "showing the flag" a paying business, and has lately been in extreme want, so that this streak of fortune comes in good time.

Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, is not married. When he first started for Africa he was engaged to a pretty New York girl, who wept over him for six months, gave him up for dead in a year, married another man within two years, and had a child before her plighted lover returned from the dark-browed continent.

Elbert P. Cook has disappeared from Havana, N. Y. He was a private banker—very private. E. G. Sackett, his partner, furnished the capital—said to be $40,000—and Cook the experience. It is thought that Sackett is "cleaned out" and that Cook is in Canada preparing to enjoy the ice carnival and make himself at home generally in the American colony of F. F's—fast fellows.

B. P. Shillaber, the venerable Mrs. Partington, is one of the few friends of the Rev. Adirondack Murray, who still has a kind word to say for that notorious backslider: "He is, as Father Taylor said of his son-in-law, Judge Russell, 'not much of a saint, but a sweet sinner.' The world has been too harsh with him."

The London Land Agent's Record says. "I have not heard what rent Lord Rosebery pays for Lansdowne House, but I should imagine not less than £2,000 a year, which I am told was the rent paid by Lord Palmerston for Cambridge House. The Duke of Abercorn is understood to have paid £1,500, and subsequently £2,000, for Chesterfield House. I imagine that these are the highest rentals which have been paid in London by the year. The highest weekly rent I know of was paid by Louis Philippe's widow for Chanceller House, Tunbridge Wells, fifty guineas a week, and the Duke of Abercorn paid forty-eight guineas for the same house."

John B. Gough, in his wild and dissipated youth, fell in love with a girl up in Vermont. She refused to marry him on account of his dissolute habits and gave her hand to a promising young lawyer of her native village. Gough reformed and became a celebrated temperance advocate. The lady's husband went to the war, where he acquired the vice of drinking. He came home, reformed and fell, reformed and fell again, and finally died a complete wreck, the victim of whiskey.

Mrs. Howgate, the wife of the fugitive Captain, says a Washington telegram to the Boston Herald, is keeping a small boarding-house in Washington, and Miss Ida Howgate, his clever daughter is an instructor in a military academy at Cleveland. About a year ago she passed a fine examination before the civil-service board of examiners, and was recently awarded a $1,000 position in the department under it but she declined it. She has made friends in Cleveland, and preferred to stay there.

An Albany correspondent of the Tribune tells a story about Mr. Tilden. He complained one day that his medicine hurt his stomach. "Oh, but, Mr. Tilden," said the physician, "the medicine is doing you a great deal of good." "I presume so, but I shall not take it hereafter." "I'm sorry to hear you say that; but if you are determined on this course I would warn you earnestly that you must stop using it gradually." "You doctors don't know everything. I quit using that medicine three weeks ago."

The Engineer's Story of the Brakeman.

Chicago Herald.

Several years ago I was running a fast express. One night we were three hours behind time, and if there's anything in the world I hate it's to finish a run behind schedule. These grade crossings of one-horse roads are nuisances to the trunk lines, and we had a habit of failing to stop, merely slacking up for 'em. At one crossing I had never seen a train at that time of night, and so I rounded the curve out of the cut at full tilt. I was astonished to see that a freight train was standing right over the crossing, evidently intending to put a few cars on our switch. I gave the danger whistle and tried to stop my train, but I had seven heavy sleepers on, and we just slid down the grade spite of everything I could do. Quicker than I can tell you the brakeman on that freight train uncoupled a car just back of our crossing and signalled his engineer to go ahead, which he did sharply, but barely in time to let us through. In fact, the pilot of my engine took the buffer off the rear car. Through that little hole we slipped and lives and property were saved. Now, that brakeman was only a common railroader, yet he saw that situation at a glance. There wasn't time to run his whole train off the crossing, nor even half of it—barely time to pull up one car length by prompt quick work. He kept his wits about him as, I venture to say, not one man in a thousand would have done, and saved my reputation, if not my life. He is now a division superintendent on one of the best roads in the country.

Ex-Vice President William A. Wheeler is living at his old home at Malone, Franklin county. He is wifeless, childless and sleepless, and said to be fast nearing his end.

Henry Worst of Fort Yates, who was found frozen a few days ago, died soon after. He was unconscious until death. He had relatives in St Paul, who have been notified.

HOW EDNA DECIDED.

A splendid June day, bright and breezy. Opposite the great square in its carpet of green, stands a large brown painted house with bow-windows and spacious piazzas, half shrouded in blossoming wisteria.

On one side is a croquet ground, and on the other a glimpse of a lovely old fashioned garden, green, cool, and shadowy, the mere sight of which is refreshing.

It is Sunday, and the people on their way to church. Most of those who pass this way are evidently of the elite, for the street is the fashionable one of the town.

As they pass the brown house, each looks up at the bow-windows, as if expecting to see there a face that they know.

But none is visible, though perhaps those whom they look for are nearer than they imagine; for at one end of the upper piazza, screened by the matted wisteria, are two young girls, dressed in thin slippers and white cool muslin scaques.

One of the girls is tall, fair, stately, and a trifle inclined to embonpoint. One can predict that at 40 she will make a very handsome and imposing woman.

The other is nearly as tall, but lithe and sylph-like, with a clear olive complexion, dark roguish eyes, and a face pretty and piquant.

"How pleasant this is!" she says. "I would not exchange with those people going to church."

"Nor I," says the other quietly. "I seldom go to church in summer."

"And Aunt Mary and Bernard—do they go regular?"

"As for Bernard, he seldom goes at any time—spends the day lying on the library sofa, reading. Mamma is generally an inveterate church-goer; but just now she is on bad terms with the new minister, and vows that if he don't resign she will join the other church. It is one of her whimsies."

"How odd!" says Edna, laughing.

"Oh, you don't know her! I forgot that you have not been here since you were a little thing of six years old. What a pity uncle should have his family so far away. We have been so cut off from each other."

"He had to do it, you knon, when he failed."

"Yes, dear, I know, and I have always felt very sorry for you. We, ourselves, live up to our income, and papa declares he will have nothing to leave Bernard and myself; but still we live in good style, and anything, in my opinion, is preferable to being a governess. How you must hate it!"

"Yes, indeed!" with a sigh. "and I dread the thought of going back to it. I have no aptitude for teaching. I like dress and gayety, and should like of all things, to be rich, and the mistress of just such a house as those two handsome ones opposite. Whose are they?"

"One—that handsomest of the two, with the greenhouse and fountain—is for sale. The other belongs to Mr. Derwent, one of our first lawyers. And by-the-bye, Edna, here is a chance for the realization of your wishes for Mr. Derwent is a rich widower, and, it is reported, on the lookout for a young wife. So don't fail to set your cap at him!" she added, in a tone half laughing and half earnest.

"Any children?" asked Edna, idly.

"One—soon to be married and go away. He must, of course, have a mistress for his establishment, for he is fond of entertaining and living in style, and——There!" she added suddenly, as the door of the opposite house opened, and a gentleman descended the steps, "that is Mr. Derwent! How do you like his looks?"

Edna bent a little forward for a sight of the rich lawyer.

He was about forty, and very good-looking, but stiff and precise.

Edna shrugged her graceful shoulders.

"I could never like a man who walks in that excrutiatingly-dignified manner," she said.

"Then I may congratulate myself in having never been remarkable for dignity of mien?" said a voice in the doorway behind them.

There stood a handsome young man, tall, dark, with a silky moustache, and steel-colored eyes under his dark eyebrows.

He sauntered up leisurely, and stood leaning against the balustrade, with folded arms, looking down upon the two girls. Edna blushed slightly as she met his gaze.

"Have you been eavesdropping?" she enquired saucily.

"No indeed! I came upon you quite unawares, heard a chirping and chattering as of many magpies, and thought—"

"Don't be impertinent, Bernard," says his sister serenely.

"I? Certainly not! And if my cousin Edna entertains the least idea of what you hint at, I am ready to go down upon my knees and ask pardon."

"Not here," said Edna, "on the piazza floor. I heard Aunt Mary complaining that it had not been swept for a century; and your immaculate white suit would suffer."

"Thank you for your solicitude on my account, but I have a soul above such low interests. Dress is nothing in my eyes."

"It is a good deal in mine. I love dress, and devote much of my time and thoughts to it. There, now I have told the truth," she added, laughing, "and will leave you to meditate upon the folly of womankind while I go and write a letter home."

And she airily tripped away while his eyes followed her to the door.

"Bernard," said Laura, "I want you to waylay Mr. Derwent and invite him to dinner."

"Very well. Why?"

"Because I've a plan concerning Edna. I saw him on Friday evening at the concert, gazing very admiringly at her, and I've thought——"

"Nonsense! If that's all I won't invite him."

"Then I'll get papa to do it," said Laura, rising and serenely walking off.

So Mr. Derwent came to dinner, and he talked very sensibly and cleverly, and paid formal and polite attentions to both Miss Laura Warden and her cousin.

And when, after dinner, the party adjourned to the drawing room, and Mr. Derwent, after a brief chat with Mrs. Warden, leaves the lady's side, and seats himself on the opposite end of the sofa occupied by Edna. Barnard takes up a book and studies the effect of the letters in an inverted position, refusing utterly to glance in their direction.

Edna, on the contrary, finds it difficult to not watch Bernard. She tries in vain to confine her attention to what Mr. Derwent is saying, and more than once answers absently, and hopes that Bernard will pity her and come to the rescue. And she finds it a great relief when at last the guest takes his departure.

"Well," says Laura as her father escorts the visitor to the front door, "how do you like him?"

"He's very nice," Edna answers with a sharp glance across the room, "and," pointedly "very agreeble!"

Bernard shrugs his shoulders and forces a smile of compassion.

"I should think, Bernard," his sister remarks, "that you might have paid more attention to Mr. Derwent, considering he was our guest."

Bernard flushes at this.

"What could I do with an old Methuselah like that?" he demanded indignantly.

"Old? He's only about 40," avers Laura.

"And so fine looking!" says Edna.

Whereupon Bernard throws down his book, taking his hat, thinks he will step over to the Ogilvies and ask Miss Bella to go to church in the evening.

And Edna declares that she has a headache, and retires to her room for a nap, and lies awake for a full hour, thinking.

She likes Bernard—likes him more and more every day; but Mr. Derwent is rich, and she knows by this time that she can, if she will, be mistress of that elegant establishment opposite. Oh, if I had never seen Bernard, how much easier for me it would be!

In the two weeks following, Edna sees a great deal of Mr. Derwent. The town in summer is gay with strangers, for whom parties and picnics, and entertainments of all sorts are got up; and at these Mr. Derwent and "that charming little brunette, Miss Edna Porter," are about the most conspicuous.

"Edna," says Bernard, stepping through the French window on the piazza; and taking a seat on the front steps beside his cousin, "have you promised to go to the party with the patriarch?"

The term he now generally applies to Mr. Derwent, who in the cool of the evening has stopped for a few moments to exchange some pleasant remarks with the young ladies, and has just left them.

Now Edna has been all day expecting Bernard to offer his escort to this party, and she feels vexed that he has not done so.

"If I have," she says sharply, "I don't see why you should want to know about it."

"It is none of my business now, certainly. I can only leave you to your chosen escort, and hope that you may have a nice time, and be benefited by his society and conversation."

"I don't see why I should not have a nice time in Mr. Derwent's society," says Edna still more sharply.

"Certainly, if it were a scientific lecture, for instance, or a funeral, or a murder trial; but for a pleasure party and dancing, don't you think a little—ch—incongruous?"

Edna gives him a severe look, and maintains a dignified silence. Laura comes hastily to the rescue.

"What will you wear?" she enquires.

"Blue, I hope," says Bernard quickly, and with an earnest glance at his cousin who looks up.

"Why," she asks softly. "Is it your favorite color? or do I look better in blue?"

"Oh, neither exactly; only"—he appears the least bit embarrassed—"only the idea occurred to me that I prefer to see ladies dressed in blue."

"Don't tell stories, Bernard," says his sister reprovingly. "You know perfectly well that you want Edna to wear blue because Mr. Derwent remarked just now that he admired white. Youv'e been evesdropping at the window."

Bernard scrowls at his irrepressible sister, and Edna colors.

"Of course, dear, you will wear white?" Laura continues coaxingly. "Mr. Derwent will expect it, you know."

"Indeed, I don't see what right he has to expect it," Edna answers with sudden asperity.

And Bernard's contracted brow clears again. He looks gratefully and almost tenderly down at the still blushing face beside him. But the girl plays with her fan, and will not look up.

On the evening of the party, in her own room, Edna spreads out two dresses side by side, and surveys them long and meditatively.

She twice takes up the white robe, but hesitates; and then she glances at Bernard's portrait which hangs beside Laura's over the little writing-desk in a corner.

From this she turns to the window and looks across at the handsome house opposite.

Oh, if only that house were Bernard's instead of Mr. Derwent's But had not Laura told her that her father had declared he would have nothing to leave herself and Bernard?

Down stairs in the parlor, the gentlemen are waiting.

A light step is heard on the stair, and both the gentlemen turn.

A graceful, sylph-like figure stands in the doorway, her eyes rather downcast as she pretends to arrange a refractory bracelet. There are crimson roses in her dark hair, and her dress is white.

"Mr. Derwent advances, looking pleased, and Bernard takes his hat and goes off alone to the party.

When Edna arrives she sees him in a bay-window, talking gravely with Miss Ogilvie—a handsome, intelligent-looking girl, and Laura's special friend.

"I had hoped," Laura had said to her cousin, "that Bernard would marry Bell Ogilvie. I know she likes him, and just before you came I thought he was just beginning to pay her some attention; but one never knows how to take Bernard."

After this affair of the white and blue dresses, Bernard is for some days rather cool and distant to his cousin.

Edna does not like it—her conscience perhaps reproaches her—and one day, standing in the low window, she places her hand lightly on his coat-sleeve, and says coaxingly:

"What is the matter, Bernard? have I offended you?"

He turns his dark eyes upon her without a word.

"I am sure I never intended it," says Edna.

He takes the little hand lying on his coat-sleeve.

"If you never intended it, Edna, I'll forgive it."

"Forgive what?" in innocent surprise.

But her color betrays her, and Bernard smiles as he says still holding her hand:

"You are no actress, little cousin, You know to what I allude."

"But, Bernard, that blue dress was—well, was really shabby, and you would not at all have liked to see me in it. And besides you know—Mr. Derwent had offered to escort me to the party."

"He's decidedly officions and frisky for his age," says Bernard dissapprovingly.

"Frisky! Oh, Bernard!" says Edna, laughing.

"Has he asked you to go to the picnic?" enquired her cousin suspiciously.

"Not exactly. He—merely alluded to—"

"Merely took it for granted that you were bound to go with him, and so he needn't be in a hurry to ask you!" says Bernard wrathfully.

"Then he will find himself mistaken," Edna says with emphasis.

"Are you sure of that?"

"Sure? Of course! And to prove it, I'll go with you, Bernard," this very sweetly, "if you will let me, and aren't engaged to Miss Ogilvie.

"Miss Ogilvie is nothing to me. She's a nice sensible girl, but I'm not in love with her, as Laura, and mother, and all of them seem to think."

"They say you liked her once," says Edna, glancing up askance, and half-shading her face with her fan.

"I like her well enough, and, perhaps, might have liked her better in time. But since you came, Edna——"

At that critical moment, Laura innocently entered the room.

It was a charming picnic, as everybody said. Laura had plenty of partners, but as for Edna, the beaux generally, though reluctantly, seemed inclined to respect the pretentions of Mr. Derwent.

Bernard, from remote corners, watched that gentleman's attentions to his cousin, and pulled his moustache with inward wrath and resentment.

He began, too, to look with doubt upon Edna, for had she not that evening encouraged him in the sweetest manner, and was she not now, to all appearances, equally encouraging his rival?

A sudden thought sent the blood to his brow. Could it be that this charming cousin of his was a coquette, and was making a fool of him?

At this moment the couples began to take their places for a quadrille, and Bernard sees Mr. Derwent, in his usual stately and deliberate manner, making his way to Edna across the crowded floor.

Slipping past the row of wall flowers, he reached his cousin's side in advance of his rival.

"Are you engaged for this set?" he whispered!

"Yes, to—to Mr. Derwent," glancing at her card.

He takes the card from her hastily, and thrust it into his pocket, just as a tall head and shoulders loom up near them.

"Dance this set with me, Edna: I ask it as a favor—as something more than a favor!" he said earnestly.

She knows what he means. He is pressing her hand. This is the decisive turning-point, which she feels that she cannot evade.

"Our dance, I believe, Miss Edna," says Mr, Derwent, offering his arm.

Edna hesitates, and casts a glance at Bernard, wistful and appealing.

He speaks instantly, and there is a subdued triumph in his look and manner:

"Beg pardon, Mr. Derwent, but I think you are mistaken. This is my dance?"

Edna slightly turns to Mr. Derwent. Her breath comes quickly, and her fingers tremble a little as she endeavors to fasten that troublesome bracelet.

"Let Miss Edna decide which of us is right," says Mr. Derwent with dignified politeness.

He is a little flushed.

Bernard, on the contrary, is slightly pale, and his eyes are intently fixed upon his cousin.

She avoids his glance, and turning, takes Mr. Derwent's arm, murmuring something about having lost her card.

Mr. Derwent walks off with her upon his arm, with a little pleased smile of triumph lurking about the corners of his mouth, and Edna sees no more of Bernard that evening.

Next morning the girls come down to an 11 o'clock breakfast, and Aunt Mary, as she poured out their coffee, scolded them for staying so late on the moonlight porch after their return from the picnic.

Laura only smiled placidly, and Edna toyed with her apron and blushed.

"I—I have something to tell you, Aunt Mary."

Aunt Mary, glancing at her, nearly sprang from her chair.

"Bless my soul, child! you don't mean that Mr. Derwent proposed to you last night?"

Edna smiled as she nodded assent, and Aunt Mary at once turned up the girl's face and kissed her.

"I'm perfectly delighted. Why, it's the very best match in town, and almost in the whole country. Your father and mother will be so pleased."

"I knew he would propose last night Edna," Laura says quietly; "and I'm so glad dear!"

And then, after some moment's excited talk on Aunt Mary's part, the latter says suddenly:

"And I have a piece of news, also, though not so important as yours, Edna. Bernard——"

"Where is Bernard?" said Laura, "and why did he leave the picnic so suddenly. And the news—what do you think of his having purchased that Morford House opposite—the one next to Mr. Derwent's?" said Aunt Mary nodding to Edna.

"Why, mother?" said Laura in surprise. "He heard—let me see, it was the day before yesterday—that Judge Taylor wanted the house, and he just rushed up to the agents office and secured it on the spot," said Aunt Mary triumphantly.

"But," said Edna vaguely, "I did not know—I mean, how could he afford it?"

"Afford it? Why, child, he's rich enough?"

"Rich?" questioned Edna wonderingly.

"You don't mean to say, Edna, that you didn't know that Bernard's grandfather died years ago and left him the whole of his handsome fortune? Why, I should think, of course, Laura would have told you."

"I thought she knew," said Laura. How strange that we never spoke of it in her presence. But mother doesn't this look as though Bernard were thinking of getting married?"

"Indeed it does. Why, I declare it's perfectly delightful to think of Mr. Derwent and Edna owning one of those beautiful houses just opposite us, and Bernard and Bella the other. For of course—But what's the matter, Edna, child? Ah, these picnics, and late hours, and courting are too much for you. Go upstairs, dear, and lie down."

She obeys white and trembling; and no one guesses the wild regret; the bitter pain and remorse, and the vain longing that lie deep down in her heart as she murmurs:

"Had I known it yesterday."

Low-necked Dresses.

Washington Letter.

A great fuss is being kicked up because some of the ladies at the White House reception wore extremely low-necked dresses. That they do appear in costume very much abbreviated from the neck down, there is no sort of dispute. That the wearers of these low-necked costumes are well-favored and pleasing to look upon, I have heard no one—at least no gentleman—complain. It is my belief that the uproar has been created by some of the lean and hungry ladies who could not safely presume to appear in similar rig, and that they have communicated their opposition to decollete costumes to sympathizing lady correspondents. That would be enough. It ought to be said that the wearers of the lowest dresses and the possessors of the busts that are really worth exposing to a curious public, are the ladies of the foreign legations. It is sometimes embarrassing to be obliged to stand by one of these charming creatures, as she sits on one of the sofas in the corridor, with a superb costume that is nothing but a pair of straps from the arm pits up—but then one is obliged to accustom himself to many strange things in this cosmopolitan city.

"Beware of the Vidders."

Mr. Dud. Mobley of Coffee county, Ga., wishes he had heeded the older Weller's advice to "beware of the vidders." Mrs. Judy McCook, a sprightly widow, cast a web of fascination over Mr. Dud and made him believe that she loved him and would marry him. Ditto Mr. Bird Mobley. Arrangements for an early wedding were made by both parties, and Mr. Bird Mobley, to keep things quiet, asked his betrothed to meet him at a certain point on the Ocmulgee River and they would get married. Meantime the other suitor had his suspicions aroused, and at once went to the house where the lady resided and besought her to come out and wed him. The lady shut herself up and refused the invitation. The disappointed wooer sat by the door, waiting for day and his doom, but, to his sorrow, when day came the house was searched, Mrs. McCook was wanting, and later information leaked out that she had escaped through a window, went to the river, and married Bird Mobley according to promise.

Industrial Training.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology has now 443 students in the school of Industrial science, and 114 in the school of mechanical arts and the Lowell school of practical design. Of the value of the Institute's training, President Walker says: "Here is a case in point: The President of one of the great lines of transportation in this country—a man with a genius for organization and execution—said to me, but a short time ago, that he could take a young man of good sense, good judgment, and good habits, a graduate from our course in civil or mechanical engineering, and, by passing him through the successive grades of responsibility in railroad management, could in five years' time make him a better general superintendent than could be made of a man lacking the preparation in twenty years. The day of half-trained men is past in this country in all occupations—or is rapidly going past."

Precedence at Washington.

Concerning the much discussed question of precedence among ladies in Washington official society, Miss Frelinghuysen is reported to have written as follows in a private note, setting at rest the story of ill-feeling between her mother, Mrs. McElroy, and Mrs. Carlisle: "It seems too bad that what the president intended as a compliment to a new speaker's wife, should be construed as rudeness to my mother, to whom he is studiously polite and most generously considerate. Mrs. Carlisle and we are excellent friends. The receptions of the president my mother has attended, and will always attend; but Mrs. McElroy's Saturday afternoons she has begged to be excused, as she is so weary of standing. The story is foundationless, but has wonderful life and lasts long, because people love to think there is not peace in President Arthur's household."

The Real Ruler of Canada.

The central figure in the Canadian parliament is also the greatest figure in Canada. He is Sir John A. Macdonald, the real ruler of Canada, with but a short interruption, for twenty-five years, and the greatest man British North America has produced. Other politicians are there, a dozen of them, who have been knighted by the queen, but while he is, like them, Knight Commander of the Provincial Order of St. Michael and St. George, he is more than that. He is Knight Commander of the Bath, and, more than that, he is a member of the Imperial Privy Council, which is a distinction enjoyed by no other man in Canada. The others are honorable; he alone is right honorable, like William E. Gladstone. Sir John is 70 years old, and has been a legislator for forty years.

Sham "Duties to Society."

It is a wise and suggestive saying that the Wilkie Collins puts in the mouth of one of his characters: that one may live comfortably on a certain income named, "provided that she does not owe duties to society!" How many a piece of extravagance is excused and glossed over with the plea that really one is obliged to do this or that—that it wouldn't look well not to, etc. But who is really deceived by the excuse or the foolish act itself? There are homes that are made wretched through this notion of duty to society which conflicts with duty to the family. If every woman looked faithfully to her work at home, lived within her means, attended to each real obligation, there would be fewer discontented women vainly seeking for an outlet for their surplus energy.—New York Post.

Court Etiquette.

Court etiquette is the code of rules which encloses the sovereign and keeps the subject at a proper distance from him. It serves to keep the King from becoming familiar with the people, and it prevents the people from getting so near the monarch as to realize that he "isn't anything but a common man after all." Three years ago, during a garden-party at Buckingham Palace, an American couple caused quite a sensation by breaking through the court etiquette. They pressed forward and shook the Queen's hand, instead of waiting to be presented and then kissing it.

Prince Gortschakoff, who for many years was the Prime Minister of Russia, was noted for his observance of minutest points of etiquette in his relations with the late Czar. Lord Dufferin, the English ambassador, once asked him if the Emperor's cold was better. Bending his head and half-closing his eyes, Gortschakoff answered in a reverent tone.

"His majesty has deigned to feel a little better this morning."

It was the characteristic obsequiousness which provoked the Duke de Morny to say "Gortschakoff purrs when he speaks of any creature at court, even if it be the Grand Duchess Olga's monkey."

The Spanish court is noted for its punctilious observance of etiquette. "They kissed the feet of his majesty and withdrew," said a Madrid paper, reporting an interview of the town council at Serville with King Alfonso. The councillors did not really get down on all fours and kiss the king's boots. But as members of the cortes kiss the royal hand, etiquette demanded that those on a lower level should be reported as kissing the royal feet. The folling extract from a foreign periodical illustrates how costly it is to offend Spanish etiquette:

One of the chief reasons of the Duke of Aosta's unpopularity during the brief reign and before his abdication, was that he would take no pains to study the complicated etiquette of the Escurial. He sought to introduce simple manners, in a country where even beggars drape themselves proudly in their tattered mantles and address one another as "Senor Caballero."

He one day told a muleteer with whom he had stopped to talk on a country road under a broiling sun, to put on his hat. He forgot the fact that by ordering a subject to cover himself in the royal presence, he created him a grandee.

Marshal Prim, who was standing by, hastily knocked the muleteer's head-dress out of his hand, and set his foot upon it, at the same time offering the man some gold.

But the muleteer, who was mortally offended, spurned the money. A few days later, when Prim was assassinated, a rumor was circulated among the people—but without truth, it seems—that the mortified muleteer who had narrowly missed becoming a grandee was an accessory to the crime.

At another time, King Amadeo inconsiderately addressed a groom of his in the second person singular as tu. Happily, the man was an Italian, for, as a court chamberlain represented to His Majesty, a Spaniard spoken to with this familiarity might have claimed that the monarch had dubbed him cousin—that is had ennobled him.

Another thing which the much worried Italian Prince had to learn, was that a Spanish King must not sign any letter to a subject with any friendly or complimentary formula, but must simply write, "Yo El Reg" (I, the King).

Disease and Happiness.

In the case of Carlyle, who creaked and groaned under dyspepsia for over eighty-four years, so uncommon a case? Doubtless, no one would think of speak of him as an illustration of health; but was there not in him more of the essence of bodily health than in Keats, who probably enjoyed far more in his short life than ever Carlyle did in his long one, but who died at twenty-five, or than Kirke White, who died at twenty-one? Perhaps Sir Andrew Clark would say that health is one thing, and strength another; and that while joy in living is the definite criterion of health, it is not at all a criterion of tenacity or strength. But is joy in living the criterion even of health in all kinds of organizations alike? Is it not true that one disease, and that sometimes a mortal disease, leaves the overspill of joy almost unaffected, while another, without the smallest deadliness, will extinguish while it lasts every possibility of joy? Every one knows how much of radiance of life consumption often admits and how much of gloom is due to every slight affection of the liver. Surely the greater number of medical men would hardly subscribe to Sir Andrew Clark's doctrine, that in all kinds of constitutions joy in living is the criterion of health. Excess of vital energy which does not consume itself in any form of action frequently bubbles over in mere delight; but surely there may be no such excess in many constitutions in whicht he balance of perfect health is still maintained. A constitutional gloom sometimes besets persons who in every other respect are absolutely healthy, persons in whom no change of air, or scene, or occupation would produce for any appreciable duration of time that ebullition of spirits which alone can be properly called joy in living.—London Spectator.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s annual circular of failures in the United States during 1884 shows that the whole number of these mercantile disasters for the year has been 10,968. The failures in 1883 were less than in 1884 by 1,784, the whole number being 9,184. This is equal to 20 per cent. The increase of percentage between 1882 and 1883 was 36 per cent, which shows a lessened percentage of increase for this year of 16 per cent. The greatest number of failures ever occurring in any previous year was in 1878, when the disasters reached 10,478, with a far less number of business institutions and traders reported. The liabilities of the year just past amount to $220,000,000, against $172,000,000 in 1883. This shows a very great advance when compared with 1881, when the failures amounted to only $81,000,000. But the liabilities, large as they are, are less than in 1878, when the indebtedness of the 10,000 unfortunates who failed in business footed up to a grand total of $234,000,000.

Opportunities and Conditions of Success in Life.

"The World's Opportunities," is the title of a new book just published, in which the author takes a comprehensive survey of the principal industries and vocations which are or can be carried on in the United States, with a view to ascertain and to point out the opportunities which they present for the attainment of success in life. The author says truly that whenever a change in one's condition is desirable it is right to effect a change. It is right if a man's position is a bad one that he should seek for a better one. The right position for a man to occupy is the best one to which he can honestly and honorably attain by the exercise of all his powers and the best use of all his opportunities. The chapter on Mechanics and Manufactures contains a great deal of valuable informrtion and advice, which can be profitably studied by all who are engaged in those pursuits. The author sums up the main conditions as follows:

First—Choose well the particular advocation in which you are to engage, having special reference to your own qualifications, mental as well as physical. If you are of delicate frame, the trade of blacksmith and carpenter is not for you. If your fingers are deficient in suppleness, and in celerity of movement, the craft of compositor is not for you. If you happen to be color-blind, do not try to become a painter. If there is no special disqualification, then of all the occupations open to you, select the one which promises to pay best. If for any reason, or even for no reason which you can definitely assign, you have a liking for any particular trade, that one, other things being equal, should be chosen. If you are fond of reading, that is a good reason for becoming a printer; if you have a natural mechanical turn, you are specially fitted for a machinest, a cabinet-maker, or a mill-wright, and all the more so if you have an inventive genius. The inventor who cannot, with his own hands, make, at least, a model of his invention, labors under a serious, though not insuperable disadvantage.

Second—Make yourself a thorough master of your trade, including the use of the machinery and other tools used in it; but do not confine yourself to it as to render yourself incable of doing anything else. No one handicraft is sufficient to exhaust all the capabilities of any one man. You will be the better painter for being able to handle the saw; the better joiner for knowing how to use the brush; the better machinist for acquiring the use of the pencil.

Third—Having learned your trade, whatever it may be, look well for a location in which to exercise it. It is as important to know where to do a thing as how to do it. Do not become so enamored of your present abode as to refuse to leave it for a better one, nor so given to change as to seek it merely for its own sake. Of course healthfulness or unhealthfulness of a place is a great reason for or against choosing it.

Fourth—Be on the alert for opportunities to better your condition. Look for them, for it is not often they will come unsought, or that accident will throw them in your path. It is very right and proper to be "always contented with our present condition," provided always that it is the one we are best fitted to fill. But it is by no means certain that the condition in which one finds himself is the one in which Providence designed him to remain. To George Washington it may have seemed at a time that the lot of a land surveyor was divinely appointed to him; and he would certainly have made a good surveyor. George Stephenson was a collier's helper, ignorant of the alphabet until he had almost reached manhood. When at thirty he was made an engine-driver at £100 a year, he thought he was a "made man," and had reached the highest stage to which Providence had assigned him; but Providence willed that he should not be content in that position. Had Peter Cooper remained in any one of the various occupations to which Providence had apparently called him, we cannot well imagine how great losers we should have been. It is the men who have not been "content with their present condition," but have always yearned after and striven for something better, who have not only improved their own affairs, but those of the world.

Fifth—To skill and industry, presistence and energy, with intellegence to guide them, add honesty in act and purpose. Be content with no present state, however good, so long as there appears to be something beyond attainable. However high you have climbed, let your motto and watchword still be "Excelsior"—yet higher.

Boycotting Tobacco Chewers.

From the Buffalo Express.

Thirteen charming young women of Newark, N. J., have begun a crusade against young men who chew tobacco. They are banded together by a terrible oath never to allow the lips of a tobacco chewer to kiss their pure mouths. An able reporter represents a blonde with luscious crimson lips, languishing blue eyes, and a winsome face, as exclaiming, "To fill one's mouth with filthy tobacco, and then kiss the pure lips of a woman, is—is—is—oh, I can't find words to express my horror." A piquant little brunette, whose sparkling black eyes seemed to emit sparks of electric fire," aserted that she had three different young men, who were "real nice looking" kiss her while their breaths smelled of "awful, awful nasty tobacco," and for over a week thereafter she felt compelled to continually rub her lips with a handkerchief in the vain hope of wiping off the stained kisses. It may be a very real evil that the Newark young women are organizing against, but, if it's a fair question, we should like to know what kind of young women these must be that confess to lending their lips to so much promiscuous kissing.

Dr. Cohn, of Breslau, in the years 1864 and 1865 examined the eyes of 10,060 scholars, and found 1,630 of them with eyes of defective shape. Of these 1,072 were myopic, 139 were flat-eyed 23 were the subjects of astigmatism, and 896 were suffering from the results of previous disease. Dr. Cohn further found that faulty shape of the eyeballs, especially in the direction of myopia, increased steadily, both in numerical prevalence and in degree, as school was prolonged; being least frequent and least pronounced in the elementary schools, more frequent and more pronounced in the intermediate, most frequent and most pronounced in the finishing schools.

Webster in Private Life.

The Hon. Alexander Stephens once said of Daniel Webster: "I think Webster was the worst slandered man I ever knew It is the general impression in the country to-day that Webster was a great drundard. You hear it spoken of even now whenever his name is mentioned, but it is an outrageous slander. I will tell you what I know myself. For six years while we were both in Congress I lived next door to him. His house was as familiar to me as my own garden. I was in there a great deal and he was often in mine, and in all the time of my acquaintance with him I never saw Webster when he was the least affected by liquor or under the influence of it in any way. I have dined with him at his house and mine, I have met him at dinners and affairs outside and I never saw him in the least inebriated. I never heard of his being intoxicated but twice, and on one of those occasions—a dinner—he made a speech that was grandly eloquent. Then, too, there had been much said about his incontinency. I think it is even a worse slander than the other. When we were neighbors he was married to his second wife (a fine woman) and, with the exception of Toombs and Calhoun, I never saw a man so devoted to his wife as Webster was. They were always together. If he went out to walk in the evening as was his custom, Mrs. Webster always accompanied him. I used to meet them often. He never was away from home over night that his wife did not go, too. He went frequently to New York and Baltimore, but he always took Mrs. Webster with him. At the receptions in the city they always were together and whenever you saw Webster you saw Mrs. Webster on his arm. It was different then from now. It was not then considered wrong for a man and his wife to keep together at such entertainments. Now if a man speaks to his wife at any reception or affair of the kind he is thought to be unfit for good society. He must beau around some other woman and leave his wife to be looked after by some other man. Webster loved his wife and was kind and faithful to her, and she was one of the most elegant refined ladies I have had the fortune to know."

Garrett and Lincoln.

Tom Ochiltree in New York Tribune.

The last time I met Mr. Garrett was in the private loge of Minister Morton at the Grand Opera in Paris. He was accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Garrett, and was in an excellent reminiscent humor. I remember he told me he was present when Andrew Johnson proposed the peremptory arrest of Generals Robert E. Lee, J. E. Johnston and other confederate leaders. He spoke of the way in which Gen. Grant refused to be a party to such a proceeding. He said it was the only time he had ever seen Grant's equanimity disturbed, that his eyes literally blazed with fire, and that he informed Mr. Johnson that any attempt to interfere with the status of these southern generals as arranged by him would cause his instant resignation as general-in-chief of the army. Mr. Garret said that Gen. Grant paid a high compliment to the ability, honor and bravery of Generals Lee and Johnston, and their armies, and said that he would not be made a party to humiliate them or break faith with them. He accompanied Mr. Lincoln to the battle of Antietam on the day after the battle. He said that Mr. Lincoln visited the wounded of both armies in the improvised hospitals, and he would never forget a scene that occurred between him and a young soldier from North Carolina whose wound was pronounced mortal by the physician accompanying the party. Mr. Lincoln put his arm under the neck of the poor boy and talked with him of his mother and sisters at home until, said Mr. Garrett, the tears welled up from his great heart and fell upon the wondering, upturned face of the dying confederate.

How They Vote in Germany.

A striking feature of the German municipal system is its entire independence of national politics. No issue but those arising out of municipal questions are allowed to influence the city elections. Every male inhabitant 24 years of age has a right to vote on municipal questions provided that he has his own household and is not dependent on father and mother; that he has not received alms from the public funds within twelve years; that he occupies a house or pursues a trade with two employes; that he pays an income tax or a class tax. Under one or another of these five conditions all industrious persons in the city are included. That all votes should count equally are regarded as unbusiness-like. The arrangement adopted to meet this point of view is this: Voters are divided into three classes, each of which elects one-third of the city council. To the first class are assigned so many of the largest taxpayers as pay one-third of the taxes assessed; to the second so many as in the aggregate pay the second third of the taxes; to the third class belong all not included in the first and second. Each of the three classes elects forty-two members of the council, its influence upon questions of finance being kept in strict equality with its tax payments. The city council of Berlin has long been conspicuous for the education and financial standing of its members. Election to it is accounted an honor to which the ablest men of the city aspire.

A Speech of Skobeleff's.

"They ask whether the White Czar is wroth with them. When the White Czar is wroth, his wrath is like unto the roaring of a lion. His guns are not thundering—therefore the White Czar is not wroth. But I pray God he do not become so, for their sakes, and for the sake of their wives and of their children; for on that day blood shall flow as rivers, and they shall not be saved by the English, nor shall anything avail them, just as nothing could save the Akhal Tekkes. Believe me when I say this! If God had not willed it I should not be standing here with my guns. But if it be God's will that the white czar should rule over this land, then what can avail against the will of God? If they are sincere let them send me their people; I will receive them, and will let them return with honor as guests. But I shall not believe them until they restore unto me their Russian prisoners. I am a straight forward man. It would not be well for them if the czar should command me to go and fetch them. As long as they do not send back Gyonzelkhanoff and Kidyaeff I will not speak with them any more. Let them bring with them their Russian prisoners, and then I will talk with their honorable men. If they should not like my words I shall let them go home again; but let that be as they please. If but a drop of Russian blood be spilt, they shall weep for their folly, not with the tears of others, but with their own. They entreat me to hasten, to hasten; I have no need to hasten. When the Czar gives the order, I shall find them. These are my last words unto them."—The War in Turcomania—Gen. Grodekoff.

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

Reports from Kansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Missouri, Maryland, and Virginia, of winter wheat, are not at all favorable. It is said the crop must certainly be 30 per cent. less than that of last year. Should these reports be substantiated there will be higher prices for spring wheat.

Carroll D. Wright, lately appointed commissioner of the labor bureau at Washington has had large experience and observation at the head of a similar bureau in Massachusetts, and in a late interview says: "I think I am able to see a great revival of trade in all directions. I may be mistaken, but I think you will find three months hence, that the percentage of unemployed men will be much smaller than at present."

Some one has introduced in the New York Legislature an act "for the suppression of sentimental gush and the glorification of felons," which provides a penalty for any one who shall send a bouquet or other sympathetic token to any convicted felon, or to any person held for the crime of murder. The practice against which this act is directed is scarcely to be reached by legislation, but prison authorities would act within their powers in putting a stop to it.

An Association known as the Anti-Deists has just been established in Paris. Its object is to suppress the word God, or its equivalent, in all the languages of the world, on the ground that the Being so designated is a mere fiction and the word, therefore, is senseless and irrational. They are not any more likely to succeed than are the well-intentioned but impracticable people who go to the other extreme and insist that the word God shall have legal recognition by its insertion in the Constitution and laws under the impression that this merely formal recognition would cure a multitude of evils.

In Connecticut there is a strong sentiment in favor of a state income tax to increase the revenue without adding to the burdens of taxation now borne by real estate, manufactures and trade, and a bill has been introduced in the legislature for that purpose. It is undeniably that in theory, the collection of a tax on incomes is the most equitable method of producing public revenue, but it has been found impracticable in the United States, owing to the difficulty of ascertaining incomes, save by species of espionage that is distasteful to the people. Until perjury is looked upon differently than what it is at present an income tax law cannot be generally executed with any degree of fairness.

The locomotive buildings industry has suffered with many others in the past year. According to the American Machinist during 1883 seven of the largest builders turned out 1,346 locomotives, while the same builders during the past year turned out only 901. There are only sixteen locomotive building shops in this country, and in these shops, as near as can be learned, the total number of locomotives built in 1884 was 1,271, about 100 of which were for exportation. The most trustworthy figures show that there are 29,227 locomotives of all kinds belonging to railroads in North America. As the life of a locomotive is about twenty-five years, about 1,169 locomotives must be constructed every year to maintain the stock.

The Secretary of State, in a communication to Congress, seeks to repel the criticism that the participation of representatives of the United States in the Congo conference at Berlin, conflicts with the injunction of Washington in his farewell address, which had been hitherto observed. He declares that the government of the United States only instructed delegates to attend the conference on the understanding that the conference was not to have plenipotentiary functions, that its objects were to be simply discussion and accord, and that the United States would be free to decline to accept the conclusions of the conference. The Secretary further declares that the United States government has not, in taking part in the conference, departed from its traditional policy of avoiding entangling alliances, and he subjoins some extracts from a dispatch lately received from Minister Kasson, which go to bear out his own statements.

The distressful condition of the unemployed workmen in Great Britain is beginning to assume very serious proportions, and just now the propagandists of Socialistic theories, particularly in relation to the land, are as active as they can possibly be. There can be no doubt whatever that the number of the unemployed is very large, and that hundreds of thousands of mechanics and laborers have been reduced by the long spell of industrial depression to virtual starvation. Most of the newspapers effect to believe that the distress is not by any means so widespread as the demagogues and their leaders would lead us to imagine, but the meeting held at Birmingham a few days ago—usually one of the most prosperous of England's industrial centers—in which upwards of 4,000 unemployed persons took part, proves conclusively that the distress has reached unprecedented dimensions.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE—Bills were indefinitely postponed providing that the superintendent of public instruction shall be appointed; one of the two bills for a state high school. Bills were introduced: Fixing the salary of the attorney general at $3,500; amending statutes relating to offenses against the public peace; requiring school district treasurers to deposit their funds in banks; amending statutes relating to mechanics' liens; authorizing the building of bridges across the Mississippi at Grand Rapids and Aitkin; appropriating $2,000 for the support of the state library; for the pardon of George Lautenschlager, Sophia Rapp and Frank Rapp. Adjourned until 10 a. m.

The blockade on some of the roads prevented the arrival of many of the members of the house, the speaker included, and the session was short and uneventful.

Mr. Lee's bill proposing to amend the school law provides that school district treasurers shall deposit their funds in some bank, after first having advertised that the funds will be placed in the bank which may be deemed reliable, and shall offer the highest rate of interest for the same.

SENATE—Bills were introduced appropriating $2,000 per annum for the Southern Minnesota Agricultural association; to provide for uniform rules of practice in probate courts; appropriating $40,000 for deficiency in state's prison appropriation; amending the charter of the Mississippi & Rum River Boom company; to allow railroad companies outside the state to become domestic corporations. A large number of local bills were passed under suspension of the rules. In the afternoon bills were passed; taxing railroad land, titles to which has passed, providing for change of county seats; extending the limits of St. Paul.

Upon reports of the proper committees, the following bills were indefinitely postponed: To prevent county attorneys from appearing in civil actions; amending the statutes in regard to appearances in justices' courts; amending the statutes relating to time of commencing actions in civil cases; also amending the laws as to depositions.

Senator Peck has introduced a bill by which outside railroad companies extending their lines into the state may become domestic corporations. They are to file diagrams of their entire line with the secretary of state, and must engage not to remove suits into the United States courts.

Senator Wilson's bill to tax railroad lands the title to which has passed came to a vote after many postponements. The roll call was taken, amid an almost solemn silence, and resulted as follows:

Yeas, 32; nays, 10. Senators not voting: Ackerman, Langdon, Lawrence, Peterson and Van Hoesen. Those voting nay were Senators Billson, Buckman, Castle, Clement, Crosby, Gilfillan, C. D., Gilfillan, J. B., Morrison, Sergeant, Waite.

HOUSE.—Remonstrances were received from citizens of Winona and Stillwater against the passage of the railroad bill in its present shape and against an appropriation for the Duluth harbor until the canal had been bridged. Bills were indefinitely postponed amending statutes relating to costs, and Senator Wilson's bill for a constitutional amendment inhibiting towns, cities, etc., from issuing bonds in aid of railroads. Bills were introduced declaring calabooses legal jails; requiring the attorney general to defend persons holding lands under the homestead laws. The house went into committee of the whole, and spent the day in the discussion of the railroad bill.

The debate brought out but a single fact clearly—that it is the purpose upon the part of the friends of the bill to pass it without material amendment, and on this subject there is evidently a well arranged programme. All amendments were noted down, though some may possibly be allowed before the final vote.

SENATE—Bills introduced: Authorizing Freeborn county to levy tax to build court house (passed under suspension); to provide for service and collection of judgments against municipalities which have no officers; fixing measure of damages in cases of loss by fire; relating to warehouses and shipments of grain (railroad committee substitute bill; made special order for Friday at 3 p. m). House bills were passed, amending charter of Northfield; allowing mortgagors to bid at chattel mortgage sales. Senate bills passed: Continuing the laws relating to tree planting; creating the Thirteenth judicial district. In the afternoon bills were introduced providing for a penal code for the state (the New York code) and for boomage rates and privileges on the upper Mississippi and Rum rivers.

Judge Wilson has introduced the following bill, which he entitles "An act relating to the insurance of real property and the measure of damages in case of the loss thereof." The bill reads:

> Whenever any policy of insurance shall be written to insure real property and the property insured shall be wholly destroyed without criminal fault on the part of the insured or his assigns, the amount of the insurance written in such policy shall be taken conclusively to be the value of the property when insured and the true amount of loss and measure of damages when destroyed.

The judiciary committee has introduced in the senate the largest bill, probably, ever laid before that body. It is the penal code bill, of which the principal features have been given, as far as could be in the limits of newspaper space, in the PIONEER PRESS. It occupies 113 pages of the usual size of printed bills, and is, practically, a reprint of the New York code. Secretary Jones did not read it all.

Senator Pillsbury has provided a bill giving the attorney general $500 to prepare and perfect an appeal to the supreme court from the district court of Hennepin county, in the notable case recently decided by Judge Young adversely to the state and affecting the taxation of railroad lands.

HOUSE—Resolutions were offered for congressional action to counteract the interdiction of American products by European countries. The Wilson bond bill was recalled from indefinite postponement. Bills were introduced, amending statutes relating to county surveyors; limiting the hours that locomotive engineers and firemen may be employed; amending the statutes relating to protection of life; amending statutes relating to boards of trade; amending statutes relating to actions to acquire title; amending statutes relating to publication of lis pendens; amending statutes relating to repression of depositions for the reimbursement of county for taxes on railroad lands from the 2 per cent tax on the gross earnings; giving right of way to railroads over state lands; amending statutes relating to the sale of personal property; to prevent the destruction or injury of bridges by traction engines; a general law for the removal of county seats; amending the school law; providing for the extension of time for redemption in certain cases; to license roller rinks.

Nearly all day was spent in discussing the house railroad bill. The sections were read one by one and adopted, the deliberation having resulted in the making of no material amendments, and the committee rose and reported in favor of the bill being engrossed for its third reading.

It was obvious from the first that it was the purpose to pass the bill without amendment, and no secret was made of the fact that this was in pursuance of an agreement arrived at by the friends of the measure forty-five of whom, it is understood, signed an agreement to see the bill through in its entirety, while fifteen or sixteen more agreed to stand by the measure. The bill will prob

Contested elections are expensive. Mr. Byrne, the Le Sueur county member, who was found to be entitled to his seat, has a bill in for $1,157 for the expenses in his case.

SENATE—Bills were introduced providing for the incorporation of loan companies; authorizing Crookston to issue $30,000 bonds; authorizing Albert Lea to vote as to issue of bonds in aid of railroads entering that city. Senate bills passed: Establishing a Normal school in Moorhead in 1887; providing for compulsory education; revising the military code; relating to lumber district and surveyor general in northern part of state; to prevent transfer of suits to federal courts by foreign corporations; providing for discharge of seed grain debts due the state. House bills passed: Amending the charter of St. Cloud; also of Lake Crystal, Fillmore county; providing for the settlement of moneys in the hands of sheriffs and deputies.

The senators have introduced 400 bills thus far, and of making many more there seems no end.

The senate finance committee cannot act in preparing the general appropriation bill until the house takes some action looking toward an increase of the state's revenues—if such increase is to be made. There are so many increases proposed in the appropriations, that the senate committee will not act until it is discovered where the money is to come from. Of course all measures looking toward increase of tax must originate in the house.

Soren Listoe, ex-register of the Fergus Falls land office, has been appointed by Secretary Jones of the senate to assist in comparing engrossed bills. Mr. Listoe will bring his family to St. Paul for the rest of the session.

HOUSE—A resolution was offered to investigate the status of the St. Cloud, Austin & Mankato railway, and a resolution was adopted asking members of congress to support measures for the suppression of Mormonism. Indefinitely postponed: McKusick's amendment to tax law. Bills were introduced for an appropriation for a memorial tablet at Gettysburg; amending statutes relating to the adoption of children; to provide for the collection of judgments and service of summons upon municipal corporations; for a direct system of surveys; for a second state prison commission. Senate bills passed: To provide an additional judge in the Eleventh judicial district; amending statutes relating to sales of real estate by guardians; for the change of the county line between Polk and Marshall counties. House bills passed: Providing for compensation for change of grade; amending statutes fixing the season of catching trout; relating to practice in probate court; relating to dams and mills; requiring teachers to be paid their salaries while attending county institutes; relating to publication of the tax list; memorials for return of direct tax for war purposes and payment of interest on war loan; the house railroad bill—79 yeas, 21 nays.

Mr. Myers' bill for a commission to locate a second state prison names John S. Pillsbury, William Crooks, Andrew McCrea, Henry Poehler and T. W. Temple as the commission, and contemplates the procuring of forty acres of land and a stone quarry, and appropriates $6,000 for the expenses of the commission and the procurement of the land.

SENATE—Bills were introduced to insure better education of doctors of dental surgery; amending the law as to release of mechanics' liens. The house bill appropriating $5,000 for the board of immigration passed. Senate bills passed exempting state fair grounds from taxation; amending the charter of Glencoe; terminating lien of chattel mortgages executed in other states in three months. In the afternoon the senate, as a special order, commenced consideration of the railroad committee's bill. Important amendments will be considered Tuesday next at 10 a. m.

The merits of the various amendments—all intended to prevent big shippers from shutting out smaller ones and monopolizing the business—could not be weighed unless the senators had an opportunity to cogitate upon them. Therefore it was agreed that the committee rise and report progress. After arising it was decided that the various amendments proposed by Senators Blake, Wilson and Castle—but not acted on—be printed and laid on the members' desks, and that the bill and amendments be made the special order for Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Senator C. D. Gilfillan yesterday introduced a bill amending sec. 8, chap. 7, General Statutes 1878, and relating to reimbursing the county treasuries of the several counties for the salaries of probate judges and expenses of probate courts. The fees to be paid by executor, guardian and administrators in settlement of estates, as fixed by the bill, are $10 when the value of the estate exceeds $1,000, $20 when it exceeds $2,000, $30 when it exceeds $5,000, $40 when it exceeds $10,000, $50 when it exceeds $15,000, $75 when it exceeds $20 000, $100 when it exceeds $25,000. Executors, etc., shall pay all sums expended in serving or publishing notices. This is the bill which Judge McGrorty has considered with the local delegation.

HOUSE—The regular order of business was waived, and the committee spent the day in committee of the whole, indefinitely postponing the bill giving the right to vote for presidential electors to women, increasing the amount of exempt personal property from $100 to $300, and requiring school treasurers to deposit their funds in banks.

The temperance committee in the house have agreed to report back the Turrell high license bill without recommendation, and it will go to the committee of the whole for consideration.

The bill offered by Mr. McKusick ordering the taxation of timbered railroad lands, when the stumpage on the same has been sold, provoked some debate, and was referred back to the committee on judiciary. The bill had previously been to the committee on taxes and had been reported favorably.

The legislature will adjourn sine die on Friday, the 5th of March, and Thursday, the 4th of March, is the last day in which bills can be passed, and the night of that day the clocks in both the house and senate chambers stubbornly refuse to indicate a later hour than the "noon of night."

SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE—Bills indefinitely postponed: Bean's school district treasurer bill; the firemen's relief bill; instructing the attorney general to defend settlers under the homestead law in certain cases; Sadley's chattel mortgage amendment. Bills introduced: Requiring railroads to provide suitable waiting rooms; fixing rate of interest on lands sold by state; reducing the minimum of banking capital to $10,000; for a state exhibit at the pomological society meeting; establishing legal measure for milk; providing for a short-hand reporter in the Fifth district; to establish the county of Canby; amending the drainage law; amending chattel mortgage law; fixing the rate of tax levy for 1886 at one and one-half mills, and for 1887 at one mill.

Mr. Turrell has introduced a bill proposing to reduce the minimum capital for state banks from $25,000 to $10,000. The object of the bill is to bring a large number of the private banks in the state under the scope of the state banking law.

At a joint meeting of the finance committees yesterday an understanding was reached that the committee in the house should report a bill fixing the rate of tax levy at one and one-half mills for the coming year and one mill for 1887. The increase is rendered necessary by the extraordinary demand made by the needs of the state institutions.

Judge Wilson's bill proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting villages or cities voting bonds, which was the subject of considerable discussion in the senate, met its quietus in the house.

The strange spectacle of a country road on fire can be witnessed in Tipperary, Ireland. The embankments are made of peat, upon which have been planted fir trees. The peat having by some means become ignited, hundreds of trees have been destroyed, and others having their roots burned away have fallen across the road. There are no flames but the smoke and burning smell taints the atmosphere for miles around.

It is said that Louisiana has about 48,000,000,000 feet of pine in her forests. As the great lumber states of Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin have only 82,000,000,000 it will be perceived that Louisiana is very rich in timber resources. It has, in fact, more than half as much as the three other states combined.

Earthquakes appear to have their good qualities in the eyes of scientists. Prof. Miln, the celebrated seismologist, writes complainingly from Japan to the British Association that the last season was a comparatively poor one, there being but 57 earthquake shocks, as compared with 80 during the previous season.

There is a great rush of visitors to see the Christie and Phillips oil wells, the greatest oil wells ever struck in the world, in Butler county, Pa., thirty miles from Pittsburg. The cars are crowded, and it is estimated that no less than 15,000 persons went to see the great gushers in one week. The Christie well's production of nearly 6,000 barrels of oil in twenty-four hours gives it the first place in the history of petroleum as the greatest wonder of the oil trade.

NEWS OF THE WEEK SUMMARIZED.

Reception to Evarts.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—The reception tendered to Senator-elect William M. Evarts to-night by the Union League club, of which he is president, was one of the most brilliant affairs of the kind which New York has ever seen. In spite of the driving snow storm, which blocked the streets and made the brilliantly illuminated club house all the more attractive, the number of persons present seemed only limited by the capacity of the building. The broad marble ante rooms and the art gallery with its beautiful exhibition of paintings were soon thronged with visitors. Judge Noah Davis presided. An address of congratulation was presented to Mr. Evarts by a committee consisting of E. B. Hinsdale, E. H. Ammidon and Chauncey M. Depew. The address was by Mr. Hinsdale, who was frequently interrupted by applause. Mr. Evarts responded. He thanked the members of the club for the honor of the reception.

"It would be very insincere and very ungracious in me," said he, "were I to disparage much more to repel the personal congratulations which you so freely offer, and the personal justification which I so sensibly feel. But, gentlemen, I cannot dissemble from myself, and have no desire to conceal from you, that the actual circumstances which mark the transaction of my election, and that find an echo in your mind rests upon something more important than mark anything personal to myself or anything in the ordinary routine of political promotion. The Republican party was framed into a means of saving this country, and that through every danger and against every obstacle, and with every degree of triumph and prosperity, has built up an unmutilated territory and an uncorrupted constitution to be greater and better than it was ever dreamed or imagined by the great founders of our government. This party now finds itself cast out of power and surrenders to a reactionary party the possession of the same nation and the same government. [Applause.] It is twenty-eight years since the people of this government entrusted their executive power to the Democratic party and a Democratic president of that party's selection. We in New York cannot conceal from ourselves that the center of the army of the Republican party of the United States pierced at this point was committed to our defense. No doubt some might be, should be, and is felt in Connecticut, in New Jersey and Indiana, that when New York failed there was not an army of sufficient strength that their succor could save the downfall of the party's possession of the government of the country. It so happens that there was one stronghold in the government that our party had not lost; and fortunately it belonged to them to defend the constitutional power and to hold in a certain check executive power on the one hand and the Democratic majority in the house of representatives on the other. I mean the senate of the United States. [Applause.] I believe that we enter upon the contest for the conduct of the government with a perfect assurance if we are not mistaken in this political aspect of our Union, that as sure as election day shall come around it shall reinstate in the possession of that power the Republican party, and then shall have settled forever that odious and dangerous element that has disturbed us for forty years, a solid South. [Applause.] And now, when we are to have a governor and all the important places in the state establishment filled at the coming election, so important if limited to the conduct of affairs in this state, but so vastly important as the first battle ground for the restoration of our party in power throughout the country, let there be an open and frank consolidation of public men justly aspiring, regarding it as still subservient on their part to the great interests of the Republican party, and let us know and feel that whoever is nominated, it is the great triumph and all who were competing with him are but an army behind him to strengthen him for the fight." [Loud applause.]

At the close of Mr. Evarts' speech, Judge Davis stated that an opportunity would be given to take the senator-elect by the hand. Mr. Evarts retired to the library, where for nearly two hours he was greeted and congratulated by the members of the club and their guests. In the supper room, on the fourth floor, refreshments were served from 11 to 1 o'clock. The table centerpiece was a miniature statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World."

JOHN KELLY'S FAILING HEALTH.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—John Kelly, the Tammany chieftain, who has been stopping a Rockaway beach for some days, is reported to be a very sick man and grave fears are said to be entertained by his physicians and friends. Mr. Kelly has been more or less of an invalid during the entire fall. His political reverses and the discontinuance of the Star have all had effect upon the health of the Tammany sachem. The extent of his illness during the early part of the winter was more or less concealed. After several days spent at Virginia seaside resorts he returned to New York. The change did not better him, however, and it was determined this week to make another effort to get nearer the sea. He was taken to Rockaway Beach last Wednesday but the severe winter weather that has prevailed along the coast for the last few days seemed to tax his strength beyond endurance. His physicians therefore decided to-day to bring him back to his home in this city.

Inauguration Harvest.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—Inauguration is beginning to tell on the appearance of Pennsylvania avenue. Along the triangular parks long high rows of seats are being erected. The local papers teem with advertisements of windows to rent to witness the procession. Good windows in the second story command $50, and third story windows range from $15 to $30. Peanut stand privileges are quoted at from $150 to $200 for the one day. A few rough diningroom places are for rent at from $300 to $400. Roomrenting agencies are doing a big business hiring old empty houses and packing in cots which they let at $1.50 a night. With each cot goes one blanket and nothing else. Some idea of the rush to come can be gleaned from the statement from a leading room broker that he has engaged in advance on his books over 1,500 such accommodations. Special stocks of flags, bunting and fireworks are being shipped here daily for use. The work of decoration will begin next week for the monument dedicated and will be added to until March 3. No such enthusiasm over inauguration has been seen here in twenty years. A number of modistes from New York have come over and set up fierce competition with the local monarchs of millinery on the special patronage necessary for the inauguration.

GENTILES AS WELL AS MORMONS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13—An elder of the Mormon church, in business in Salt Lake City, and at present in this city, in an interview to-day, in speaking of the Edmunds law, said:

> The persecution of Mormons for unlawful cohabitation under the Edmunds law continues. The Mormons, however, complain bitterly of the partiality of the district attorney for not prosecuting Gentiles for the same offense, although it is notorious that many are guilty. Even anti-Mormons declare the raid is prostrating business. Many Mormons against whom District Attorney Dickson is moving are leaving because they claim they cannot secure justice in court; that juries are packed by open venires, and that bail is refused Mormons pending appeal. The Gentiles are beginning to think that they, too, will have to leave or starve, owing to the injurious effect upon business, which would leave Utah in complete possession of the Mormons.

St. Louis Bay.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—The result of Maj. Allen's examination of St. Louis bay and river from Connor's Point to Rice's Point and his report of the survey of Auate and Burlington harbors on Lake Superior have been laid before the house by the speaker. Maj. Allen's estimate for improving St. Louis bay is $71,000. He says St. Louis bay and river are worthy of improvement, though to what extent and at what cost can only be determined after a thorough survey shall have been made. It would be best to commence such survey at Rice's and Connor's points, carrying it up toward the foot of the falls. No complete survey of this locality has been made since that of 1861—the lake survey, and a new map showing the extensive artificial and more than probable natural ones of the past twenty-three years has long been needed. The estimated cost of a full survey and map is placed at $5,000.

The Yellowstone Park.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The bill relative to jurisdiction over the Yellowstone Park, which passed the house to-day, is the one introduced in the senate by Senator Vest last session. An amendment providing that the jurisdiction over the park should be transferred from Montana to Wyoming was offered by Delegate Post after the bill passed the senate, and was incorporated in it as it passed the house to-day.

Copying Minnesota.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—Timber legislation before the Minnesota legislature, notably that in regard to making it a felony to cut off of state lands, has been examined by men from other states interested largely in timber production and copies of the pending Minnesota bills have been sent for introduction in a number of state legislatures. The same bills are likely to be passed in Wisconsin, California and Oregon.

Another Holocaust of Insane People.

Eighteen raving maniacs were burned to death in the insane department of the Blockley almshouse, on the west side of the Schuylkill river Philadelphia, in a conflagration, which needed nothing to make it the most horrible disaster of the kind ever known in this city. The fire originated in a wing of the old building, insane department, Blockley, which fronts toward the Schuylkill river, and is directly east of the main building of the almshouse. With axe and hook the firemen attacked the iron gratings of the cells, and succeeded in taking out seven men, four of them suffocated to death and three still alive. The last man thus rescued was the notorious "Jim" Burke, who has been in the institution over thirty years. He was brought from the Easton penitentiary, where he was undergoing a life sentence for murder. He has killed, since he has been in the insane department, a cook and two attendants. The firemen who rescued him state that he died while being taken to the ground. All of the inmates of the insane department were rescued safely except those in the third story of the wing in which the fire originated. The total loss of life was eighteen.

Death of a Noted Murderer.

Col. Thomas Buford, of Kentucky, a brother of Gen. Buford, and slayer of Judge Elliott of the court of appeals, died Friday morning at the Anchorage, Ky., lunatic asylum, after a long illness and chronic diseases. Buford shot and killed Judge Elliott for rendering an adverse decision against Col. Buford's sister, in a case involving considerable property. After a most sensational trial Buford was adjudged a lunatic and sent to the asylum, from which place he escaped, going across the river to Indiana, where he lived about a year hunting and fishing, the asylum officials being unable under the law to take him back to Kentucky. Without friends or money, Buford grew sick, and finally was forced by want to go back to the asylum. His brother Abe committed suicide some months ago.

On the 1st of March last year there were 511 saloons in operation in different portions of Minneapolis. The number of licensed saloons at present is only 278, showing a falling off of nearly one-half under the dead-line and high-license ordinance enacted last summer at the suggestion of Mayor Pillsbury.

Never before in the history of the marine world have so many steamships and sailing vessels been so long overdue as at the present time. There are upward of 100 ships at sea bound to New York port which have not yet been spoken or otherwise heard from. The majority of them should have arrived many days ago and some a fortnight ago.

Recorder Smythe of New York sentenced Miss Jennie Elmore to five years in the penitentiary for forgery. The woman eloped from Minneapolis with a man who is described as a gambler. He had poor luck in this city and illtreated his companion. He finally, according to her story, induced her by threats to take forged checks for small amounts and pass them to secure food.

Startling revelations have been made regarding the British war establishment. when the troops were inspected recently many thousand men were found to exist merely on paper. Regiments which were reported at their full complement proved to be mere skeletons, and cooks, servants and camp followers were hastily crowded into the ranks to satisfy the inspectors.

Five men were asphyxiated in a Chicago sewer. Four were dead when brought up and another died soon afterward. The names of the dead are Michael Laski, Joseph Gill, James Grady, Daniel Curtis and Mathew Mason. All were married except Gill. The survivors say their first intimation that anything was wrong was when Gill dropped dead.

O. Roletto Jr., and Charles Bouttineau are here with a delegation of cheifs and head men of the Chippewas, and recently Moose Dung and other Red Lake chiefs came in from the West. The Turtle Mountain chiefs for some reason object to rearrangement of the Devil's Lake land district.

Maj. Gen. William Earle, C. S. I., who was killed at Berti, recently, entered the British army in 1851, and reached the rank of major general in 1880. He served with the Forty-ninth regiment through the Crimean war, and participated in the battles of Alma and Inkerman, the seige of Sebastopol, the sortie of Oct. 26, and the result of the Redan. In the British campaign in Egypt against the army of Arabi Pasha, Gen. Earle was in command of the lines of communication, and rendered excellent service.

A number of unpublished letters of Lord and Lady Byron have been offered for sale at public auction. In one letter Lady Byron writes: "Lord Byron married me with the deepest determination of revenge, which he avowed on the day of our marriage, and which he executed ever since with systematic and increasing cruelty. There are other letters in the same strain: also correspondence of Lady Byron with Augusta, the poet's sister referring to family differences. The letters suggest nothing to support the scandalous charges of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe.

The Wisconsin senators have asked time in executive session to look over the papers in the charges against Marshal Botkin of Montana. Senator Cameron says he will vote for Mr. Kriedler's confirmation when he is satisfied the judiciary committee's report is in accordance with the facts. Senator Lapham of New York is pushing Mr. Kriedler's confirmation, and after due courtesy to the Wisconsin senators expects the senate to vote for Mr. Kreidler. It should go into history, by the way, that Kreidler was not Gov. Crosby's candidate. He had another man in view for the place, but the president knew Kreidler's efficiency and selected him.

Some days ago a Miss Cox, residing near Okone, West Va., was seized with neuralgia of the bowels. A physician administered a dose of morphine. Shortly after the girl apparently died, and was prepared for burial. The night of the girl's burial dogs in the vicinity visited the graveyard and made so much noise that the people talked, and it was decided to open the grave. A sickening spectacle was revealed. The girl had revived after burial, and a frightful struggle followed. She had torn her clothes from her body and ripped them to shreds. The flesh hung in strips from her arms, a lip was nearly bitten off and nearly all her hair had been pulled from her head. The family are nearly mad with grief.

The diaries of th Greeley party have been open five days for inspection at the signal office, and are now closed. They were written for Gen. Hazen's reading and not to be published, but the charges that were made against Lieut. Greely made it necessary to make them public. Brainerd and Connell have declined opening their journals to the public; not because they contain anything that would be unpleasant but that they have a proprietary right to them which they desire to use to their own advantage. The general verdict in Washington is that Greely has been fully exonerated. The wonder is that something worse was not shown. Kislingbury's criticisms were unquestionably made when he was much enfeebled in mind and body.

GORDON'S FATE SETTLED.

The Brave Commander Was Stabbed to Death in Khartoum Before the Capture of the City

The Entire Garrison Slaughtered, Men, Women and Children, and Almost Unparalleled Atrocities Committed.

Col. Wilson and Party Rescued from Their Perilous Position—The Proposed Advance from Suakim.

Gen. Gordon Dead.

LONDON, Special Cable, Feb. 10.—A report has reached here professing to throw light on the fate of Gordon. An Arab messenger has reached Korti who says that Gordon was among the first to fall; in fact, that his death was the signal for the revolt which led to the capture of the city. A great tumult arose in the city and Gordon went out impulsively to learn its nature. As he was leaving the government house, the report says, he was suddenly set upon from behind and stabbed to death before he could defend himself. A dreadful massacre followed. Every Christian was hunted down and slaughtered. The most frightful enormities were committed. Neither sex nor age saved the unfortunates from death amid terrible sufferings. The treachery of the pashas is confirmed. They feared, it appears, that with Gordon alive they would never induce the garrison to submit. Once he had fallen the gates were opened to the enemy and the government house given to the flames. Then the Arab besiegers poured in in great hordes. Many of the survivors of the army of Hicks Pasha were in their ranks. They brought with them great stores of ammunition and many guns, which they have mounted on the fortifications. Sir Charles Wilson reports that the city will require a long siege by a large army before it can be taken. To hurl the handful commanded by Lord Wolseley against it would be madness. All the London papers appear in black borders. The report is given out as official. A great popular uprising in favor of a war of extermination is expected as a result of the news.

COL. WILSON SAVED.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A dispatch from Korti, dated Feb. 9, says: Lord Beresford has returned in safety from Gubat, bringing with him Col. Wilson and party, who were stranded on an island some distance up the Nile while returning from Khartoum. Some difficulty was experienced in fetching away the stranded party. The rebels on the river banks kept up a constant firing, and shortly after the party embarked a bullet from a rebel's rifle pierced the boiler of the steamer. It was necessary to anchor under fire and make repairs. The British fire, however, took effect, and the rebels were repulsed. Immediately after reaching Gubat, Col. Wilson started for Korti, where he has now arrived, to report in person to Lord Wolseley the details of his reconnoisance at Khartoum. Lord Wolseley telegraphs further particulars of Beresford's rescue of Col. Wilson. When the steamer had gone down the river about three miles, a battery of the enemy, on the left bank, opened fire upon it. The steamer returned the fire, which was kept up while the steamer anchored for repairs. Meanwhile Col. Wilson with a small party took four guns and landed on the right bank. The party marched down the river till directly opposite the battery, and then put the guns in position and opened fire. Much assistance was thus rendered Lord Charles in keeping the fire of the enemy down. At sunset Col. Wilson and party marched on three miles further down the river, and halted for the night. They were there joined by Lord Charles the following morning. The steamer meanwhile had another engagement with a rebel battery, but succeeded in passing it without serious harm. Col. Wilson and party were again taken on board, and the steamer proceeded to Gubat without further difficulty. During the passage from the island to Gubat one man was killed and seven injured. Of the injured four were natives, scalded in the engine room. Lord Wolseley concludes his dispatch with these words:

> I cannot speak too highly of the pluck of Lord Charles Beresford and party. Col. Wilson's men likewise behaved admirably and with the usual determination of Englishmen.

GEN. GORDON DEAD.

A dispatch from Korti says: "Colonels Wilson and Wortley, with the expedition to Khartoum, arrived to-day. They made the journey from Gubat in four days. They bring news of Gen. Gordon's death. One of the pashas among Gen. Gordon's forces marched the garrison to the side of the town nearest Omdurman, saying a rebel attack was expected at that point. Meantime, another traitorous pasha opened the gates at the other end and allowed the Mahdi's troops to enter, and they easily captured the town. Gen. Gordon was stabbed while leaving the government house." The war office has ordered uniforms and accouterments for 10,000 reserves. Gen. Wolseley asks that the advance from Suakim be made within a month. He sees no necessity for waiting until autumn or for the construction of a railroad across the desert from Suakim to Berber. Gen. Stephenson, Gen. Dormer and others of the military council at Cairo, however, oppose the dispatch of an expedition from Suakim in so short a time, on the ground that it cannot be made in readiness to start before April. They say the march to Berber will take a month and be a severe test of the endurance of the men, who will suffer from intense heat and want of water. Isolated detachments will be exposed to attacks by Osman Digna. If, however, Gen. Wolseley declares an early advance to Berber necessary for the safety of the Nile expedition, the Cairo authorities will withdraw their opposition.

DETAILS OF GORDON'S DEATH.

The following additional details of the killing of Gen. Gordon and the fall of Khartoum are at hand: On the day of the capture, which is variously stated as the 26th and 27th of January, Gen. Gordon's attention was attracted by a great tumult on the streets He left the so-called palace, or government building, in which he had made his headquarters, to ascertain the cause of the disturbance. Just as he reached the street, he was stabbed in the back and fell dead. The tumult was caused by the Mahdi's troops, who had gained access to the interior of the town through treachery, and who were soon in complete possession of the place, including the citadel. A fearful massacre of the garrison followed. The scenes of slaughter are described as surpassing the Bulgarian atrocities, and rivaling the worst horrors of the Sepoy mutiny. Panic-stricken Egyptians were captured in their flight and put to death with most fiendish tortures—some were transfixed with spears and left to bleed to death. Most of the victims were mutilated in the most horrible manner.

EYES WERE GOUGED OUT,

noses slit, and tongues torn out by the roots. In many cases mutilated parts of victims' bodies were thrust in their mouths while they were still living. The massacre included many non-combatants, and Egyptian women were subjected to the most shameful indignities. More than a hundred women and young girls were given over to the Mahdi's followers to be used as slaves. After the slaughter Many Arabs were seen rushing about the streets with heads of Egyptians impaled upon spears. The next night was spent in saturnatra of blood and debauchery. Since the capture of Khartoum, the Mahdi has repaired the fortifications and made the place well nigh impregnable. He has made it his permanent headquarters, and is said to have an abundance of guns, small arms and ammunition. Both Col. Wilson's steamers were wrecked owing to the treachery of the pilots, who will be court-martialed.

WOLSELEY'S OPEN DISCONTENT.

London cable of the 9th: To-day's cabinet council lasted four hours, and was one of the stormiest sessions that have been held since Gladstone's return to power. After the formal meeting of the ministers in Downing street there was an excited discussion at the war office between Lord Hartington and the chiefs of the administrative departments. The officers were in favor of urgent measures, but the secretary for war insisted upon the necessity for caution. The ministers are sadly worried by Gen. Wolseley's open expressions of discontent. He has complained very frankly of the ambiguous character of the orders he has received from London, and some of his dispatches which have been made public are not couched in respectful terms. The government appears, however, to have at last decided upon a definite policy, and it is believed that its present determination is based upon warnings received from Sir Evelyn Baring, the fiscal agent of England in Egypt. Sir Evelyn has notified the government in very positive language that a continuance of the Mahdi's triumphs in the Soudan will not only be subversive of English prestige in Egypt, but will be fatal to English men and women in all Mohammedan countries. The London World says:

> There are hopes not altogether illusionary that Gen Gordon has made good his escape and gone up the river. Why not? He had eleven steamers originally, and he may have had the foresight to keep his line of retreat open along the Nile. It was his avowed intention some time back to withdraw to the equator if hard pressed, and it is well known that the river is navigable by steamers as high as Gondokoroo.

Gen. Wolseley has requested the recall of all the special correspondents of the London newspapers on account of the scarcity of rations. This is in accord with Gen. Wolseley's frequent expressions of dislike to reporters, but indicates a more desperate condition of affairs than has been hitherto reported.

Sir Charles Beresford and party were ten hours under fire before they were able to rescue Col. Wilson. The enemy used rifles from behind entrenchments. The fire from the enemy's cannon was effective. In addition to a hole made in the boiler, a shell burst on the steamer. The British fire was most effective, silencing the rebel guns and forcing the men to seek shelter. A regular postal service has been formed between Korti and Gubat. The West Kent regiment has left Korti for Gubat. The storming of Metemneh by the British is expected. A Korti dispatch says that Gubat is strongly fortified to resist a possible siege. A fort has been constructed, triangular in shape, with deep ditches in front. Brushwood and wire work outside will impede the enemy in the event of an attack.

THE MAHDI'S LETTER.

The letter recently sent by the Mahdi to English officers on Col. Wilson's steamer, contained a postscript saying it was the Mahdi's first and last letter to the English, and that unless they submitted he would kill all the Kaffir dogs. The bearer of the letter, a dervish, urged the Egyptians on the steamer to join the Mahdi's army, saying that God had sent the Mahdi to convert the world, and the Mahdi intended to march straight to the steamboat. On the day after the steamer stranded (Sunday) the Mahdi's emir landed on the island and urged the British to surrender. Sunday evening Hamid Bey, two skippers and seventeen natives deserted the steamer. The steamer Sofia, with Lord Charles Beresford on board, arrived on Tuesday. During the engagement with the enemy the Sofia's boiler was struck by a shell and a great explosion occurred, followed by the rush and roar of steam. After a temporary patch had been fixed on the boiler, the Sofia passed the enemy's works under a heavy fire, towing a nuggar containing Col. Wilson's baggage. The nuggar grounded 600 yards below the fort. The night was spent in trying to float her. Perfect silence was maintained on board the steamer, which led the Arabs to believe she had been abandoned, and they stopped firing and commenced beating drums. Just before daybreak the enemy saw sparks emerging from the funnel of the steamer, and they at once began to yell in the fiercest manner and opened a heavy fire on the vessel. The steamer replied effectively, and soon passed out of range. It is estimated that the enemy numbered 4,000. They had three Krupp guns. Col. Wilson's loss on the island was two killed and twenty wounded of the Egyptian troops, and four wounded of the British. The Soudanese allies fought well until they heard of the fall of Khartoum, when they became demoralized. The Mahdi caused the massacre of all of Gordon's men, together with their wives and children. Gen. Gordon was killed on the morning of the 27th. The garrison at Gubat is exasperated over the news of the massacre. The Daily News appears in mourning for Gen. Gordon, and publishes the following from Gakdul:

> Natives who reached here from Khartoum say Gen. Gordon was killed while in the act of leaving his house to rally the faithful troops. The latter were cut down to a man, and for hours the best part of the town was a scene of merciless slaughter, not even women and children being spared. All notables were killed except the treacherous pashas and their followers.

Gen. Earle's advance from Birti to Berber commenced yesterday. Gen. Wolseley, with the British forces, started from Korti last evening to cross the desert to Gubat. Only portions of two regiments remain at Korti.

The Bombay correspondent of the Times reports that an Indian brigade has been definitely ordered to Suakim. It will consist of 2,100 infantry and 500 cavalrymen. The morning papers have columns bordered with black, as a token of the grief which is universally felt over Gordon's fate. Some papers confine the mourning emblems to the editorial pages, but in most of them column rules are reversed on all the pages. The News says:

> The age of chivalry is revived again in Gordon's history, and the whole world thrills with passionate grief at this Christian warrior's death.

The Standard alone refuses to believe that Gordon is dead, and clings to the shadow of hope that he may be a prisoner or may have escaped south.

ROME, Feb. 10.—The Italian expedition recently landed at Massowah has been ordered to aid the English operations in the Soudan by marching into the interior and relieving the garrisons at Kassala and Sennaar. The movement if successfully accomplished will open a line of communication to the coast and to Khartoum parallel with the route from Suakim to Berber.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Lord Wolseley telegraphs the war office to-day from Korti as follows:

> The advance guard of Gen. Earle's column, consisting of a squadron of cavalry under command of Col. Butler, surprised a large body of the Meenassir tribe under Wadgam, the murderer of Col. Stewart, encamped at Shakoah Wells. The cavalry charged the encampment and the enemy fled in every direction, leaving behind them thirty killed and a large number of camels, cattle and many Remington rifles. Col. Butler captured six prisoners.

Great activity prevails in Chatham, Woolwich and Aldershot preparations for sending reinforcements to Egypt being rapidly pushed. The Twentieth Hussars and the Third battalion of the Rifle brigade are now at Aldershot. The battalion of Scott's fusiliers, a battalion of Coldstream Guards, and a squadron of the Fifth Lancers, have been ordered to proceed at once to Suakim.

ITALY'S PART.

VIENNA, Feb. 10.—It is understood that Italy is contented to occupy Cairo, Alexandria, Suez and a portion of Ismailia, so as to enable the troops of Egypt to proceed at once to the frontier.

EGYPTIAN FINANCE.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—Waddington, French ambassador, has presented to Earl Granville amended counter proposals of France regarding Egyptian affairs. The proposals embody increased demands on the part of France. They insist that an international commission be appointed to investigate the finances of Egypt, and that an intenational conference be called to meet at Cairo to neutralize the Suez canal. Advices from Paris say the modifications of the French proposals were made in such a manner as would, as far as possible, avoid wounding the amour propre of the English.

MASSOWAH, Feb. 5.—A great battle was fought in the Gallabal country with a large force of Baggara rebels detached from Sennar. After a severe struggle the Baggaras were utterly routed, losing 6,000 men and four emirs, one of whom was a nephew of the Mahdi.

Advices from Gubat, dated Feb. 1, give gloomy statements about the condition of Stewart's forces. These men have been placed on three-quarters rations. These have been once supplemented with beans and fresh meat. The camels have had plenty of forage. Shendy, on the opposite bank of Nile, and Metemneh, three miles from Gubat, are occasionally shelled by a steamer. The troops are busily employed in clearing the ground in front of the camp and in detached work at the adjoining villages. The main earthwork erected for the protection of the camp from the river front has already been greatly strengthened. It was calculated that they would be completed that night. Several men wounded in the desert battle have died in camp since the arrival of the army at Gubat. The others are doing well. The remainder of the Royal artillery and naval brigade, with ten guns, including one Gardner, have arrived. The convoy has sent back to Jakdul wells for more stores, and have taken forty of the wounded along. Nearly every night the pickets exchange shots with unfriendly Arabs. A second dispatch received from Stewart's camp, at Gubat, states that Col. Wilson had on the island where he was stranded 250 refugees whom he found along the banks of the Nile near Khartoum. A dispatch to-day from Wolseley's headquarters states that couriers, accompanied by an escort, now on their way across the Bayuda desert, are expected to arrive at Korti to-night. The couriers are conveying reports of Lord Beresford's attempts to rescue Col. Wilson and party from the island in the Nile, where they have been hemmed in by hostile Arabs.

Value of Well-Bred Stock.

The value of well-bred stock among our useful domestic animals has long been recognized by intelligent farmers. Its superiority over the native, or unimproved stock is too well known to need discussion; and yet, while the advantages of keeping good stock are so many and so plain, is it not a little singular that so many farmers are found who are willing to retain their native cattle? Is it not singular that so many are very backward about infusing the blood of improved herds into their inferior bred animals? It must be plain to the dullest understanding that such an improvement represents a money value. Improvement of stock means a fatter pocket book and a larger bank account. It costs far less to keep a good animal than a poor one and while the good one makes ample returns for his keeping, the poor one makes little and in many cases no returns. In proof of this you often hear men say that "stock-raising don't pay." In the case of beef cattle, those by sires of good descent are ready for market from one to two years earlier than scrubs, they will outweigh the scrubs and their flesh is far superior. The characteristics of early maturity, ease of fattening, and that peculiar development of form sought in early maturing beef cattle, has been gained only by long, persevering and patient efforts. The origin and characteristics of improved breeds of all of our most useful domestic animals attests this important fact. Animals have been kept in one locality for many years by intelligent and judicious breeders, who have made it their especial care to fix a desired type by the selection of sires and dams having certain characteristics in common, and blending the offspring, so that the desired traits have become hereditary. Differences or marked variations from the type have been eradicated by such long continued and careful breeding, and our present improved breeds, with their uniformity of character, and the constancy of transmission to offspring, are the results. The histories of the improved breeds are of great interest as illustrating this important fact, and exhibits in a strong light the labor, money and time expended, to say nothing of the patient waiting and watching, the judgment and vigilance in breeding and management which for more than a century were required to bring about the desired results. We are apt to forget this, and fail to appreciate the obligations we are under to those who have by such means brought the improved breeds up to their present high standards of excellence, but we should not forget to take advantage of their labors and expenses by using the results they have obtained and placed within our grasp. There is no good excuse for Polk County farmers as there is now within our limits a representative of almost every improved breed of cattle in existence, and the lack will soon be supplied at the rate we have been improving. Of the two breeds yet unrepresented in Polk County there are parties now negotiating to supply them. We shall have something to say as to the relative values of the different breeds, and we also invite discussions of their merits through the columns of The Journal.

BELTS OF TIMBER FOR SHELTER.

Every farmer who has a prairie farm, and has no natural forest growing around his buildings, can plant one at very little cost. In the first place the strip of land to be planted to trees and cuttings should be well cultivated and pulverized, with two or three crops of grain taken from the soil before planting commences. The great mistake, generally made, is planting the ground too soon to trees, or before the wild grass nature of the soil has been subdued. The cost of planting a windbreak depends upon the length and width of land used. It should be made at least from six to ten rods away from buildings, so that snow will not drift around them during heavy storms of winter. Six rods west of buildings (ten is better) plow a strip of land north and south ten rods in length and four rods in width; same distance north of buildings plow another strip of land same width and length as first, meeting it at right angles. Now you have a piece of land plowed on two sides of your buildings, north and west, in the shape of a right-angle. Harrow it well, then mark it off in rows four feet apart with a plow, going twice in each furrow, so it will be good depth to plant. The first four rows on the outside should be planted to willow cuttings, setting them eight inches apart in the furrow; this will take for four rows, each twenty rods in length, sixteen hundred cuttings, which will cost four dollars. The balance of the rows, ten in number, can be set to cottonwood and box elder trees, set four feet apart in the row, which will take about eight hundred trees, two years old, which will cost four dollars. Thus for the small sum of eight dollars any farmer can commence planting a wind-break around his buildings. If he wishes to plant a larger strip of land, say twenty rods on north side of buildings and twenty rods on west side, and four rods wide, it can be done for double cost of first, or sixteen dollars. The wind-break when planted should be thoroughly cultivated in summer to make good thrifty growth of cuttings and trees. Late in fall it is best to mulch the willows with straw to catch snow to protect first year's growth which are very tender and apt to kill back to ground if exposed too much to hard frosts. It is also well to mulch around the young cottonwood and box elder trees with a little straw, enough to catch some snow for protection. Remove all straw in spring and give good cultivation another season. Now, the willows have become wood-hardened and strong enough to stand severe frosts. Late in fall mulch quite heavy between rows of willows and trees with straw, four to six inches in depth. Let this remain on the ground another season, between the rows, to keep down weeds and make the ground moist around the trees during dry weather in summer; also it saves expense of cultivation. It would be well to trim lower branches of willows and the young trees to give more uniformity and better shape to the trees during the second year's growth. Willows do not grow well on alkali spots; not even cottonwood and box elder trees. Plant on ground as free from it as possible. I have examined some of the willow hedges grown by some of our best farmers in this latitude the past four years, and found them sound and perfect to the very top, where they have made a growth of fifteen to twenty feet planted four years from cuttings. It will prove one of our most valuable trees for hedges on prairie soil. Every farmer who can spare a little time and money cannot make a more valuable improvement on his farm than to plant a grove around his buildings. It will come back to him four fold in the increased value of his home. It will give him comfort in winter by breaking the cold, bleak winds on the prairie. Even in summer how pleasant to see prairie homes surrounded with shades and a young forest of trees. It marks a thrifty prosperity among its inhabitants, and an inestimable value to the whole country.

Diversified Husbandry.

Much has been said in relation to a system of diversified husbandry as the proper solution of existing troubles. Jim Hill says: "raise less wheat and more stock!" G. A. Pillsbury, the elevator system, says: "raise less wheat and more flax!" While there is a great deal in this good advice it does not comprise it all for as long as an embargo is placed upon a free market it makes little difference. Farmers will find it the best method to raise cattle, raise wheat, raise flax and raise h-ll until an open, free market is the result. A market in which any man who wishes can buy and ship grain and produce.

Profits of Flax Raising.

Worthington Advance: The flax industry has now assumed such importance as to demand the attention of our farmers and business men in some intelligent and organized way. The articles heretofore published in our columns show that of the 8,000,000 to 9,000,000 bushels of seed grown in the United States this year, about one-half of the whole yield was grown in Minnesota and Dakota; that the great bulk of the Minnesota yield, say three-fourths, was produced in the eight or ten counties in the southwestern corner of the State.

Although the flax industry in America is just fairly begun, it is claimed, as shown in our report of the Tow-mill Convention, that the farmers annually lose forty millions of dollars by not having a market for the straw. Mills, however, for using the fibre are beginning to multiply, there being fifteen to twenty in the district represented by the Convention, and with mills sufficient to utilize the straw, the flax crop will become one of the most profitable which farmers can grow. This will be especially so should the proposed establishment of linen mills in the west be realized and the farmers be induced to grow the best grades of fibre. It was shown at the Convention held in Worthington that by securing the best seed and adopting the best methods of culture the straw product can be raised to two and two and a half tons an acre and sold at $10 to $12 a ton. Add to this an average of eight to fifteen bushels of seed to the acre sold at $1 to $1.50 per bushel and it will be seen that flax can be made a most profitable crop.

The Best and Cheapest Dairy Paper.

Every well-posted dairyman has heard of the Jefferson County Union, published at Fort Atkinson, Wis., the leading dairy paper of the Northwest, edited and owned by W. D. Hoard, who for a number of years has filled the position of President of the Northwestern Dairyman's Association. For the sake of placing sound dairy reading within the reach of all, Mr. Hoard has commenced the publication of a compact edition of all dairy, market and agricultural matter contained in the Union, which will be issued weekly under the name of "Hoard's Dairyman." This paper will be issued for a time in a six column folio form, and is truly a very valuable compendium of dairy knowledge. The Dairyman will contain each week the finest and most extensive dairy market reports from all important markets besides a letter from Elgin, the great butter market of the Northwest. In addition will be given letters from the most practical dairymen of the country, on all that pertains to first-class dairy farming, breeding dairy stock, &c. Reports in summary of all the leading Dairy Conventions, will be published. Each number contains a record of the sales of butter by the leading dairymen around Fort Atkinson, and elsewhere. This is a valuable feature. Every farmer who keeps a half dozen cows ought to read "Hoard's Dairyman." It will pay him a hundred fold on the investment. We will send the Dairyman with The Journal for one year for $2. Call and see sample copies. [48-46]

Brainerd Dispatch.

If the good people of Crookston and Polk County are awake to their best interests they will do all in their power to aid the Brainerd & Northwestern road. The bulk of the road will not only release them from the monopoly of the Manitoba road and the clutches of Jim Hill, but will give them a direct outlet for their wheat and other farm produce, which that grand country produces in large quantities. The building of this road to Crookston, the proposed route, would make a city of it that would be second to none in the Northwest. Should Crookston and Polk County act hostile to the proposition, of which there is no likelihood, there is a possibility that the road would give them the go-by, and strike Red Lake Falls. Again, we say, if the good people are awake, and desire to serve their best interests, they will take off their coats and go to work for the same.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS Israel Dion, as mortgagor, did on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 25th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18,) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 93, 93 94 and 95; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 25-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable; and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider and declare and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 55-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1884, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated Feb. 18th, A. D. 1885.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 24 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51¼ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 76 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

Value of Well Bred Stock.

The value of well-bred stock among our useful domestic animals has long been recognized by intelligent farmers. Its superiority over the native or unimproved stock is too well known to need discussion, and yet, while the advantages of keeping good stock are so many and so plain, is it not a little singular that so many farmers are found who are willing to retain their native cattle? Is it not singular that so many are very backward about infusing the blood of improved herds into their inferior bred animals? It must be plain to the dullest understanding that such an improvement represents a money value. Improvement of stock means a fatter pocket book, and a larger bank account. It costs far less to keep a good animal than a poor one and while the good one makes ample returns for his keeping, the poor one makes little and in many cases no returns. In proof of this you often hear men say that "stock-raising don't pay." In the case of beef cattle, those by sires of good descent are ready for market from one to two years earlier than scrubs, they will outweigh the scrubs and their flesh is far superior. The characteristics of early maturity, ease of fattening, and that peculiar development of form sought in early maturing beef cattle, has been gained only by long, persevering and patient efforts. The origin and characteristics of improved breeds of all of our most useful domestic animals attests this important fact. Animals have been kept in one locality for many years by intelligent and judicious breeders, who have made it their especial care to fix a desired type by the selection of sires and dams having certain characteristics in common, and blending the offspring, so that the desired traits have become hereditary. Differences or marked variations from the type have been eradicated by such long continued and careful breeding, and our present improved breeds, with their uniformity of character, and the constancy of transmission to offspring, are the results. The histories of the improved breeds are of great interest as illustrating this important fact, and exhibits in a strong light the labor, money and time expended, to say nothing of the patient waiting and watching, the judgment and vigilance in breeding and management which for more than a century were required to bring about the desired results. We are apt to forget this, and fail to appreciate the obligations we are under to those who have by such means brought the improved breeds up to their present high standards of excellence, but we should not forget to take advantage of their labors and expenses by using the results they have obtained and placed within our grasp. There is no good excuse for Polk County farmers as there is now within our limits a representative of almost every improved breed of cattle in existence, and the lack will soon be supplied at the rate we have been improving. Of the two breeds yet unrepresented in Polk County there are parties now negotiating to supply them. We shall have something to say as to the relative values of the different breeds, and we also invite discussions of their merits through the columns of THE JOURNAL.

BELTS OF TIMBER FOR SHELTER.

Every farmer who has a prairie farm, and has no natural forest growing around his buildings, can plant one at very little cost. In the first place the strip of land to be planted to trees and cuttings should be well cultivated and pulverized, with two or three crops of grain taken from the soil before planting commences. The great mistake generally made, is planting the ground too soon to trees, or before the wild grass nature of the soil has been subdued. The cost of planting a wind-break depends upon the length and width of land used. It should be made at least from six to ten rods away from buildings, so that snow will not drift around them during heavy storms of winter. Six rods west of buildings (ten is better) plow a strip of land north and south ten rods in length and four rods in width; same distance north of buildings plow another strip of land same width and length as first, meeting it at right angles. Now you have a piece of land plowed on two sides of your buildings, north and west, in the shape of a right-angle. Harrow it well, then mark it off in rows four feet apart with a plow, going twice in each furrow, so it will be good depth to plant. The first four rows on the outside should be planted to willow cuttings, setting them eight inches apart in the furrow; this will take for four rows, each twenty rods in length, sixteen hundred cuttings, which will cost four dollars. The balance of the rows, ten in number, can be set to cottonwood and box elder trees, set four feet apart in the row, which will take about eight hundred trees, two years old, which will cost four dollars. Thus for the small sum of eight dollars any farmer can commence planting a wind-break around his buildings. If he wishes to plant a larger strip of land, say twenty rods on north side of buildings and twenty rods on west side, and four rods wide, it can be done for double cost of first, or sixteen dollars. The wind break when planted should be thoroughly cultivated in summer to make good thrifty growth of cuttings and trees. Late in fall it is best to mulch the willows with straw to catch snow to protect first year's growth which is very tender and apt to kill back to ground if exposed too much to hard frosts. It is also well to mulch around the young cottonwood and box elder trees with a little straw, enough to catch some snow for protection. Remove all straw in spring and give good cultivation another season. Now the willows have become wood-hardened and strong enough to stand severe frosts. Late in fall mulch quite heavy between rows of willows and trees with straw, four to six inches in depth. Let this remain on the ground another season, between the rows, to keep down weeds and make the ground moist around the trees during dry weather in summer, also it saves expense of cultivation. It would be well to trim lower branches of willows and the young trees to give more uniformity and better shape to the trees during the second year's growth. Willows do not grow well on alkali spots, not even cottonwood and box elder trees. Plant on ground as free from it as possible. I have examined some of the willow hedges grown by some of our best farmers in this latitude the past four years, and found them sound and perfect to the very top, where they have made a growth of fifteen to twenty feet planted four years from cuttings. It will prove one of our most valuable trees for hedges on prairie soil. Every farmer who can spare a little time and money cannot make a more valuable improvement on his farm than to plant a grove around his buildings. It will come back to him four fold in the increased value of his home. It will give him comfort in winter by breaking the cold, bleak winds on the prairie. Even in summer how pleasant to see prairie homes surrounded with shades and a young forest of trees. It marks a thrifty prosperity among its inhabitants, and an inestimable value to the whole country.

Diversified Husbandry.

Much has been said in relation to a system of diversified husbandry as the proper solution of existing troubles. Jim Hill says: "raise less wheat and more stock!" G. A. Pillsbury, the elevator system, says: "raise less wheat and more flax!" While there is a great deal in this good advice it does not comprise it all for as long as an embargo is placed upon a free market it makes little difference. Farmers will find it the best method to raise cattle, raise wheat, raise flax and raise h-ll until an open free market is the result. A market in which any man who wishes can buy and ship grain and produce.

Profits of Flax Raising.

Worthington Advance: The flax industry has now assumed such importance as to demand the attention of our farmers and business men in some intelligent and organized way. The articles heretofore published in our columns show that of the 8,000,000 to 9,000,000 bushels of seed grown in the United States this year, about one-half of the whole yield was grown in Minnesota and Dakota; that the great bulk of the Minnesota yield, say three-fourths, was produced in the eight or ten counties in the southwestern corner of the State.

Although the flax industry in America is just fairly begun, it is claimed, as shown in our report of the Tow-mill Convention, that the farmers annually lose forty millions of dollars by not having a market for the straw. Mills, however, for using the fibre are beginning to multiply, there being fifteen to twenty in the district represented by the Convention, and with mills sufficient to utilize the straw, the flax crop will become one of the most profitable which farmers can grow. This will be especially so should the proposed establishment of linen mills in the west be realized and the farmers be induced to grow the best grades of fibre. It was shown at the Convention held in Worthington that by securing the best seed and adopting the best methods of culture the straw product can be raised to two and two and a half tons an acre and sold at $10 to $12 a ton. Add to this an average of eight to fifteen bushels of seed to the acre sold at $1 to $1.50 per bushel and it will be seen that flax can be made a most profitable crop.

Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 25th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18,) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage, and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 92, 93, 94 and 95; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 23-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable; and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider and declare, and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 65-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad. M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage, together with the taxes on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated Feb. 18th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, Arthur Cote, as mortgagor, did on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of March 1st, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The southeast quarter of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1881, at 4:30 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 196, 197 and 198, and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of two hundred and fifty-six and 85-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of March, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did, on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of eighteen and 20-100 dollars, for which sum so paid, the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said premises for the amount so paid, with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice, including taxes paid as aforesaid, the sum of two hundred and ninety-nine and [illegible]-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont, and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont, and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage, together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law. BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 18 to 24 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51¼ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 78 stalks from one oat."

From 10 ozs. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen. [42-39]

The hog is universal. Wherever civilized man goes, he goes, and in some cases at least he is as civilized as man. His tender flesh may be too rich for poets and dyspeptics, but severe physical labor, especially in the open air, may be better sustained on a pork diet than on any other meat.

The hog is not more prone to disease than other animals. Sickness comes to him only because his protector, man, does not understand his requirements and delicate constitution. Much of what is called swine cholera, for instance, is the result of feeding him nothing but corn diet. Corn and hog cholera go together. This valuable article of food is fattening, but it is also heating and constipating. It will not produce muscle. Every swine raiser knows that it is disastrous to feed brood sows on corn alone.

No. The pig must have variety of food as well as man. Roots, wheat middlings and bran and clover hay are among the best foods to mix with the corn. Nothing can be better than turnips boiled and fed with bran or with the clover hay. The hay, too, is boiled previous to feeding by some of the best swine raisers. The turnips may be grown upon ground from which early potatoes have been dug, and thus the soil twice utilized. Potatoes too small for use by man, the pig will be thankful for, and eat gladly, at once making juicy pork steaks for his owner and saving what otherwise would be a dead loss and waste. Potatoes are a valuable food for swine. It is enough to feed the corn plentifully when it is wanted to lay on fat at marketing time. Then, too, the corn should be shelled and fed from a decent, stationary trough, and not thrown at random into a muck of filth and mud. A hog treated in such a nasty way will become diseased and die, infallibly.

Much attention is being paid to hog breeding at present, and those who are giving it are being repaid ten fold. The Poland China is one of the best general breeds in the country. The improved large Yorkshire has also been found most desirable, especially when crossed with the Berkshire or Chester White.

THE PIG PEN.

Neither is the hog a dirty animal when decently treated. It is exposure, slovenly surroundings, improper food and dirty drink that makes herds of swine sicken and die off. This is becoming understood at last.

The model pen is built in two parts. One end is left of bare earth for the animals to root in as they like. At the other end is a raised floor, elevated eight or ten inches from the ground. Here the hogs have a dry, covered place to sleep in. The floor is made of strips nailed on a quarter of an inch apart, so that the moisture may run through. Upon this is placed straw. Rooting into straw stacks and heaping together under them in piles upon one another, overheats hogs. Then, the next thing, they will be exposed, unprotected, to the northerly blizzard, steaming hot as they are. When they take cold and die it is a visitation of Providence.

The hog must also have his drink of clean, pure water. He is given every abomination in his swill, from the soapsuds of the week's wash to the contents of soured tomato cans. Foul water is as hurtful to hogs as to horses or cows, and the sooner farmers learn this fact the better. The hog drinks impure water because he is good-natured, and doesn't refuse anything; but it is this very thing which introduces the true hog cholera germ into him. Then when this disease attacks him, and the herd dies by the hundred, once more it is a visitation of Providence.

In order to facilitate cleanliness in swine-keeping what is called a "dumping pig trough" has been lately invented. It is fixed in the edge of the pen and made to tip outwardly so as to to deposit outside the pen the refuse accumulating.

Read and Ponder.

The following remarks were made by E. J. Hodgson, a prominent St. Paul lawyer, before the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce, recently:

"The railroad commissioner in his late report shows that the gross receipts of the railroads in this State for the year ending June 30th 1884, were $23,183,465. That is more than the entire value of our wheat crop of 1883. The acreage for that year was 2,507,171 acres. At thirteen bushels per acre we have 42,595,223 bushels. If this brought the farmer seventy cents per bushel, which, I think, is above rather than below the price received, we have $22,815,256 as the value of our entire wheat crop, taking out nothing for bread or seed. Gentlemen, how long do you think we can stand this thing? The net profits of the railroads were $11,753,477. Allowing fifty cents per bushel as the cost of raising and marketing wheat, it would leave the farmer a net profit of twenty cents per bushel, or $8,518,654. The net profits on all other agricultural products could not be more than one-half as much as that realized on wheat, making a total of about $10,000,000 net profits from our farms, as against about $12,000,000 on railroads. There are 58,000 railroad employes in the State. There are about 400,000 people working on farms. Add 42,000 to railroad employes for their wives, and you have an industry with 100,000 people making more profits than another industry with 400,000 people, and surely the capital invested in farms, and farm improvements at least equal the amount invested in railroads. But if these are facts as to the year 1883, when we have allowed seventy cents per bushel to the farmer for his wheat, how much worse will be the showing as to the crop of 1884, when wheat has not averaged the farmer fifty cents per bushel.

Gentlemen, I ask you if these figures do not present a very serious state of affairs for you as well as the agriculturist.

The railroad commissioner informs us that the railroads of Minnesota cost on an average $40,994 per mile, or $491,054,515 in the whole. Now, does anyone believe they actually cost this amount? But he further tells us that the total stock of these roads is $274,465,034, and the total debt is $320,560,353. We shall fall short of the mark if we say we are paying dividends on three times the cost of the roads.

The commissioner shows us that the cost of operating our roads has decreased 5 per cent, while the freight business has increased 8 per cent, and the passenger business 10 per cent. He further says that by refusing to receive grain except from 30,000 bushel elevators, the railroads have killed of competition and driven off independent buyers. Again, he says that outside buyers are, on various pretexts, refused cars and frozen out. In confirmation of these facts he states that the Mississippi River towns from Hastings to Brownsville are free and open markets, and not a solitary complaint has come from one of them, while from other places complaints are multiplying. The commissioner states that the present rates for carrying wheat are unreasonable and against the interests of the railroads themselves. Now, if the rates on wheat are unreasonable, then the local rates on other freights are simply robbery."

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First Publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen hundred and eighty seven 64-100 dollars ($1887.64-100,) which is claimed to be due, and is due, at the date of this notice, upon two certain promissory notes secured by a mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Polina Angelina McIntyre and H. D. McIntyre, to Morris R. Brown, bearing date the eleventh day of November A. D. 1878, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 27th day of November A. D. 1881, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 439, which mortgage was for a good and valuable consideration on the 23d day of February A. D. 1883 duly assigned to Joseph Kelso, and said assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for said County on the 27th day of February A. D. 1883, in book "K" of mortgages on pages 260 and 261, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nineteen (19) Block number sixteen (16) in the original Townsite of Crookston according to a plat of said Townsite, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars ($50) attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State on the 13th day of March A. D. 1885, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., of said day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred forty-five and 50-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. Anderson Foord, an unmarried man, mortgagor to Fredrick Peterson and John Peterson, mortgagees bearing date the 21st day of May A. D. 1883, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 22th day of May A. D. 1883, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 21, and whereas the undivided one-half interest in the said mortgage and the debt secured thereby was by the said Fredrick Peterson, one of said mortgagees, duly assigned in writing under his hand and seal to Harold Swenson and Peter Broberg "copartners" by assignment, dated July 31st 1884, which assignment was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of August 1884, at 1:20 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages on page 330, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north one half (n½) of the southeast one-fourth (se¼) and the east one-half (e½) of the southwest one-fourth (sw¼) of Section twenty-eight (28,) of Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), Range forty-three (43,) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to government survey, said lot, piece, or parcel of land being situated in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the fourteenth day of March A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Rearing Calves.

Hoard's Dairyman.

Every man who undertakes to grow a calf should fully understand the art of adapting the food to the nature of the calf's stomach. No one has yet been able to beat Nature. If we undertake to substitute any food, method of feeding, or condition of food, for the natural one, we must have a clear understanding of nature's laws every step of the way. Our attention was called last summer to a lot of calves which the owner said were not doing well. Three had died and it was evident that others would not last long. The owner was a well-to-do farmer, but he acknowledged to us that he "never did have very good luck with his cattle." He was feeding sour skimmed milk when he ought to have known it was a natural law of the calf's stomach to take its food sweet. He was feeding it COLD, when he knew, if he stopped to think, that the law called for warm food. He was giving oil meal cake, ground oats, and various solids, when the calf's stomach had not yet passed out of the rennet into the ruminant state. All these things he was doing because he hated to stop and think. He was looking for some guide of action superior to nature. If an animal thrives at all it must be in accordance with the laws of nature. All that Science does is to study out these laws. Dr. Bunce, of Oberlin, Ohio, in writing on this very question, says:

"The stomach of the calf, like all young animals of the ruminants class of mamalia, are provided at first for the digestion of milk, and that only; it passes immediately into the fourth compartment of the stomach (reed,) the gastric juice being secreted from it alone, it being from this part that the rennet is taken, the other portions not being sufficiently developed to aid in digestion. We consider linseed and cottonseed meal to be the most solid of food for fully developed animals, and how is it in young calves whose stomachs at first are formed for the digestion of the most easily digested food—milk? The stomach not being able to digest it properly, the chaff of the seed acts an irritant, passing on into the intestines still causes irritation, amounting almost, if not quite to inflamation, increasing the flow of bile, enlarging the liver. The excretory organs (the kidneys) trying to throw off the unnatural product of indigestion, increases in size and ultimately breaks down. The troubles of the alimentary canal, if continued in the young of any animal, causes nervous disorders, spasms, and often result in death."

Calves can be finely reared on SWEET skimmed milk or SWEET whey, and a proper admixture of oat meal porridge or gruel. But NATURAL conditions must always be observed. For instance, the food must always be given warm; It must be fed in moderate quantities, and at least three or four times a day, to prevent indigestion and undue hunger, which has a bad effect on the young of all animals. If solids, like oat meal or wheat middlings, oil cake, &c., are given, they must be well cooked, so to be as digestible as possible. Besides they must be given very cautiously at first, and in the form of a thin gruel, mixed with the milk. Then if the feeder is a man of close judgment, he can tell by the looks of the hair, the nose, and the excrement, if digestion is going on all right. If it is not right let the feeder study close to see if he is not overcrowding the solid feed somewhere or if he is not disregarding some of the NATURAL conditions we have been talking about. In the instance mentioned in the beginning, the owner changed his whole course in obedience to our advice, and afterwards reported that the calves commenced to thrive at once.

Hoard's Dairyman: There is no man who walks the earth who is better entitled to respect than the man who is a first-class farmer. We don't care that he shall have a large farm, but rather that the largeness shall be in the man himself. Last fall while on a trip to Hudson, Wis., we had the pleasure of spending the night beneath the hospitable roof of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Martin, who reside on a splendid farm near that city. Mr. Martin owns a noble farm of 600 acres, and the most perfect order and business arrangement pervades every part. One might naturally think that with such a breadth of land he would prove one of those diffusive sort of farmers, but far from it. Everything is as snug as a man-of-war hammock before action. We were greatly interested in the classification of crops we saw there. Sixty acres planted to potatoes, three acres to onions, fifteen acres to parsnips, beets, carrots and Hubbard squash; ten acres to beans; making it a first-class truck farm. All these vegetables are marketed in the lumber regions on the North Wis. R. R. Besides this there were large crops of wheat, oats, and other grain. Mr. Martin is also a breeder of Short Horn cattle, and has a herd of twenty-five excellent animals. At the time we were visiting him he was fattening 160 hogs in pens complete in every detail for efficiency and comfort. He carries on a dairy of 20 cows, and makes splendid butter on the Cooley plan. Everything about the premises denotes the use not only of excellent farming judgment, but as well a thoroughly trained business knowledge. The house evinces taste in its outside surroundings, and comfort and intelligence within. Mr. and Mrs. Martin believe in the old-fashioned, high bred virtue of hospitality, and our visit to their home and all its belongings, gave us pleasure, hope and refreshment of spirit. There are other such farm homes in Wisconsin, and they are a greater credit to the State than has hitherto been awarded them. We only wish there were thousands more such men, who take a noble pride in being FARMERS.

CATTLE RAISING IN THE NORTHWEST.

There are thousands of farmers in the Central and Eastern States who fully believe that Minnesota and Dakota are adapted only to wheat growing, and put on an incredulous look as soon as people who invite them to this region, begin to talk about its possibilties for stock raising. The long, cold winters are a terrible bug-bear to those who know nothing about the effect of cold in a dry atmosphere on both people and stock. Nor do these doubters consider the facts that the grasses, the cheapest food for stock, grow only in perfection at the north, and that cheap land, cheap pasture and cheap hay would more than compensate for the extra two or three weeks of winter feeding here, as compared with the Southern part of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri or Kansas.

Mr. James B. Power, of St. Paul, seconded by his brother, Mr. W. A. Power, who is superintendent of Helendale Stock Farm, Richland County, Dakota, has done a real service to the Northwest by keeping a careful record of gains and weights made from turning to grass April 30, 1884, to the close of the year, a record which they continue to keep, carefully noting results of various experiments. The purpose of Mr. Power was to learn by actual test what a farmer could do with cattle, feeding only the products of his own farm, without buying from the miller or using oil-cake. The results as given below are very satisfactory, and will give stockmen stronger faith than ever in the future of the Northwest as a stock and dairy region.

The conditions of the experiment were these: April 30, '84, cattle were carefully weighed, one by one, before turning to grass. They had nothing but prairie grass until October 15, when they were put into fields and barn lots and fed oat straw and corn fodder, no hay or grain. During all this time they had access to a pure stream of running water. The following table gives the result, with the gain in pounds and percentage of gain, in the 200 days:

No. Cattle.	Class.	Age, years.	Ave. weight Apr. 30, '84.	Ave. weight Nov. 15, '84.	Percentage of gain on grass.	Gain in lbs.
3	Native Steers	4	1033½	1333½	31	312½
4	Native Steers	2	682½	1007½	47	325
9	Native Heifers	2	691½	941	50½	315½
6	Native Cows	3	1045	1335	27 2-5	290
14	Grade Steers	1	479½	771	66 4-5	291½
21	Grade Heifers	1	399	730	85	331
57	Whole Herd	1 104	585	865½	47 4-5	280

Of these, two 4-year olds and four 2-year old natives, average weight April 30, '84, 889 pounds, on Sept. 25, '84, had made an average weight on grass alone of 1136¾ pounds, an average gain of 247 pounds, or 1¼ pounds per day. They were housed Nov. 1st, and fed with ten pounds ground feed per day—five pounds in the morning and five at night—composed of equal parts corn, wheat, oats and barley. At noon they had a feed of ten to fifteen pounds of roots, and hay was kept constantly before them. Once a day they were turned out for water. This feed was continued up to Dec. 18, when two were butchered, the average gain of these two from Nov. 1st to Dec. 18th being two and one-half pounds each per day. The largest gain made was by a 4-year old steer of this lot of six, 145 pounds in 36 days. The smallest was by a 2-year old, same lot, 82 pounds in 36 days.

Now, the thoughtful farmer who is getting fifty cents a bushel for wheat, will find food for reflection in the results of this interesting experiment. It looks very much as if all the grangers of the Northwest had gone to work to make money by the most difficult route—by raising wheat; while the grass, which grows itself, was really the best and most profitable crop, and most easily converted into money. If the cash that has gone into farming implements and labor in preparing soil for wheat, had been put into barns and cattle, Minnesota and Dakota would have been richer by far than they are to-day, and the farmers would have cared very little whether wheat was worth fifty cents or one dollar, or whether the grangers or railroads and elevators were "on top" in the Legislature.

One thing has been gained, however, by the cultivation of the land in grain crops: it is now ready for tame grasses. Manure it well, seed it down to clover, timothy, blue grass, orchard grass and alsike, and you will have green pastures when the ground freezes solid in November. With tame grass, Mr. Power's experiment might have run from May 1 to Nov. 1 on grass alone, and probably, cattle would have gone out to grass one month earlier.—[Farm, Stock and Home.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

THE PROFIT OF FLAX CULTURE.

In an exhaustive showing of the grain products of the United States for the closing year the Chicago Times says:

Under the head of seeds, flax was the only kind that proved an exception to the general rule of low and unsatisfactory prices. It is, in fact, about the only article in the entire list of leading farm products where the farmer has had the best of the consumer. Just how manufacturers or crushers will manage to dispose of their oil and oil-cake next spring without losing money remains to be seen, but it is gratifying to know that flax, if nothing else, which is an important crop in Dakota, Nebraska and some parts of Iowa and Minnesota, made good if not handsome returns to the farmers. That it was a better paying crop than wheat can be easily figured out. An acre of flax turns off from eight to eighteen bushels, or on an average of, say thirteen bushels, which, at $1@1.10 per bushel (the figures obtained this season by producers,) would give a return of about $14 per acre. With wheat at 50 cents per bushel, and in many of the remote sections it did not sell for that, an acre turning out twenty bushels, which may be considered a fair average yield, would bring a revenue to the farmer of only $10 per acre. These figures are, of course, only approximate, but that there was fully that much difference, if not more, in favor of the flax crop during the past year is in an indisputable fact. Early in the season a very large crop of flax was expected, both in the northwest and southwest, and, although later reports showed a shortage compared with 1883, especially in the southwest, the crop, taken as a whole, was a good one, and of excellent quality. The best estimates now place the flax crop of 1884 at from 7,500,000 bushels to 8,000,000 bushels, or about 1,000,000 bushels increase over that of 1883. A steady demand has existed from crushers ever since the opening of the season for new flax at steady prices, fluctuations for No. 1 in this market having been within the narrow range of $1.29@1.37 per bushel. The Chicago receipts for the year were very close to 200,000,000 pounds, or an increase over 1883 of about 30,000,000 pounds, which at fifty-six pounds to the bushel makes upwards of 535,000 bushels. An unusually large acreage in the principal flax-producing States is expected by the trade for the ensuing year. Many farmers will ignore wheat altogether and seed their land with flax instead. The imports of India flax into this country during 1884 were about 2,500,000 bushels.

FEED FOR TWENTY COWS.

National Live Stock Journal: A young farmer who wishes to keep twenty cows, and is on light land in Indiana, wants advice as to the boss food to produce for winter dairying, and, as he has seen much in praise of roots for winter milk, especially beets and carrots, whether it would be a better food in winter than ensilage? Clover does well when land is in good condition, and good crops of millet can be raised.

We do not believe roots can be profitably raised, as compared with other green crops, for cows. The chemical quality of beets and carrots as food is very similar to the best green corn, especially large sweet corn. And then, green millet is considerably more nutritious than either, and a heavy crop of millet will be equal in green weight to beets or carrots per acre. And, besides, green clover is still more valuable as food, because of its nitrogenous character supplying the greatly needed element in the production of milk.

Roots, it may be said, represent green corn in its best state, and the labor in producing the corn is not more than one-third that of producing roots per ton. The cost of a silo to preserve green fodder in is very little more than a cellar for roots. Variety in the food of cows is important, and all the green foods that can be produced in any locality may be preserved in silo, separately or together, if ready to cut at the same time. For example, second crop clover, green millet, and green corn may be ensilaged together. With ensilage for eight months (say fifty pounds per day to each cow, or 120 tons,) the dairymen will be well provided for in green food to carry him through drouth, and spring, and fall, and besides this he will require about 1,500 pounds of hay for each cow. This green food can be produced on about fifteen acres—five acres of corn, five acres of millet, and five acres of clover. To make rich manure to assist in raising these crops, two pounds per day of linseed meal, two pounds middlings, and two pounds of corn meal should be fed. This would give the best yield of milk and pay the best profit.

CARE OF STOCK IN WINTER.

A correspondent of the Manchester Mirror writes as follows: "L. N. Brown of Illinois, in a recent lecture at a dairymen's meeting, said: Take thirty cows. Turn ten out in a yard night and day; turn ten out days and put them up at night, and keep the remaining ten up in a warm stable night and day. Feed all alike. The first will yield a loss, the second will barely pay, and the third will pay a large profit. On the whole, the thirty will just pay expenses. Sell the first lot and there is a gain, but there is still too much work for the profit. Sell the second lot, which is paying nothing, and you will still have all the profit and much less work. Keep only as many cows as you can keep well and keep warm.

This principle will apply to other considerations than warmth. It is a great point to be considered and followed. Keep no more than you can keep well. It is the care that pays and not the numbers. Details must be looked after. Very small mistakes or neglects will change the results from profit to loss.

Every farmer should know just what he can do, and lay out no more work and keep no more stock than can be thoroughly attended to. Letting the sheep lie out in one cold storm in May till the lambs get chilled, may cause the loss of many dollars' worth of animals. A scant supply of water, or of salt, or lying in cold quarters, will keep back the profits of a whole herd, while all other points are closely looked after. Stock-raising is a business that requires more study than grain-farming and more general information than market-gardening. Locations, soils, food, crops, breeds and individual animals must be studied and understood, and the winter, when the farmer is in close relations with his stock, is the time to study; and if any mode of treatment does not give the same results in one case as in another, look after the small matters. A little knowledge and insight will save great loss. If an animal refuses to eat, there is a cause for it. Examine the teeth and throat before you slit its ears or cut its tail off, or pour nostrums down its throat. Be more willing to charge losses and failures to your own neglect and carelessness, and you will soon learn that the needed remedies are in your own hands. But as long as men have so much faith in "luck," and diseases that "go in the air," and mysterious dispensations of Providence, they will learn nothing, and fail as often as they succeed.

A CHEAP POTATO DIGGER.

A Weedsport, N. Y., farmer writes to the Elmira farmers' club and describes a potato digger which he uses. The implement, he says, is not expensive, can be made by any blacksmith of ordinary ability, and, at the same time, is not a pretended humbug. He says it may properly be called a horse-fork. It is simply a strong iron fork of five prongs, twelve or fourteen inches in length, stiffened by having a cross-bar welded about three inches from the top, with a stiff shank some eight inches long. This is firmly bolted to a beam with handles similar to the woodward of a common shovel plow. Attach one horse to the fork and thrust it into the ground behind the potato hill, have a boy lead the horse until both horse and man become accustomed to the work. Very soon you can set the boy picking up, and "go it alone." Starting the horse slowly, the entire hill is lifted out, and by a dexterous movement of the fork, together with the side draft of the horse, the potatoes are thrown a little to one side, and nearly all exposed to view. There is no clogging on account of wet, no choking up with vines or weeds, and is preferable to a plow, because only the earth which covers the potatoes is disturbed. This implement makes a clean harvest of the potatoes.

ROUND HOME.

$800,000 is paying too dear for the whistle—the steam whistle.

Van Dyke & Co. keep up with the times. Hence Progressive Euchre, the latest game out, is kept on sale.

On the 23d justice Lewis united for life Martin Johnson to Miss Mary Olson, and on the 24th inst Frank La Belle to Miss Jennie Wine.

Van Dyke & Co. have the largest stock of paints and oils in the city for sale at the lowest prices.

John Moser is off to see his old friends in Wisconsin. If he happens to get as far south as New Orleans he will take in the big show.

Chas. Canning is a lion in the House. He can do as he pleases with any measure before that granger House, because he is always on the right side.

Burt Bivins has been wrestling with the pleurisy for a week back and is about a huckleberry ahead at date of this writing. He just begins to crawl about and resembles an athlete in training for a race at the skating rink and nearly ready for business.

The Chamber of Commerce met on Saturday evening to discuss the railroad situation. It was decided to request our representatives to oppose the bill forfeiting the D. & W. land grant. The bill is calculated to work great injury to our county by throwing obstacles in the way of building the D. & W. road.

The place to buy remnants is at the New York store.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson returned from below on Monday. He intends to purchase a large number of young cows in the spring and make stock a special feature of his farming in the future. He reports that a large amount of summer fallowing must be done in Kittson County this year as there was much land left unplanted last fall.

Vote against the $800,000 railroad proposition.

By his fearless espousal of the farmers' rights, daring to stand up in their defense, the Hon. Chas. Canning has achieved a commanding position. He is regarded as the leader in everything pertaining to the farmers' welfare, and he never abuses his power. He says the Senate must consent to do something for the granger interests or there will be a large-sized row before adjournment.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

S. P. Norton has taken control of the destinies of the Commercial House and will hereafter be on deck, alive to the wants of his guests, (whose name is Legion). S. P. is a jolly good landlord and if he don't make money in the Commercial House it can't be did. He is attentive and industrious, very essential qualities for a hotel man. With De Camp to help him, he will run things in good shape.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

It seems to be the universal sentiment in Polk County that the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad is the one we need and the attempt now being made in the Legislature to hamper that road by declaring their land grant forfeited to the B. & N. W., is regarded with great disapproval. Did the time permit a remonstrance against the bill, signed by thousands could be obtained and we trust that our members will heed the wishes of the large majority of their constituents and vote against the bill.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

The children's masquerade at the Favorite Rink on Friday evening was well attended and heartily enjoyed. The costumes of the little folks were all in fine taste—especially "Topsy." The prizes were awarded to Jay Durand, who personated a Dude, and to Miss Blanche Fontaine, who personated a Fuschia—a delicate little flower. They sustained their parts well. Among the many notables were Miss Una Copeland as "Topsy," which character she took to perfection; Miss Edith Copeland as a young lady was all a young lady should be; Miss Frankie Barnes personated a fairy and was a veritable little fairy. Miss —— Quinn wore a lovely little dress, hand-painted. In the multitude of little folks, all appropriately dressed for their especial character, it would be impossible to discriminate and would be unjust so to do as each did equally well and deserved great credit. The event was highly enjoyed by the participants and we trust the awards were satisfactory.

This looks like spring.

Pleasant weather. Indicates an early spring.

Vote against the $800,000 railroad proposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Anglim are visiting in St. Paul this week.

C. H. Saake will receive a fine lot of goods in his line shortly.

Nels Paulsrud says everybody will vote against the bonds along the Red River.

If you don't want to be eaten up by taxes get out and vote "against the bonds," on Tuesday, March 10th.

E. M. Walsh and Doc. Dampier have reported. They are having a good time in New Orleans and are enjoying it hugely.

John N. Ives took in the saintly city last week returning on Monday. Asking him about St. Paul, John N. would only reply: "I like it, I like it, I do."

Charlie Seely says he is enjoying splendid health and still continues to set up the choicest liquid refreshments in the business. Call at Seely's place when you feel like it.

Sheriff Zwickey returned on Wednesday and reports having had a splendid time. He says that the displays made by Minnesota and Dakota were the finest in the business.

Charlie Rauch is in St. Paul after having had a pleasant visit with friends in Wisconsin. Gustave Davies is with him. Gus is well known in Euclid where he was recently in business.

J. A. Moore has got the finest "eye-water" in that business. A little of it put on writing that you don't want there will take out every scratch of the pen. A fine thing for business men who never make mistakes. Drop a card in the post office and Mr. Moore will call with his little bottle and show you how 'tis done.

Dupuis & Laframboise, whose big ad appears elsewhere in this issue, struck a flowing well for Ed Walsh on Saturday after about eight days work. It is 160 feet deep and gushes liquid health at the rate of about 30 barrels per day. The boys are a whole team and when they go for water they bring it gushing.

Mr. Chris Olsen and Mr. Frank Daudenberg was up from Valley to-day (Thursday) and report a sad accident by which Mr. G. P. Blom, of Fosston, lost his life on Tuesday the 24th inst. Mr. Blom was on his way to Sohler & Kankle's mill with a grist in a sled drawn by a yoke of oxen. It is supposed that he fell off the load and was run over and killed as he was found later in the evening lying in the road. The team returned to the store at Valley where they were cared for.

While the House railroad bill was under discussion in the Senate, our Senator was among the few who labored to pass it as it came from the House. Failing in this he succeeded in having a very important amendment attached. The Minneapolis Evening Journal says: "By the way, Senator Steenerson rather surprised the older senators by his determined fight on the railroad bill, and the ability which he developed in arguing his side. He has been highly complimented. When the bill came up for third reading on Saturday afternoon the senator announced that he had made up his mind to vote for the bill, but he still wanted to tack on a bit of an amendment to section 9, which, upon being read, was found to be harmless, and so the senate good naturedly did not object, and allowed the amendment to go on."

It was the boss race that happened at the Opera House Rink on Wednesday evening of last week. Five noble warriors, Herb Mason, D. Jacobus, Jas. Morrissey, W. E. McKinzie and A. J. Bigham stood up in line and prepared for the deadly struggle. Upon the signal they lit out like a lot of birds (geese) flying (heavily) about the rink one after the other sometimes but oftener the other after one. McKinzie seemed to be having it all his own way, and was as much as two feet (his own) ahead of Morrissey who was walking after him, like a man mowing, when Mac collided with Jake and both suddenly concluded to sit down in a corner a bit in order to allow the other fellows to come up. They did not sit there more than a year till they decided that in order to be in the house when the race was finished they must be up and doing. They did not get out a minute too soon for Morrissey and Bigham were looming up as thick and fast as Democratic patriots at Albany and were working just as hard. Mac commenced to mow like a good fellow and would have cut his swath out in great shape if his skate had not at this critical juncture got in a naughty slang word, "oh, come off!" Mac tumbled to the racket at once and arose from the corner and still the busy world (four of it) glode on. It would have puzzled a Pennsylvania Dutchman to say who did really win but as the jury were not of that persuasion they said A. J. won. We don't agree with the verdict and declare unhesitatingly in favor of Jacobus, for the last we saw of him he had got as far as Minneapolis and did not intend to stop until he reached Chicago. How much further he would go would depend on how much of Chicago had got out of the snow-drifts when he arrove. Jake is entitled to the race not that he "got there" first but on the grounds that he "got there" oftenest and stuck to it longest.

Deputy Sheriff Ed. Charboneau returned on Monday from a trip some distance north of Brainerd—say anywhere from 100 to 1,000 miles, bringing with him Frank La Belle, who was wanted by a young lady resident of Polk County. Ed. acted as groomsman.

As yet we have been unable to get the report in the wheat case of Palmer vs. Pillsbury. Of this we are assured, that the award will be nearly the amount claimed by Mr. Palmer. We expect to publish the full proceedings in the case as soon as they can be obtained.

Euclid Items.

Wells Misner is expected home this week.

Euclid is becoming a favorite resort for fast horses.

Dr. Chapin has been called to Warren, Argyle and Stephen several times within the last two weeks.

The Woodchuck Club showed their appreciation of Bro. M. P. Losey by making him a valuable present on Tuesday evening, it being his 58th birthday.

Flax seed can be had of H. O. Misner at the Pillsbury & Hulbert elevator, in Euclid, on time, note payable in the fall.

Chas. Teal, Sr., has a private race track out near his place where he is training his lately defeated horse, preparatory to getting revenge out of Si Mead's Buckskin.

Parker Shults is the happy father of a male son and is as happy as a lark.

It was Peter Becker instead of P. Lucken that is father of the 13½ pound boy, as stated in your last.

Geo. A. Blatchley's "Billy Vanderbilt" is now under training and is soon to be matched against Dr. Chapin's "Belva Lockwood" in a half mile race.

Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Chapin's son and daughter are down with chicken pox.

The Euclid schools have a much larger attendance than ever before; both rooms are running this winter.

The Woodchuck Club is very popular, and every club night several new names are added to the already long list of members.

Rev. Jas. P. Schell and others are holding very interesting meetings at Angus this week. Considerable interest is manifested.

Euclid is to be favored Saturday night with a first-class circus, theatre, concert, or something of this sort; at any rate we are to make a trip around the world in two hours for the small sum of 25 cents.

Charlie Misner is going into the stock business as well as farming.

John Stevens is drawing in the S. S. Simpson wheat, taking advantage of the good roads.

Frank McDonald has been elected night watchman and residents on Main street say that he has appointed a female assistant to help pass the hours away while on duty.

From the Olive Leaf.

Harry Jackson's magic lantern show here next Wednesday night.

Next spring the Keystone farm will be seeded with wheat from the Lockhart farm at Rolette. Two carloads have already been received.

Last Friday night twenty-one members of the Euclid Literary Society visited the Angus Literary Society.

The Keystone House will be open for the accommodation of the traveling public some time next month. M. Beiver, the present landlord of the Farmers' Home, is the new victim.

Mr. James McArthur and family leave here next week to take up their abode at Grand Forks.

Mr. S. S. Hancock has some very fine seed wheat for sale.

Horse races and foot races are an every day occurrence here. Almost every farmer owns a fast horse, or at least some of the horses look as if they had been observing Lent for the last six months.

We see by Eastern papers that the Methodists are about to wage a war on the roller rinks. The best thing for them to do is to let the rinks alone. To-day the roller rinks are doing more for the temperance cause than all the temperance lecturers in the United States put together. Men who formerly spent their leisure hours in saloons will now be found in the roller rink. From all over the country the saloon keepers cry out against the roller rinks, and now the Methodists have joined in the chorus. The saloon keepers objected because they were losing their regular customers, but what in the name of common sense do the Methodists find to object to in roller skating, unless it is a general objection to anybody's enjoying themselves?

This town has quite a number of societies, some of which are secret societies. First of all comes the Euclid Literary Society, a substantial, entertaining and instructive society, and leads them all in popularity. Then, the M. M. Club, which once had a large membership, but now that its chief object is accomplished it is fading fast away. Then we have the Euclid Jocky Club, a very substantial society so far as money is concerned, but not of large membership. Next is the Woodchuck Club. Of this society the less said the better, and last, but not least the S. P. R. V. Society, whose object is a profound secret except to the members.

County Commissioners Meeting.

Special Term, Tuesday, Feb. 24th. 1885.

Board met pursuant to adjournment. All the members present except P. O. Schmidt, Jr.

The minutes of the January and February sessions were read and approved.

Commissioner Bradish offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That in pursuance to a recent act of the Legislature this Board hereby authorizes the Chairman and Clerk to issue bridge bonds to C. P. Jones (the contractor for the Crookston and Red Lake Falls bridges) in the sum of Ten Thousand Five Hundred Dollars, as follows: $2,500 of said bonds when all of the materials to be used in the construction of said bridges is delivered at the points named, and $8,000 when said bridges are completed and duly accepted by the Board. Said bonds to bear interest at six per cent. per annum.

The resolution was seconded by Commissioner Sullivan and carried by a unanimous vote of the Board.

The Auditor and Treasurer were directed to credit the current collections, (to Feb. 28th, '85,) of poor and interest fund to the revenue fund, and the Treasurer was instructed to forthwith redeem outstanding orders up to the amount at credit of the latter fund at the date named.

The time for completing the bridges to be built at Crookston and Red Lake Falls was extended to June 1st.

The application of Michael O'Brien for refunding taxes was rejected.

The bonds of Howard Lankester and F. J. Rothpletz were duly approved.

The Auditor was directed to issue warrants for $12 in favor of Peter Newman, of North Township for care of a poor person until March 17th, 1885.

The following liquor licenses were granted: Shovey & Kreuger and Michael Bivers, of Euclid, and Ole Wraa, of Edna, and Nelson Ophium, O. A. Gilmore, of Garfield, provided that sufficient bonds be furnished School Dist. No. 126 was organized comprising Sections 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 in Tp 151, R. 48.

Adjourned till March 17th 1885.

P. J. McGuire, Clerk.

Caucus Notice.

Notice is hereby given that a caucus for the town of Fairfax will be held at the residence of John Amundson, in said town, on Tuesday, March 3d, at 3 o'clock p. m., to put in nomination candidates for the office of town clerk, assessor, justice, three supervisors, treasurer and one constable. A full attendance is requested.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.
Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 24 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 70 stalks from one oat."
From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The Ceremony of Dedicating the Washington Monument Executed According to Programme.

A Scene of Brilliancy Such as the National Capital Has Seldom, if Ever Presented.

Eloquent Orations by R. C. Winthrop and John W. Daniels, with Some Minor Addresses.

The ceremonies attending the completion of the Washington Monument, the highest structure ever created by human hands, at the city of Washington on the 21st inst., were of an imposing character. The celebration was in two parts, one at the base of the monument and the other in the hall of the house of representatives where the principal orations were delivered.

AT THE MONUMENT.

The day was cold and disagreeable. The military arrived betimes, the brass bands were marshaled to their places, the troops come to a rest. Senator Sherman, chairman of the joint congressional commission, from the center of the stand, at 11 o'clock, called about 800 people to order, and said something about the people keeping their hats on. These remarks were greeted with lively stamps, for the opportunity was a good one to restore circulation to chilled limbs and extremities. Senator Sherman then proceeded to give a brief history of the monument, from the organization of the Washington Monument Association in 1848, and the laying of the corner stone on the 4th of July of that year to its completion in 1885. He was followed by W. W. Corcoran, the philanthropist, who described at length the part taken in the initiation of the project and the contruction of the Monument society.

The Masonic ceremonies by the Grand Lodge, District Columbia, which then followed, were brief. The proper functionaries declared that the square, the level and the plumb had been applied to the obelisk, and that its corners were found to be square, its course level, its walls skillfully erected according to the plumb. Grand Master Myron [illegible] Parker scattered corn and poured out wine and oil, emblems of refreshment and [illegible], and, in the course of the mystic ceremonies, brought into use certain historic relics with which Gen. Washington was immediately connected. The gavel used was [illegible] prepared for and used by Gen. Washington, as grand master of the fraternity in laying the corner stone of the national capitol on the 8th of September, 1793, a sacred volume belonging to Fredericksburg Lodge No. 4, of Virginia, upon which Washington took the first vows of Masonry, and that belonging to St. John's Lodge No. 1, city of New York, upon which on the 30th of April, 1789, he took the oath of office as first president of the United States; the great light belonging to Washington Lodge No. 22, Alexandria, Va., upon which he, as worshipful master, received the vows of the initiation; the apron worn by him, which was worked by Madame Lafayette; a golden ring, containing a lock of his hair, belonging to the grand lodge of Massachusetts; the lesser light, one of the three sperm candles borne in Washington's funeral procession, were exhibited. The address of the grand master concluded as follows;

Know ye all ye people that we be Free Masons, loyal and true citizens, obedient to law and order, and can never be concerned in plots and conspiracies against the true government. The immortal Washington, himself a Free Mason, devoted his hand, his heart, his sacred honor, and if need be, his life also, to the cause of freedom of conscience, of speech and of action, and from his successful leading has arisen this nation. To him and the memory of his deeds a grateful people have erected this memorial in the capital which he founded and which will bear his name to remotest ages, a monument towering above other monuments as his towered above other men.

The monument was then formally delivered to President Arthur by Col. Thomas L. Casey, the engineer.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S ADDRESS.

President Arthur in accepting the monument said:

Fellow Countrymen: Before the dawn of the century whose eventful years will soon have faded into the past, when death had but lately robbed this republic of its most beloved and illustrious citizen, the congress of the United States pledged the national faith that in this city bearing his honored name, and then, as now, the seat of the general government, a monument should be erected to commemorate the great events of his military and political life. The stately column that stretches heavenward from the plain whereon we stand bears witness to all who behold it, that the covenant which our fathers made, their children have fulfilled. In the completion of this great work of patriotic endeavor there is abundant cause for national rejoicing, for, while this structure shall be to all mankind a steadfast token of the affectionate and reverent regard in which this people continue to hold the memory of Washington, well may he ever keep the foremost place in the hearts of all his countrymen. The faith that never faltered, the wisdom that was broader and deeper than any learning taught in schools, the courage that shrank from no peril and was dismayed by no defeat, the loyalty that kept all selfish purposes subordinate to the demands of patriotism and honor, the sagacity that displayed itself in camp and cabinet alike, and above all that harmonious union of moral and intellectual quarters which has never found its parallel among men. These are the attributes of character which the intelligent thought of this century ascribes to the grandest figure of the last. But other and more eloquent lips than mine will to-day rehearse to you the story of his noble life and its glorious achievement. To myself has been assigned a simpler and more formal duty, in the fulfillment of which I do now, as president of the United States, and in behalf of the people, receive this monument from the hands of its builder, and declare it dedicated from this time forth to the universal name and memory of George Washington.

THE PROCESSION.

The procession was then formed by Gen. Phil Sheridan, assisted by a brilliant staff, and an honorary staff, representing all the states and territories. The following were on the honorary staff: Iowa, Col. Wm. P. Hepburn; Minnesota, Col. C. W. Johnson; Wisconsin, Gen. J. Starckweather; Dakota, Col. Wm. Thompson; Montana, Hon. Martin Maginnis.

The procession was composed of a large body of United States troops, and military companies from many States, including the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Massachusetts, organized in 1638, and other very ancient organizations; Masons, Odd Fellows and a variety of civic organizations.

Pennsylvania avenue presented a brilliant scene during the progress of the pageant. Thousands of people thronged the sidewalks and occupied grand stands erected on all reservations along the line of march.

At the capitol there was a vast attendance, and the hall of the house was crowded with the most notable people of the land.

CALLED TO ORDER.

Its presiding officer, Mr. Edmunds, proceeded to the speaker's desk where the gavel was courteously handed him by Speaker Carlisle. In calling the assembly to order, Mr. Edmunds said:

Gentlemen: You are assembled pursuant to a concurrent order of the two houses to celebrate the completion of a monument to the memory of the first president of the United States. It is not only a memorial but an inspiration that shall live through all the generations of our posterity, as we may hope, and which we this day inaugurate and celebrate by ceremonies which have been ordered by the two houses.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. S. A. Wallis, of Pohick church, near Mount Vernon, Va. The Marine band, stationed in the members' lobby, played "Hail Columbia," and then Mr. Edmunds, expressing his regret that Mr. Winthrop was necessarily absent, introduced Representative John D. Long of Massachusetts, who having been loudly applauded proceeded to read

WINTHROP'S ORATION.

After referring to the fact of his having delivered an address at the corner-stone laying of the monument thirty-seven years ago, and giving an outline of the enterprise and the many difficulties which had now been overcome by the commission, the orator said of the monument: Henceforth and forever it shall be lovingly associated, not only with the memory of him in whose honor it has been erected, but with an era of assured peace, unity and concord, which would have been dearer to his heart than the costliest personal memorial which the toil and treasure of his countrymen could have constructed. The Union is itself the all-sufficient and only sufficient monument to Washington. The Union was nearest and dearest to his great heart. "The Union in any event," were the most emphatic words of his immortal farewell address. Nothing less than the Union would ever have been accepted or recognized by him as a monument commensurate with his services and his fame. Nothing less ought ever to be accepted or recognized as such by us, or by those who shall rise up, generation after generation, to do homage to his memory! For the grand consummation which we celebrate to-day, we are indebted primarily to the national government, under the successive presidents of the last nine years, with the concurrent action of the two branches of congress. The completion crowns the work. To-day that work speaks for itself, and needs no other orator. Mute and lifeless as it seems, it has a living and audible voice for all who behold it, and no one can misinterpret its language. Nor will any one, I think, longer cavil about its design. Is not the acknowledged preeminence of the father of his country, first without a second, more fitly and adequately represented by that soaring shaft, rising high above trees and spires and domes, and all the smoke and stir of earth—as he ever rose above sectional prejudices, and party politics, and personal interests—overtopping and dominating all its surroundings, gleaming and glistening out at every vista as far as human sight can reach, arresting and riveting the eye at every turn, while it shoots triumphantly to the skies? Does not—does not, I repeat,

THAT COLOSSAL UNIT

remind all who gaze at it, more forcibly than any arch or statue could do, that there is one name in American history above all other names, one character more exalted than all other characters, one example to be studied and reverenced beyond all other examples, one bright particular star in the clear upper sky of our firmament, whose guiding light and peerless lustre are for all men and for all ages, never to be lost sight of, never to be unheeded? Of that name, of that character, of that example, of that glorious guiding light, our obelisk, standing on the very spot selected by Washington himself for a monument to the American Revolution, and on the site which marks our national meridian, will be a unique memorial and symbol forever. For oh, my friends, let us not longer forget, or even seem to forget, that we are here to commemorate, not the monument, but the man. The well known leading events in the life of Washington were recounted, the speaker saying, among other things: It was well said by John Milton, in one of his powerful defenses of the people of England, "War has made many great, whom peace makes small." But of Washington we may say, as Milton said of Cromwell, that, while war made him great, peace made him greater; or rather that both war and peace alike gave opportunity for the display of those incomparable innate qualities, which no mere circumstances could create or destroy. Our Washington Needle, while it has all of the severe simplicity, and far more than all of the massive grandeur, which were the characteristics of Egyptian architecture, bears no inscriptions whatever, and none are likely ever to be carved on it. Around its base bas-reliefs in bronze may possibly one day be placed, illustrative of some of the great events of Washington's life; while on the terrace beneath may, perhaps, be arranged emblematic figures of Justice and Patriotism, of Peace, Liberty and Union. All this, however, may well be left for future years, or even for future generations. Each succeeding generation, indeed, will take its own pride in doing whatever may be wisely done in adorning the surroundings of this majestic pile, and in thus to the memory of the father of his country. Yet to the mind's eye of an American patriot those marble faces will never seem vacant—never seem void or voiceless. What are all the noble words which Washington wrote or uttered, what are all the incidents of his birth and death, what are all the details of his marvelous career from its commencement to its close, in comparison with his own exalted character as a man! Rarely was Webster more impressive than when, on the completion of the monument at Bunker Hill, in describing what our country had accomplished for the welfare of mankind, he gave utterance, with his characteristic terseness, and in his inimitable tones, to the simple assertion, "America has furnished the character of Washington!" And well did he add that, "if our American institutions had done nothing else, that alone would have entitled them to the respect of mankind." The orator then dwelt at considerable length upon the exalted character of Washington, and tributes to the Father of his country by Byron, Lord Brougham, Fox, Erskine and others were quoted. The example and character of Washington were commended to the young men of the country. Yet let me not seem, even for a moment, to throw off upon the children the rightful share of those responsibilities which belongs to their fathers. Upon us, upon us, it devolves to provide that the advancing generations shall be able to comprehend, and equal to meet, the demands which are thus before them. It is ours—it is yours especially, senators and representatives—to supply them with the means of that universal education which is the crying want of the land, and without which any intelligent and successful free government is impossible. We are just entering on a new Olympiad of our national history—the twenty-fifth Olympiad since Washington first entered upon the administration of our constitutional government.

THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE

has already designated under whom the first century of that government is to be closed, and the best hopes and wishes of every patriot will be with him in the responsibilities on which he is about to enter. No distinction of party or of section prevents our all feeling alike that our country, by whomsoever governed, is still and always our country, to be cherished in all our hearts, to be upheld and defended by all our hands. The oration closes thus: Our matchless obelisk stands proudly before us to-day, and we hail it with the exultations of a united and glorious nation. It may, or may not, be proof against the cavils of critics, but nothing of human construction is against the casualties of time. The storms of winter must blow and beat upon it. The action of the elements must soil and discolor it. The lightnings of heaven may scar and blacken it. An earthquake may shake its foundations. Some mighty tornado, or resistless cyclone, may rend its massive blocks asunder and hurl huge fragments to the ground. But the character which it commemorates and illustrates is secure. It will remain unchanged and unchangeable in all its consummate purity and splendor, and will more and more command the homage of succeeding ages in all regions of the earth. God be praised, that character is ours forever!

Mr. Long spoke from the clerk's desk in an impressive manner, and in a voice which, though not loud, was so clear as to reach every corner in the chamber. The eloquent passages of the speech were delivered with fervor, which elicited frequent bursts of applause, and as Mr. Long read the peroration, the multitude broke into a storm of applause. On the right of the speaker were the chaplains of the senate and house and Rev. Mr. Wallis, while on his left sat Hon. John W. Daniel of Virginia and Senator Sherman, chairman of the congressional joint commission. As Mr. Long ceased the band struck up "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," and as the strains of the air ended Mr. Edmunds introduced Hon. John W. Daniel, who was greeted with long-continued clapping of hands.

Mr. Daniel proceeded to deliver his oration:

Solitary and alone in its grandeur stands forth the character of Washington in history; solitary and alone like some peak that has no fellow in the mountain range of greatness. "Washington," says Guizot; "Washington did the two greatest things which in politics it is permitted to man to attempt. He maintained by peace the independence of his country which he had conquered by war. He founded a free government in the name of the principles of order, and by reestablishing their sway." Washington did indeed do these things. But he did more. Out of disconnected fragments he molded a whole and made it a country. He achieved his country's independence by the sword. He maintained that independence by peace as by war. He finally established both his country and its freedom in an enduring frame of constitutional government, fashioned to make Liberty and Union one and inseparable. These four things together constitute the unexampled achievement of Washington. The world has ratified the profound remark of Fisher Ames, that "he changed mankind's ideas of political greatness." He has approved the opinion of Edward Everett, that he was "the greatest of good men, and the best of great men." It has felt for him with Erskine "an awful reverence." It has attested the declaration of Brougham that "he was the greatest man of his own or of any age." Tell me ye, who have unrolled the scrolls that bear the records of the rise and fall of nations—ye before whose eyes has moved the panorama of man's struggles, achievements and progression, find you anywhere the story of one whose life work is more than a fragment of that which in his life is set before you? Conquerers who have stretched your sceptres over boundless territories; founders of empires who have held your dominions

IN THE REIGN OF LAW;

reformers who have cried aloud in the wilderness of oppression; teachers who have striven to cast down false doctrine, heresy and schisms; statesmen whose brains have throbbed with mighty plans for the amelioration of human society; scar-crowned vikings of the sea, illustrious heroes of the land, who have borne the standards of siege and battle—come forth in bright array from your glorious fanes, and would ye be measured by the measure of his stature? Behold you not in him a more illustrious and more venerable presence? Statesman, soldier, patriot, sage, reformer of creeds, teacher of truth and justice, achiever and preserver of liberty, the first of men, founder and savior of his country, father of his people—this is he, solitary and unapproachable in his grandeur. Oh, felicitous Providence that gave to America our Washington! High soars into the sky to-day, higher than the pyramids or the dome of St. Paul's or St. Peter's—the loftiest and most imposing structure that man has ever reared—high soars into the sky to where the monument which "We, the people of the United States" have uplifted to his memory. It is a fitting monument, more fitting than any statue. For his image could only display him in some one phase of his varied character, as the commander, the statesman, the planter of Mount Vernon, or the chief magistrate of his country. So art has fitly typified his exalted life in yon plain, lofty shaft. Such is his greatness that only by a symbol could it be represented. As Justice must be blind in order to be whole in contemplation, so history must be silent that by this mighty sign she may disclose the amplitude of her story. The speaker referred to the great deeds of Virginia during the Revolution, and thanked the commission for the honor done Virginia in choosing one of her citizens to speak on this occasion. Many allusions were then made to events in English and American history, and an extended biographical sketch of Washington was given.

"Earth highest yearns to meet a star,"

GREATEST AS A STATESMAN.

It was as a statesman that Washington was greatest. Not in the sense that Hamilton and Jefferson, Adams and Madison were statesmen, but in a larger sense. Men may marshal armies who cannot drill divisions. Men may marshal nations in storm and travail who have not the accomplishments of their cabinet ministers. Not so versed as they was he in the details of political science. And yet, as he studied tactics when he anticipated war, so he studied politics when he foresaw his civil role approaching, reading the history and examining the principles of ancient and modern confederacies and making notes of their virtues, defects and methods of operation. His pen did not possess the facile play and classic grace of their pens, but his vigorous eloquence had the clear ring of our mother tongue. I will not say that he was so astute, so quick, so inventive as the one or another of them—that his mind was characterized by the vivacity of wit, the rich colorings of fancy, or daring flights of imagination. But with him thought and action, like well-trained coursers, kept abreast in the chariot race, guided by an eye that never quailed, reined by a hand that never trembled. He had a more infallible discrimination of circumstances and men than any of his contemporaries. He weighed facts in a juster scale, with larger equity, and firmer equanimity. He best applied to them the lesson of experience. With greater ascendancy of character he held men to their appointed tasks; with more inspiring vigor he commanded more implicit confidence. He bore a truer divining rod, and through a wilderness of contention he alone was the unerring pathfinder of the people. There can indeed be no right conception of Washington that does not accord him a great and extraordinary genius. The speaker concluded with these words: In the name of the people of the United States—their president, their senators, and their representatives, and their judges, do crown to-day with the grandest crown that veneration has ever lifted to the brow of glory, him whom Virginia gave to America—whom America has given to the world, and to the ages—and whom mankind with universal suffrage has proclaimed the foremost of the founders of empire in whom Liberty herself has anointed as the first citizen in the great republic of humanity. Encompassed by the inviolate seas stands to-day the American republic which he founded—a free Greater Britain—uplifted above the powers and principalities of the earth, even as his monument is uplifted over roof and dome, and spire of the multitudinous city. Long live the republic of Washington! Respected by mankind, beloved of all its sons, long may it be the asylum of the poor and oppressed of all lands and religions—long may it be the citadel of that liberty which writes beneath the eagle's folded wings: "We will sell to no man, we will deny to no man, right and justice." Long live the United States of America! Filled with the free magnanimous spirit, crowned by the wisdom, blessed by the moderation, hovered over by the guardian angel of Washington's example; may they be ever worthy in all things to be defended by the blood of the brave who knew the rights of man and shrank not from this assertion, may they be each a column, and all together, under the constitution, a perpetual temple of peace, unshadowed by a Cæsar's palace; at whose altar may freely commune all who seek the union of liberty and brotherhood. Long live our country! Oh, long through the undying ages may it stand, far removed in fact as in space from the Old World's feuds and follies—solitary and alone in its grandeur and its glory, itself the immortal monument of him whom Providence commissioned to teach man the power of truth, and to prove to the nations that their Redeemer liveth.

Though having his manuscript on the desk before him, Mr. Daniel referred to it but once or twice during the course of his oration. He spoke in an easy manner, his voice being finely modulated to suit the meaning of his sentences, and his speech was accentuated and emphasized by graceful gestures. Many times was he interrupted by rounds of applause elicited by his clean-cut and well-balanced periods, and by his eloquent style of uttering them. As he closed, Senators Edmunds and Sherman, Speaker Carlisle and Representative Long warmly congratulated him, while once more the audience testified their appreciation of the orator's eloquence. After a benediction by the chaplain of the house, the distinguished guests departed and the speaker called the house to order. Adjourned till Monday.

A Great Doctor Fooled.

Dr. Hauffe, the celebrated physician of Vienna, one day received a telegram from Cracow requesting him to repair thither with all haste, as Moses Abrahamson was very ill and required advice. This Moses was known to be one of the richest men of his tribe. The doctor, who had an enormous practice and was very busy at the time, wired back: "My fee will be two thousand florins." A second dispatch urged him to come without delay, but added that he might surely do it for less. "Not a kreutzer less than two thousand florins," was the reply from Vienna, whereupon a final telegram came to hand directing the physician to start at once. It was in the depth of winter, and bitterly cold, so that our medical man was anything but pleased at the prospect of the long journey. But what was his disgust on being met at the Cracow railway station, by a deputation of long-coated Polish Jews, bringing the tidings that he came too late, as Moses Abrahamson had died a few hours before. As there was no train back to Vienna that day, he was perforce compelled to put up for the night at a hotel. Meanwhile the news of the great doctor's arrival had spread through the town, and sick people of every description, both Jews and Christians, besieged his door. So many afflicted persons touched his compassionate heart, and he freely gave them the advice they needed. When, at last, he got to the station, and was about to step into the carriage, a Polish Jew came sidling up to him with a knowing smile on his face, and whispered in his ear: "I say, doctor, I only wanted to tell you that Moses Abrahamson isn't dead; not a bit of it; he was among those patients whom you cured for nothing."

A Plumb Up an' Down Man.

Imperial Ceremonies in Russia.

Mr. George Augustus Sala, one of the best-known of English Journalists, has been lecturing this winter in our American cities. We copy from an exchange a passage of the pleasant gossip with which he entertained his hearers, relating to two visits made by him to the Russian capitals. In 1857 he went to St. Petersburg, where preparations for the coronation at Moscow of Alexander II. were in progress, a part of them being the daily drilling of one hundred and twenty thousand troops of nearly every nation and tribe under Russian sway.

In 1881 he was again in the Russian metropolis at the funeral of Alexander II., his instructions to attend, he said, being worded thus: Will you be so good as to write a leading article on the price of fish—and go to St. Petersburg by the night express.

"I don't think," he went on, "I ever saw a face more expressive of horror and terror and uneasy dread of that which was to come than was presented by the new Emperor. Even while they were going through the stately mummeries of investing him with the Order of the Garter it presented to my mind the aspect of a condemned criminal upon whom they were putting fetters."

But there is a brighter side to this picture—the coronation at Moscow in 1883. Mr. Sala stated that as he was obliged in order to attend to appear in uniform, he donned that costume in which he would have been presented at the English court, had he sought that honor; he was given a very humble position.

But his private secretary, who held a civic office in London, and beside whose costume that of Solomon in all his glory was "small potatoes," was placed between the Khan of Khiva and the Emir of Bokhara, and was permitted to leave the cathedral at his pleasure. Thus Mr. Sala was able to get the start by two hours of his competitors, and send to the London Telegraph a telegram of seven and one-half columns.

President Mitchell's Successor.

It is reported in Milwaukee concerning the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul that it is generally understood Mr. Roswell Miller will be appointed general manager, and his assistant will be Mr. Ben Lennox. While there is to be no radical change in the policy of this road, there are to be one or two new offices created, which will transfer old titles and create new ones. It is said that Alexander Mitchell will resign the presidency next June. It has been learned that John W. Cary, general solicitor, will be selected by the directors to succeed Mr. Mitchell. Following this move, the officers of the road are to be known and named in the following manner: President, John W. Cary; the offices of the two vice presidents will be filled by eastern stockholders; general manager, Roswell Miller; superintendent, J. T. Clark; assistant general manager, Ben Lennox; A. C. Bird, superintendent freight traffic; A. V. H. Carpenter, superintendent passenger traffic; D. W. Keyes, general passenger agent; G. H. Heafford, general passenger and ticket agent; A. F. Merrill, assistant general passenger agent. Mr. D. S. Wegg will naturally fall in as general solicitor of the road. Mr. N. Goll will sit in Mr. Keyes' chair. There will be no change in the division superintendents. Mr. P. M. Myers will remain secretary, with his office in Milwaukee, and J. M. McKinley, assistant secretary, will reside in New York. Mr. Clark will relieve his superior officer of everything pertaining to the active operation of the road, and Mr. Miller will devote his whole time and attention to consultation with the various heads. It is stated Mr. Mitchell will travel extensively throughout Europe after resigning.

What the Saxton Said.

Mr. Lewis Edwards, Sexton of Mt. Vernon Place Church, Washington, D. C., certifies that for several months past he had been suffering with a severe cough which distressed him day and night. He was very much debilitated, with constant pains in his chest. After trying various remedies he used the Red Star Cough Cure, which gave him entire relief.

Color Your Butter.

Farmers that try to sell white butter are all of the opinion that dairying does not pay. If they would use Wells, Richardson & Co's. Improved Butter Color, and market their butter in perfect condition, they would still get good prices, but it will not pay to make any but the best in color and quality. This color is used by all the leading creameries and dairymen, and is sold by druggists and merchants.

Portland, Or., has a genuine case of Oriental leprosy.

Merited Praise.

The universal praise bestowed upon Kidney-Wort as an invaluable remedy for all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels is well merited. Its virtues are universally known and its cures are reported on all sides. Many obstinate cases have succumbed to it after they had been given up by the doctors and a thorough treatment will never fail to cure. Sold by all druggists. See adv't.

THE WISDOM OF THE DEAD.

HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD.

My love has been dead for an hour;
Oh! she has been true to me;
She had loved me in passion and pain,
She had followed o'er land and sea.

And I had been true to her,
Or as true as a man may be;
He does not love like a girl,
And follow o'er land and sea.

But I loved her the best of all,
Though I may have had other friends;
And if ever she doubted me
She made me divine amends.

But an hour before she died
My beautiful worshiper said,
If I could swear I had always been true
Then she should be happy dead.

So I swore with a steady voice,
With my hand upon her head,
That I had always been true,
That she might be happy dead.

Ah! I wonder how much they know,
These dead with their strange new powers;
And I wonder can they be hurt
By folly and fault of ours.

Oh! the very thought appalls,
And I shrink with sudden dread,
That although she loved me so
She may not be happy dead.

CECILE.

From the French of G. de Cherville, by Francis Shaw.

Every afternoon toward 3 o'clock a carriage bearing a crest drew up at the gate of the Tuileries opposite the Rue des Pyramides. When the footman had opened the door the first to descend was a woman, who carefully assisted down the steps a young man of timid and hesitating gait. Then drawing the arm of her companion within her own, she entered the garden with a babe in her arms.

The young man, who was not yet quite 30, was as remarkable for elegance of form as for regularity of features. But there was one defect in the otherwise perfect ensemble; the flame which should have vivified it was extinguished. The unhappy man was blind.

The two in exterior formed a striking, almost brutal contrast. Nature, liberal to prodigalitty toward the one, had been strangely avaricious to the other. The poor woman was small, sickly, ugly; her irregular features had besides that suffering expression which not even youth can mitigate, and which defies all arts of the toilet.

How then could it have happened, this ill assorted union? How had Cecile Berthaut, a humble governess, as void of fortune as of attractions, become the wife of Count Robert de Chatillion?

She had just finished an engagement as governess in a Moldavian family at Jassy, and was returning to France by way of Vienna, when a serious accident to the steamboat on which she had set out, had compelled the captain to leave his passengers at Ribitzno, thirty leagues from Belgrade. Upon arrival at the only and very mediocre inn of the village, the young girl saw that her accent excited no little emotion. The landlord, finding that she was a Frenchwoman, informed her that there had been for several days in his house a young Frenchman seriously ill; his situation rendered still more deplorable from his inability to speak a word of German or Hungarian.

Poorly dowered as was Cecile Berthaut in external gifts, she was rich in shining qualities of the heart. All generous and elevated sentiments found a home in her breast. Without a moment's delay she sought her countryman.

His condition was even more grave than the inn-keeper had said. From an exploring voyage to the mouth of the Danube he had brought the germs of malignant fever which had forced him to stop at Rinitzno. The disease had developed with frightful radidity. Two days after taking his bed the young officer had fallen into a comatose state of evil augury. When Cecile entered his sick-room he was in a delirium, and could answer her questions only by incoherent words. Profoundly moved by this deplorable isolation, fascinated, perhaps, by that charm of feature that triumphed over the ravages of disease, the young girl decided at once to fulfil the mission Providence had ordained, by leading her to this unfortunate, she resolved to care for him, and if a fatal issue was inevitable, to soothe his last moments.

The sick man's name was stamped upon his valise, a pocketbook contained his passport. This she sent immediately to the French ambassador at Vienna, advising him of the desperate condition of M. de Chatillon and imploring him to inform the relatives. This duty fulfilled, she gave her days and nights to the work of charity she had undertaken.

The task, arduous at best, became more so from her lack of confidence in the Hungarian physician of Ribitzno. His repeated blood-lettings allayed the fever, but at the same time aggravated the cephalic symptoms; the delirium continued and the eyes become the seat of an alarming inflammation.

For ten days Cecile had watched at the sick man's pillow. So much attached had she become to her work that it was not without a pressure at the heart that she saw a carriage stop at the inn and an old lady with white hair step from it. After a few words with the landlord the lady mounted the stairs. The young girl felt sure that this was M. de Chatillon's mother; that her mission was ended.

Breathless the newcomer hastened to the bed. At sight of the ghastly emaciated face of her son she sank sobbing upon her knees. The sick man, who had fallen into the torpid state of the beginning of the crisis, scarcely turned his head. Cecile approached the old lady, explained her presence, and sought to console her. Deeply moved by the devotion of a stranger to her child, Mme. de Chatillon thanked Cecile with the eloquence of a mother menaced in the very flesh of her flesh.

In spite of this burst of gratitude Cecile saw that her position near this young man was becoming difficult, and said to Mme. de Chatillon that [illegible]

[illegible] spoke with a vehemence that seemed to rouse her son from his legarthy. He moved his hand several times with an air of impatience. Cecile, who was nearest the bed, took the hand in hers, trying to calm the sufferer. At this contact the wasted fingers pressed her wrist significantly.

"You see, mademoiselle," resumed the afflicted mother, "that he would not have his guardian angel leave her work unfinished. For pity's sake, do not forsake him! You have found employment. Consider yourself my traveling companion, and I swear to you that I will always regard and treat you as my second child."

Cecile yielded to these moving entreaties. She saw that her presence was as necessary to the mother as to the son.

The hurried journey, the cruel emotions she had suffered, had prostrated the already ailing Mme. de Chatillon, and Cecile, besides her other duties, now had the care of a confirmed invalid.

The scene just related seemed to have produced a salutary effect upon the sick man; the fever disappeared, reason returned, he regained some strength, but his sight grew no better. When Cecile at length took her two patients to Vienna she summoned a council of physicians. They decided that the iris had lost its power of contraction, that amaurosis was complete, that M. de Chatilion must resign himself to lifelong blindness, a decision confirmed a few months later by the most renowned oculists of Paris.

They then retired to the Chatilion estate near Montes. Here, after months of languishing, the mother died; commending her idolized son to the young girl she persisted in calling his guardian angel.

The blind man who had hitherto borne his affliction with a strength of mind akin to stoicism was strangely affected by this new trial. He became anxious, preoccupied, almost melancholy. When Cecile came to read to him, to guide him in his daily walk, he received her with the wonted smile; he thanked her with the usual touching emotion, only to fall back into interminable reveries. Her shorter absence made him impatient, and one day when some errand to the town had detained her longer than was expected, she found him on her return the prey to an agitation he copld not conceal.

His solicitude grew daily. Cecile, attributing his sadness to the loss of his mother, and to his blindness, conjured him to make an effort to recover his former resignation.

"I still weep for my mother," he replied, "but convinced that every passing hour brings nearer the moment of our reunion; my sorrow loses day by day its bitterness. Cruel as is my destiny I have become resigned to it, and I must say to you, Cecile, that you have rendered my lot so sweet that I have many times blessed my misfortune. The cause of my sadness lies neither in the past nor present; it is anxiety for the future."

"What then do you fear?" asked Cecile, tremulously.

"That I may lose some day her to whom I owe so much. I fear this not only because without her care my misfortune will assume new horrors, but because I love you."

Cecile's face blanched. "It is wrong," she sobbed, "for you to doubt my friendship."

"Your friendship!" echoed the young man bitterly; "Cecile, this would alone justify my terrors. What will it weigh, this friendship, if one day a sentiment that admits neither partition nor rivalry comes to take possession of your heart? No, no! If you would really have me recover that early serenity; if you would have me as at the first, bear patiently, even gayly the lot that casts me off from the number of those who behold God's creatures and His beautiful world, there must exist between you and me a tie other and stronger than friendship—you must consent to become my wife."

For a moment speechless, Cecile fixed her amazed eyes upon the blind man. She seemed not to have understood his words.

"O, heaven!" she cried at length. "How deeply I regret not having reached Ribitzno two days earlier."

"Why, Cecile?"

"Because you then could have seen me, monsieur; because if you had seen me my plain face would have remained so deeply graven in your remembrance as to spare you this new trouble after so many sorrows. This confession costs my self-love nothing. I am ugly, Monsieur Robert; so ugly that my friendship, the friendship you value so lightly, would never consent to give you a companion so unworthy of you."

"No, you can not be ugly, Cecile. The eyes which mirror this celestial sweetness and all the noble sentiments of the most generous and loving of hearts can not be without their charm; there must be seductions in the smile that accompanies a voice so gentle and penetrating. And what matters to me more or less regularity in the features? I, alas, shall never see! What I love in you is your soul, and this world holds not a soul more beautiful and pure."

Cecile had listened, bewildered, entranced, despite herself, at these intoxicating words; enchanted at seeing rise before her that prospective she had never dared cherish even in dreams. But soon recalled to the reality, confused, ashamed at having submitted to an enthrallment not sanctioned by reason, she protested more energetically than ever, that her resolution was formed, and no arguments could change it.

This heroic contest went on for nearly two months. M. de Chatillon returned daily to the charge with more impassioned earnestness. But there was a traitor in the stronghold—the heart of the poor young girl. The health of the besieger also began to give way, and anxiety for him at length decided the besieged to waive her scruples and sign an honorable capitulation.

This is how the former governess became the Countess de Chatillon.

Never had union been more happy, never had two beings so nearly realized the ideal of a perfect marriage. But Cecile could not believe in the duration of this radiant felicity. As upon that day when her husband had first told her of his love, she often believed herself the sport of some illusion. Then the least sound or movement would make her tremble. It seemed to her that the awakening from her dream might come at any moment. [illegible]

[illegible] ceptions were often attended by strangers, Cecile remarked an elderly gentleman, very eccentric in dress and manner, who gazed at her husband with singular persistence. Mme. de Gleves begged permission to present him, saying with a mocking smile, that he was Dr. Richter, a renowned American specialist who had effected marvelous cures of blindness, older in date even than that of her cousin, whose case he would gladly undertake.

Cecile gave him an eager welcome. She told him the circumstances attending her husband's loss of sight, and he declared the presumptions in favor of a cure were strong, adding that he could give a decided opinion only after minute examination. He then asked permission to visit M. de Chatillon on the morrow.

Cecile could not give this without her husband's acquiesence, which was not easy to obtain. He had exhausted all the resources of official science; he had tested many empirical remedies, alike in vain, and flatly refused to see the American doctor.

Cecile insisted, implored, but without avail. Excusing herself to the physician, she withdrew to a deserted corner of the salon, to think over the situation. Suddenly she heard her name spoken by Mme. de Gleves, who was in a small conservatory separated from the larger room by a mass of exotic plants.

"You see, my dear, that I am not so simple as to fail to understand the infernal combination that has dictated this inexplicable refusal. That little monster of a Cecile must go on imposing upon our unhappy relative. If the doctor's hand should send away the veil, he would appreciate her at her true value, and see what stange sort of a Countess of Chatillion he has imposed upon us as a cousin. That foolish comedy of perfect love they have for three years been giving to the public would then soon enough have the denouement such an ugly creature deserves!"

Upon hearing these cruel words, Cecile rose, pale and trembling; her feverish glance scanned the various groups. She saw the American just bidding his adieu. She rushed forward, reaching him in the hall just as a valet was helping hin on with his overcoat.

"Doctor," she said in a hollow, tremulous voice, "your offer is excepted. I count upon your visit to-morrow noon. If you restore sight to M. de Chatillon I will bless you to my latest hour!"

Five minutes later the poor young wife led away her husband, concealing from him her agitation and the incident that had caused it.

Cecile passed a horrible night. This happiness which had rendered life so dear was about to perish; the dream had ended. Through all the long, interminable hours she wept bitterly, despairingly. Nevertheless, dawn found her firm and resolute.

She went to her husband, and, without imparting to him the unworthy conjectures of Mme. de Gleves, she urged him in such sweet, tender words to seek healing once again that she triumphed over his repugnance.

Doctor Richter came promptly, and after a careful diagnosis announced to M. de Chantillon the certainty of success. The treatment began at once. The applications were to continue nine days, during which time the patient was to be kept in utter darkness. He yielded to this condition with rather a bad grace; as for Cecile, she accepted these nine days as one condemned to death accepts the respite of a brief period of existence. There remained nine days more in which she might be beloved.

Alas, like one condemned to death, she knew the tortures of the being to whom the hour of supreme denouement has ceased to be a mystry, for whom each movement of the hand upon the dial repeats the fatal decree, brings a rending of the heart, a convulsion of anguish. The delay, accepted at first as a consolation, became an agony. In vain Robert repeated to her that it would be with this physician as with all the others—that blind he had taken him, and blind he would leave him. Not for a single moment did Cecile doubt of success. She was convinced that her happiness had been too great to last.

On the ninth day the doctor found Mme. de Chatillon in the saloon. He had anticipated the hour. Cecile, who had not expected him so soon, was giving her tears free vent, knowing that the supreme moment had arrived.

The American, regarding her more closely than usual, saw the fearful ravages grief had made upon the unhappy woman, but he absolutely mistook the cause of the sorrow of which he had become the involuntary witness.

"I perceive, madam," he said, smiling, "That I have not succeeded in making you share my confidence in the cure of Count de Chatillon. Happily the moment has come to furnish you something better than affirmations. In five minutes your husband will see you as I now see you myself."

At this assurance, which so greatly aggravated her wound, Cecile raised a cry. Her sobs redoubled, she had to stifle them with her handkerchief.

"I beg your pardon, madam," said the amazed physician; "but in truth I do not comprehend——"

"You shall comprehend, monsieur!" cried the young wife. "I passionately love my husband, and thus far I am sure he has fondly loved me in return. Now look me in the face—right in the face, Doctor—and see if when M. de Chatillon shall have seen me plainly and distinctly as you now see me, say if it will still be possible for him to love me."

The doctor lowered his eyes and did not answer. "Ah, madame," he faltered, "do you think if I had supposed, if I had known——?"

"If you had known—Ah Doctor, this is an insult!" cried Cecile, with indignant violence. "When I asked you to treat M. de Chatillon I told you that if you succeeded in restoring his sight I should owe you my life. Heed well what I say at this moment! It is not the sacrifice alone of the days which remain to me in this world that I am willing to make for his restoration, it is that of my happiness through eternity. Upon my knees I implore you in the name of all you love, give him back his sight, doctor, give him back his sight!"

The doctor was visibly affected; he tried to console the unhappy woman. Soon yielding to a sudden inspiration, he rushed into the adjoining chamber, and, reappearing with the cradle in which little Bertha slept, placed it before Cecile. Then he went out again [illegible]

For the three personages now concerned with our story, there was one moment of unutterable suspence. Robert, dazzled by the light, faltered. Then he perceived the cradle.

"My daughter!" he cried with transport. "I shall not die without having seen the features of my child. But Cecile—Where is Cecile?" he added, anxiously.

A low sobbing answered. The poor woman kneeling behind the doctor covered her face with her two hands.

"And you, my well beloved Cecile," he said, bending over his wife, "I am to see you also!"

"No, no, Robert! Do not look at me, I implore you. But I have not deceived you. I told you, I forewarned you. I am ugly."

"Ugly! Nonsense. Could my wife, the mother of my child, be ugly to me?"

So saying, Robert de Chatillion, withdrawing his wife's hands from her face, covered that face with kisses, while the doctor flourished his handkerchief so as to arrest at its source a tear which would have compromised his Yankee phlegm.

The Doctor in Asia Minor.

"Humphrey Sandwich; a Memoir:" As my patients became numerous, and pestered me at all hours, I fitted up a spare tent to serve as my dispensary, and gave out that I received at the time of afternoon prayer (asar). I took my seat at the door of the tent, and soon had a crowd around me, many suffering from real diseases, many from imaginary ones, and many bringing for my inspection the effects of disease, such as palsied limbs and stiff joints. A young man was the first who presented himself most vociferous to see the hakeem. He entered my tent and desired a private interview. "Eshtareed, what do you want," I asked. "Ya hakeem, shoof," he began, "look here, I am married to a wife and am somewhat tired of her, and have fallen in love with a virgin whom I wish to marry, but my wife, curses on her! has found it out, ee wallah! and has given her a charm which prevents the beautiful virgin from loving me. I have beaten my wife, but that is of no use. Ya hakeem, I am your sacrifice"—taking me by the beard, which he kissed—"God bless you, hakeem, give me some strong medicine to kill the charm, and I am your slave and sacrifice." "Here, said I, take this pill fasting, and you are cured. And as he retired with the precious bread pill, which he tied up in the corner of his sleeve, he called down blessings on my head. An old woman next came forward, and taking hold of the corner of my cloak, she kissed it, and then kneeling before began in a very wheedling manner to call my attention to her case. She went on to describe the most anomalous symptoms, affecting her eyes, ears, limbs, and sometimes every part of her. On further inquiry she confessed to be quite well at that moment but a year ago having had strange complaints, she dreaded the same thing would invade her this year. I then promised to give her strong medicine, but ordered the crowd to stand at a short distance from us. A space is cleared, and all wait in silent admiration for my remedy. I slowly drew forth a bottle of strong liquor of ammonia or (smelling salts) from my medicine chest, and holding it before my patient's eyes told her to draw in a strong breath when I put it to her nose. I accordingly first held her nostrils, then, having removed the stopper, I apply the mouth of the bottle to the nose, the fingers are removed, a long snuff is taken, followed by a sort of spasm, and she falls to the ground. A hum of horror runs through the crowd; the patient after a short interval rises, her eyes streaming with tears, and then breaks from the crowd, "La Ilaha illa 'llaha Mohammed rasulu 'llah"—"There is no God but the God, and Mohammed is the apostle of God."

Lady Lonsdale as a Flirt.

From the New York World.

One of the other subjects of talk in society is the jilting of Edgar Vincent by Gladys, Lady Lonsdale, one of the celebrated London beauties, whose picture may be found at Mora's or Sarony's here. She has now jilted the two handsomest men of England. The first, Luke White, Lord Annaly's eldest son, a young Irish Guardsman, has got over it and wedded a young and beautiful girl of the House of Dover, niece of the Dukes of Sunderland, Argyl, Lienster, Westminster, and all that lot.

Vincent has taken his dismissal more to heart, but as he is poor and the lady has but a fair dower and is of unbridled extravagance, he may find it in the end for the best. He is 6 feet 3, of splendid proportions and as clever as he is handsome, having carried away all the honors of his university years and won much distinction in Egypt. Lady Lonsdale is herself 6 feet in height, with massive hair lying languidly in grand, easy forms, finely pronounced features, deep, melancholy eyelids, a face to bind at times with a classic fillet like a Cassandra, but which, when lit up, is full of beautiful expression and breaks into a thousand smiles, very much resembling Honthurst's picture of the "Queen of Bohemia" in the English gallery. Her character has similar shades. When a child her mother led her by the hand after the coffin of her father, Sydney Herbert, whom Disraeli had pictured in his "Endymion," and ever since she has been in the habit of falling into fits of deep melancholy, from which she rises to the opposite extremes.

She married Lord Lonsdale entirely against the wishes of her family, with whom she rarely associates. He came to a sad end, dying after a very dissolute life in the house of Miss Cannie Gilchrist, a noted London blonde. He was previously for some months at the Brevoort House here, and it was a bottle of his old Jamaica which Sam Ward sent to President Garfield after Guiteau's fatal shot. Lonsdale had lost in time a heavy sum upon the turf before retiring.

The beatings of the heart are less when sitting than when standing; less when lying down than when sitting. A pulse beating seventy-four times a minute when its owner is standing, will beat seventy times when he is sitting, and sixty-four times when he is lying down. The heart rests during sleep, since it beats ten strokes less every minute. As it throws six ounces of blood at every stroke, eight hours sleep would make a difference of about 5,000 strokes. QUEEN VICTORIA'S LIFE.

Railroad Journeys, and Precautions Against Observation—The Daily Routine of the Court—How Her Majesty Receives and Dines with Her Visitors.

In July last, when the Queen had fixed the day of her departure from Windsor, she unexpectedly postponed it says a correspondent of the N. Y. Sun. Such a swerving from all established precedent was as startling as it was new, and gave rise to the most conflicting conjectures. It was promptly ascertained that the delay was not caused by the health of the Duchess of Albany, and while speculation was still rife, the reason became suddenly apparent. Her majesty would not leave the castle before personally visiting Lockwood, a recently engaged footman, in the privacy of his home at St. Mark's place in the royal borough, and condoling with him and his family on an accident that had happened to his little child. In the same way the return of the queen from Balmoral did not take place till Thursday last, despite the severity of the season, because she had to attend to the funeral of Mr. Willie Blair, her highland fiddler.' This personage was 90 years old, and beside a moderate musical talent and the enviable fact of being the most ancient inhabitant of the village, he does not appear to have been distinguished by any quality or achievement—to have run a career of such particular usefulness as to justify his entombment in Craithe churchyard. The graceful complement must, therefore, be viewed by the country at large merely as a proof that the soverign can occasionally withdraw herself from her mournful retirement, if not to associate with the nobles of her great empire, to grace public ceremonies, or delight her capital with her august presence, at least to honor servants, shepherds, and gillies with attractions all the more flattering that they are so exclusive.

The habitual precautions for isolating the Queen from the curiosity and demonstrations of her subjects, and making the transit from one royal residence to another monastically secluded, were perhaps even intensified during the journey of Friday last. With one solitary exception, the stations were virtually unapproachable while the queen's special train was in sight. Once only, at Ferry Hill station, the Great Northern Company issed tickets enabling some privilidged individuals to enter the sacred precincts and to feast their eyes, at a respectful distance, on the midnight pageant. These tickets were only obtainable with great difficulty, and after searching investigation into the postulant's antecedents. It is not said whether gate money was taken, and who benefited by the proceeds.

At Windsor, in broad daylight, when the train arrived from Scotland, a guard/of the Third Batallion of grenadier guards lined the Castle Hill road, and the whole constabulary force of the borough patrolled the way between the Great Western station and the palace,/a detachment of the Metropolitan police had been additionally sent from Paddington, and the company's staff jealously guarded the station, rails, and viaduct arches, so that at a rough computation it was estimated that the number of officers employed to protect the Queen against her loyal subjects exceeded the gathered spectators by a not inconsiderable figure.

Apropos of the journeys of the royal family of England, it is not perhaps generally known that its members, although endowed with considerable civil lists, do no bear the expenses of their Continental excursions, in so far that the budget is charged to the amount of £40 for every trip across the Channel, payable to the steamer that has carried them across. Last year the Prince of Wales and his sons crossed seven times, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburg five times, the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg three, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught the same, the Princess Imperial of Germany twice, the Duchess of Teck, the Duke of Cambridge, and Princess Beatrice respectively once, running up a bill of £920, defrayed by long-suffering, but discontented ratepayers.

The dull, regular, uninteresting routine of her Majesty's daily life, so trying even to the enduring patience of her last remaining daughter, has once more begun, unrelieved save by the homely, almost lowly, incidents recorded above, and which constitute the only communion between the nation and herself. Time was, even after the castle had been virtually closed for all festivities, that guests were bidden to it for the three days' visit so dear to the British heart, and during their stay enjoyed the privilege of revelling in the priceless accumulation of pictures, tapestries, objects of art, rare books, rarer engravings and unrivalled specimens of china—one little table with rose Dubarry medallions alone being estimated at £25,000. Now the invitations rarely extend over one evening and night, and, although they are to all intents and purposes commands, sometimes only reach the recipients a few hours before the time when their attendence is required.

A fast train brings you down from Paddington station in forty minutes. As no carriages are habitually sent to meet you, you have to trust yourself and servants to flies or cabs to reach the castle. Pages of the Queen, lads belonging to the best families in the kingdom take charge of you and, consulting a written list, conduct you to the apartments set aside for your use. These consists of a complete suite of rooms, the only fault being that in winter they are apt to be insufficiently warmed, as the Queen is constitutionally averse to heat. Shortly after the arrival of a guest, he receives the visit of the Master of the Household, Sir J. C. Cowell, who brings him an invitation to have tea with one or other of the ladies in waiting.

Full court dress is de rigueur for the dinner. As early as 8 o'clock the guests assemble in the great gallery which runs around the quadrangle, and which forms an immense picture gallery, never open to the general public even at those periods when admittance to the state apartments is allowed during the Queen's absence from Windsor. At half past 8, accompanied by the Princess Beatrice, her Majesty makes her appearence, and, with a few brief words to the company, leads the way to the dining-room. If there are sixteen to dinner it is served in that appartment, one side of which is a broad window [illegible] en famille the Queen dines in one of the octagonal towers, where each of the eight windows frames a perfect view of the park.

There is little or no conversation at these state repasts. The Queen not unfrequently leans forward to whisper a remark to her daughter in a fashion which to say the least, is discomposing to the uninitiated. The menu, besides the names of the dishes, gives that of the chef who has concoted them. The innumerable footmen are all in gala livery, butlers and pages in costume, and the so-called "clerks of the kitchen," in black coats and knee breeches, stand at the sideboards to carve.

After the dinner, which is short, the Queen retires with the ladies—a mere formality, for the men follow three minutes later. The members of the court and household have also finished their meal, taken in the great hall opening out of the first of the three great saloons, and which is used by the Queen only when her party exceeds thirty. Sir J. Cowell presides at that table. The post-prandial ceremonies are promptly gone through, her majesty exchanges a few sentences with each of her guests, who remain standing the whole time, and at the end of half an hour, at the outside, withdraws to her rooms, which are always brilliantly lighted, and where she finishes the evening conversing with her daughter, reading, writing, or being read to. Meanwhile her visitors are at liberty to play whist or listen to music in the red and green drawing rooms. The gentlemen can betake themselves to billiards or to the smoking rooms. The latter are provided even for the servants, but it is strictly forbidden to smoke in any other apartment, public or private.

Every visitor knows that he will see his royal hostess no more, and that he is expected to leave the castle by 11 next morning. He can take his breakfast in his rooms or down stairs, as he prefers. Her majesty has her very early meat either alone or with some prince of blood royal. At 9 she drives through the grounds, which are of great extent and beauty and strictly private to Frogmore, where she alights and, weather permitting, enters a tent spread on the lawn for her use. There she reads her letters and the newspapers. The latter have been previously carefully scanned by one of her ladies in waiting and the passages which should meet her eye marked in red pencil. She scrupulously abstains from glancing at any others. Under a second tent she then attends to business, and bulky packages of correspondence are then opened before her. A mounted groom constantly rides backward and forward, carrying her instructions to her private secretary of the castle. She herself returns thither for lunch, after which the afternoon is filled up with walking or driving with Princess Beatrice until the evening again begins.

Amid the pomp, magnificence and lavish display of the great royal citadel in that gorgeous pile filled with a wealth of art, in contrast with the exhorbitant expenditure of stables, kitchens, and countless attendants, pages, grooms, domestics and gardeners, petty economies are practised which many an impoverished householder would feel ashamed to attempt. One instance may suffice: Every new visitor is entitled to a fresh supply of candles. It would be unseemly to leave in his rooms any that had once been used, so Sir J. C. Cowell, in a laudable spirit of thrift, has invented a small machine which dexterously restores to the wick its virgin freshness. The Master of the Household is so proud of this ingenious device that he never fails to point out how satisfactorily it works to any of his private friends who obtain permission to inspect the offices. The wax scrapings are collected and returned to the candle manufactory, where they are remodelled into new candles and sold back to the Queen's household at reduced rates.

Of all the residences of the Queen, Windsor Castle is the only one which in appearance, magnitude, grandeur of approach and situation fulfills the requirements which make it a fit abode for the sovereign of a great and powerful nation.

How it Was Found.

The big eagle that dropped Sinbad into the Valley of Diamonds was a "story bird;" and it may be fiction that tells us the first gems of the now famous Transvaal were discovered in the crop of a South African Dutchman's hen; but it is unquestionable that more than one revelation of the riches of the earth to men has been unconsciously made by the act of a dumb animal. In this line of service the poor pig has beaten all competitors if what a correspondent of the Cleveland Leader tells us is true:

I have just returned from the shores of Lake Superior, where I spent some sime visiting the copper regions, the greatest in the world.

Throughout the rocky, barren Keweenaw peninsula, good for nothing as farming lands, the immense copper deposits have caused large towns to spring up, and they now give employment to thousands of men.

About eighteen years ago a pig strayed from the drove to which it belonged, and fell into a pit on a spot where the city of Calumet now stands. In rooting about, it uncovered a mass of native copper, and showed to the world the location of the greatest copper mine it has ever known.

As the result of that pig's rooting, humanity is now thirty-five million dollars richer in the use of the copper there discovered, and the stockholders, who, led by the pig, have helped the world to this wealth, have received about twenty-five million dollars for their trouble. A town of six thousand inhabitants has gathered around the pig's hole, and nearly two thousand men are employed in operating the mines beneath it.

It has been often asserted, without much attempt at refutation, that the Yankee is dying out of New England on account of the prevalent dislike to fulfil the scriptural injunction to multiply. The case of Vermont is a fair sample, in the respect, of other States. The population of Vermont in 1840 was 291,948 and in 1880 it has increased to 332,286; but the number of children in the common schools decreased from 97,518 in the former year to 72,744 in 1884. It ought to be said, however, that while in forty years the population has increased 14 per cent, the number of children under twenty is over 5 per cent less than in 1840. The average number of persons to each family [illegible]

A WONDERFUL DRUG.

Marvelous Properties of the Newly Discovered Anæsthetic.

Cleveland Leader: "Have you ever seen an operation performed on the eye by the aid of the wonderful anæsthetic cocoaine?" asked a student of Western Reserve medical university of a reporter the other day.

"No," was the reply.

"Then come with me. It is to be given another experiment at the college to-day." The student led the way and conducted his companion to the little room where the patient and a group of doctors were gathered. The former was suffering intensely. The eyes were extended far beyond their natural size by the swelling of the iris. The eyeballs were pressed against the lid, and the least touch caused the most intense agony. The disease is known as glaucoma, and former operations to relieve it had occasioned the patient severe suffering. The interest manifested by the gentlemen present was profound. Several were practical oculists, and all were liable to meet single-handed a like case in their own practice. The patient, a fine-looking gentleman of about 35 years, was assured that the operation would be absolutely painless, but the suffering he had endured for the past month or two had weakened his nerves, and it was sometime before he could summon sufficient courage to permit the operation to go on. Finally he dropped on his back on the couch, shut his teeth tightly together and said, "Go on, gentlemen." The physician, who was to perform the operation drew from his case a miniature vial tightly sealed and labelled "Hydrochlorate of Cocoaine." The seal was broken, and the patient directed to open his eyes as widely as possible. The doctor also drew his watch, and laid it upon his knee. Four drops of the anaesthetic were then let fall into the right eye. The little second hand moved five points and four drops more were let fall. Five seconds more were waited for, and the same amount was again dropped into the eye. In ten seconds more, the doctor touched the eye lightly with his handkerchief. "Do you feel any pain?" he asked the patient.

"Not the slightest," answered the latter. The eye was then pressed against, the lid was crowded against it, and the patient was directed to touch it with his finger. It was as callous as stone. The eye was then slit with a little knife, and the iris was split in two. A pair of delicate forceps were then inserted and a piece of the iris extracted. The operation may have lasted two minutes, and during that time the eye did not even twitch, and the patient assured those about him that he felt nothing whatever. As has been said before, the operation is not a new one, but it has hitherto been performed under very adverse circumstances owing to the inability of the usual chloroform or ether to keep the patient insensible for a sufficient length of time. The operation witnessed by the reporter was the second in which the anæsthetic has ever been used outside of New York.

Cocoaine was produced from the leaf by Neiman, a German chemist, in 1880, but it was left for Dr. Carl Kroller, of the Vienna general hospital, in 1884, to find that this new alkaloid rendered that extremely sensitive organ, the eye, so completely insensible that its surface might be gouged, scratched and cut without exciting any sense of pain or even causing motion. Since then it has leaped by a bound into professional favor and an agent previously regarded rather as of mere chemical interest has been demonstrated to be of such value in eye surgery as to advance in price to the almost fabulous sum of over $200 per ounce. It is valuable not alone as an anæsthetic, marvelous as is such a boon to a sufferer. While destroying sensibility it enables the patient to obtain entire control of that organ, so that operations can be performed with greater certainty of success than is possible with chloroform or ether.

Personal Paragraphs.

Massachusetts now pays its Governor $5,000 a year. The salary was reduced to $4,000 in 1879, but restored last year, to take effect with the beginning of 1885.

An Arizona paper of recent date contains the following personal paragraph: "Larry Clingwhistle, the popular and gentlemanly baker of Sun Up Corners, departed for the great majority yesterday. We trust he has gone to the land where baking is unknown."

When Mark Twain was serving as private secretary to Senator Jim Nye of Nevada, he replied he replied to a letter from some of the Senator's constituents asking for a subscription to aid in building a church: "What you want is not a church, but a nice, large, strong, new jail."

Gladstone is a mild-looking man with baggy trousers. He is a regular prowler. He prefers back streets. He never dresses well. People frequently see him in a tumble-down hat and shabby suit, standing in front of the window of a bric-a-bac store. His face is striking. It is hard and bony, with powerful forehead, a firm mouth and characteristic nose. He is, as everybody knows a close student, a devoted church-goer and a great lover of negro minstrel songs. Altogether, and odd character.

Mr. Sala tells a good story of Garibaldi. The general visited a house in England where preparations had been made to entertain him in sumptuous fashion. But he declined to partake of any supper, and asked that a bottle of bitter ale and some bread and cheese might be sent to his room. In the morning, when a servant went to call him to come to breakfast, he was missing from his room. He was discovered in the garden, but he didn't want any breakfast. He had made his morning meal off what remained of the bread and cheese and beer.

Mrs. Bowen, wife of the Colorado senator, was entaining a number of callers at the Riggs House, Washington, when a lady entered and exclaimed, "Oh, Mrs. Bowen, your husband died suddenly at the Capitol this afternoon." Mrs. Bowen arose from her chair, covered her face with her handkerchief a moment and then fell to the floor in a faint. It was some minutes before she revived. Meanwhile Senator Bowen entered the room. A little investigation developed the fact that a man named Bowen fell in a fit at the Senate wing of the Capitol. Out of this grew the rumor that it was Senator Bowen. Before the news reached the down-town hotels, it was reported that Senator Bowen had died.

THE FIRST CLOUD.

They stood at the altar one short year ago;
He vowed from troubles of life to defend her.
To have her and hold her for weal or for wo—
She spoke the responses in accents most tender.

To-night in the gloom they are sitting apart;
Oh! has all her wifely devotion been wasted?
She mopes there in silence, a pain at her heart;
The lamps are unlighted, his supper untasted.

Their sky, erst all cloudless, is now overcast;
For joy there is sorrow, for gladness dejection;
The serpent has entered their Eden at last,
And left his dark trail on the flowers of affection.

Oh, well may there be in her bosom a pain,
A grief that she vainly endeavors to smother;
To-night he has told her in language quite plain,
She can't cook his meals half as good as his mother!

A COMEDY OF TWO.

Waiting for the Train.

Philadelphia Press: Scene: Pennsylvania Railroad Station, corner Broad and Filbert streets. Ladies' waiting room. Usual occupants, obliging matron in charge, many small children, anxious mammas, careless nurses, pretty girls, elderly party in southeast corner studying surroundings from behind glasses.

Enter handsome man, curly hair, slightly gray, dark eyes, carries small aligator-skin traveling-bag marked with silver letters H. L. D., linen shawl case embroidered with same letters, lady's umbrella basket of rosebuds.

Following him: Pretty woman, dark-blue eyes, lots of dimples, carrying a book. Seats herself in a rocking-chair placed directly in front of elderly party in glasses.

Knight of the bag, shawl-strap, etc., places them on neighboring seat, and says:

"I'll go and telegraph that you missed the train; the next one goes presently, better wait for it here, it's snowing too fast to go out again."

Lady (thoughtfully)—"I might take a hansom up to B——'s. I left my watch there last week—still, I might be delayed and miss another. I can't think how I happen to blunder so. I am sure Edward said 2, and it wanted six minutes of it when I got out of the carriage. Find out how soon I can go please."

(Knight goes out. Voice of usher in the distance: "Frankford, Holmesburg, Bristol, and Trenton." Lady arranges her skirts, takes fan out of bag, glances casually at E. P., takes three or four roses from basket, fastens them on her dress, leans back and opens book. Knight returns.)

Knight—"The train will not be ready for an hour. You do not mind I hope (after a pause). How many years it is since we traveled together! I was thinking about it while I was waiting for you—

Lady (quickly)—"waiting for me?"

Knight—"I mean before you came. This station was not built then, and we used to have such dreadfully long horse-car rides from West Chester to West Philadelphia."

Lady—"you did not think them so dreadfully long then" (the speaker colors slightly and changes the subject). "I have half promised Ned and Alice to be with them on Christmas-Day in New York. They go there Monday."

Knight—"I think you said last night that you were coming back here from Trenton?"

Lady—"Yes, for little Dora Smyth's wedding, Thursday. Isn't it too funny to think that baby is old enough to be married?"

Knight—"Not when I recollect that my nephew Walter has a fine little shaver of his own, my first namesake."

Lady—"You don't say so! Why, I remember he was in knickerbockers when we—whom did he marry?"

Knight—"Grace Biddle, the fair-haired pretty one, they were married in Rome nearly three years ago; the boy is quite a fellow now, has a tooth or two and is supposed by his fond parents to say, 'Papa, time moves.'"

Lady—"Yes, indeed. Why, my boy is taller than I am, and Nellie——"

Knight—"Ah! What is this you're reading? I might have known! Well, what do you think of it? is it worth wasting time over?"

Lady—"You have read it Mr. Isaacs'?"

Knight—"Not I? I read 'Dr. Claudius' and——"

Lady (eagerly)—"Do tell me what is a Philistine?"

Knight—"Aren't you ashamed to betray such ignorance?"

Lady—"But what is it?"

Knight (solemnly)—"Have you never heard of Matthew Arnold?"

Lady (with assumed petulance)—"I will not be laughed at, Mr.——"

Knight (interrupting)—"Nonsense, Helen, I don't intend to call you 'Mrs.'—anything! When was it that Walter was in knickerbockers?"

Lady (coloring slightly, but smiling)—"O, when?—a hundred years ago, when we were young. I should so like to show you my boy and girl, they—"

Knight (interrupting again)—"Don't change the subject so, Helen, 'a hundred years.' What nonsense! Have you quite forgotten when we two parted?"

Lady (very demurely)—"I'm sure it wasn't 'in silence and tears.'"

Knight—"Well, no! not in silence, most assuredly. What a sharp little tongue you had, Helen!"

Lady (still demurely)—"So glad you use the past tense!"

Knight—"I don't believe you've improved one bit in all these eighteen years. It's incredible, Ellie. When I look at you I can hardly trust my own memory. It can't be more than eighteen years since we two hot headed young things, almost on the eve of our wedding-day, quarreled about nothing and made shipwreck of our lives."

Lady (spiritedly)—"Nothing of the kind. You've no right to say such a thing. I have had the happiest sort of a life. My children are perfect darlings; my husband was the very best man in the world; my only sorrow was——"

Knight—"His death! Exactly. I expected you to say so. Of course, you were sorry about it. You are a good woman, certainly. You mourned for him; but time is a wonderful healer, and you soon outlived your grief."

Lady (rising indignantly)—"You shall not speak to me in such a way; I won't listen to you."

Knight (calmly)—"Sit down, Ellie, I'll apologize; it wasn't soon, but you have outlived it. Why, child, it's the way of the world, one outlives everything. Ellie, how young you are, in spite of your—how many?—years. When you throw up your head in that old way I fancy myself back on your uncle's old porch in Chester; you were a very willful girl, Helen."

Lady (with hightened color)—"I am a very willful woman."

Knight (laughing)—"I haven't the slightest doubt of it, my dear; fortunately, I can manage willfulness—and you—better than I did in my callow days. Seriously, Helen, I have something to say to you; we didn't meet by accident. I was waiting for you, waiting to say it. Your train hadn't gone, I lied to you. Yes, I did; don't look angry listen and hear the old story. Ellie, answer the old question—I came to-day to ask it."

Lady (hurriedly, glancing about distractedly)—"O, hush, hush; do hush some one will surely, surely hear you?"

(During the last few sentences elderly party in glasses, torn by the conflicting emotions, feminine sense of honor always weak, feminine love of romance always strong, has alternately fidgeted to proclaim her presence and remained breathless to conceal it. At this appeal honor triumphs and she heroically and noisily drops her sun-umbrella, which Knight picks up and returns with a polite bow. Thus admitted to his confidence E. P. casts honor to the winds, and, leaning forward, shamelessly, anxiously, eagerly, sympathizingly listens!)

Knight (with perfect calm)—"Let any one hear, let the whole world hear, I told you honestly years ago, I repeat it as honestly to-day—I love you Helen; will you be my wife?"

Lady (blushing painfully)—"Tom, you don't know what you are saying; you can't mean it; you can't be serious; you haven't loved me all this time."

Knight (still calmly)—"No, my dear, I haven't."

Lady (indignantly)—"Then why do you want to marry me? You only saw me last evening. You hadn't a chance to fall in love with me if you forgot me the minute we parted."

Knight (laughing)—"O, the deliciousness of feminine logic! My darling girl, who said that I forgot you the minute we parted? I haven't gone about the world weeping for you all the time, but, believe me most truly, I have loved no other woman. After our foolish, silly little quarrel and our still more foolish parting, I was miserable."

Lady—"Why did you rush off to Europe?"

Knight—"Why didn't you stop me? One word would have been enough. It was foolish. If I had staid in New York we'd have 'kissed and made up' in a week."

Lady—"You must think I was very forgiving; it was all your fault, to begin with."

Knight—"Granted."

Lady—"Well, of course, I was silly and disagreeable, and obstinate. I'm so sorry, Tom; but you went away, and I thought you didn't care, and—"

Knight (dryly)—"And a good, stupid, rich old man came along and—you married him!"

Lady (with dignity)—"Our conversation had better stop. You quite forget you are speaking to a wife of her husband." (Takes up her book and begins to read. Knight studies the head of his cane moodily. A long pause.)

Knight—"I suppose you are right about it, I'll try not to offend again. When I look at you I forget—everything! Well, I went to Europe, and if I hadn't been afraid of your laughing at me I'd have come back on the same steamer."

Lady—"O! Tom, if you only had!"

Knight—"So I wrote you a letter."

Lady (excitedly)—"Tom! I never got it!"

Knight (composedly)—"I never sent it; the day it would have left father's letter came from New York, telling me of your new betrothal."

Lady—"You might have saved me."

Knight—"From marrying the best man in the world? What do you take me for? I had known your most excellent and respectable husband for many years. The same woman could not love him and me. If you intended to marry him without loving him, why, it was a poor lookout for him, but that did me no good."

Lady (pleadingly)—"Tom, I was so very miserable, and he was really very good to me and—you had left me, Tom."

Knight—"Helen, you said you never wanted to see my face again. Well I spent my miserable quarter of an hour, then I braced up, had a charming trip, went everywhere, saw everything, staid four years, came back—cured! Father's death had left me so rich as to be an idler for life. I am an 'eligible,' petted and made much of. I've gotten a good deal of pleasure out of life. I never quite forgot you, Helen, but I didn't grieve for you any more than I did for poor Jack. You remember Jack, Ellie?"

Lady (eagerly)—"and how you held me on his back, Tom."

Knight—"And how you screamed when he began to trot."

Lady—"But I hung on, that was the first time I ever saw you."

Knight (looking at her thoughtfully)—"You've changed since then; you wore your hair in a pigtail."

Lady—"Which you and Jim used to pull."

Knight—"You were badly freckled then. I never saw you looking prettier than you do to-day."

Lady (with a pleased little laugh)—"Absurd. In spite of my 'how many years?' and all."

Knight—"And all? Now, I suppose I should say that when I heard you had ceased to be 'forbidden fruit' all the old feelings came back. That was about eight years ago, wasn't it?"

Lady (with a visible but futile attempt to look sad)—"Yes, last February. What did you say?"

Knight—"You won't be angry again? I think I probably said 'Poor old duffer!' Well, he wasn't a chicken, or words to that effect."

Lady (disgustedly)—"Is that the way men talk of each other?"

Knight—"That, I regret to own, is very much the way in which men talk of each other at clubs."

Lady—"Then I wouldn't go so much to clubs."

Knight—"I shall not in future; I shall only go where I can take you."

Lady—(ignoring last remark)—"Were you glad when you heard?"

Knight—"No—not until last winter."

Lady—"Last winter!"

Knight—"You see, Helen, you were a widow with two children. I supposed, of course, you were old and faded."

Lady—(indignantly)—"Old! and faded!"

Knight (most abjectly)—"My dearest Ellie, I said supposed, ed; you did, not perhaps, notice the ed? If I had thought it possible you could still be so deliciously pretty—(lady blushes most charmingly)—I'd—why, I'd have flown to you!"

Lady—"And last winter?"

Knight—"I saw Jim the other day at the Philadelphia Club, and he happened to say, 'I met your old flame, Helen, Thanksgiving, when I was over in New York. She's as pretty as a picture and looks about the same age as her tall boy and girl.' Oddly enough, while that was fresh in my mind I came across a photograph of you in some old traps."

Lady—"Sitting by a window?"

Knight—"No, standing with your hands behind you and your head turned."

Lady—"O, yes, in a blue silk dress made with a peplum. I had quite forgotten it! I must look awfully old-fashioned. It was one of Sarony's before he was the rage."

Knight—"I stuck it in my glass and you looked at me so saucily while I shaved that I felt quite young and rather lonesome; there's not much in a man's life when he's over 40 and without a home. I thought it all out, and when Ned told me you were here I made up my mind to call and if you were—"

Lady—"Not too old and faded."

Knight—"Thanks; I dared not put it so plainly."

Lady—"And if you had found me gray-haired and wrinkled——"

Knight—"Gray hair is charming on a woman; wrinkles I do not like."

Lady—"If I had been unattractive in the eye no matter how good and sweet and clever and loving I might have been you'd have bowed yourself out. That is a man's honest, unvarnished idea of love!"

Knight—"Helen, be merciful. You women are born missionaries; the poorer, sicker, forlorner a man is, the more you coddle and love him; but I'm a man, and we are so made as to enjoy bright, healthy, happy surroundings. It would be hard to give you up now if you broke out all over with wrinkles, but last evening—"

Lady (pensively)—"Why do I sit here and listen?"

Knight—"Perhaps because your train isn't made up. (A slight pause.) I shall take you abroad in August."

Lady (sitting suddenly erect and gasping out word)—"In——"

Knight (very politely)—"August."

Lady (closing and opening her fan nervously)—"Tom, you must be crazy. You are joking. Why, the children—and you forgot——"

Knight—"Forgot the children, oh no, I don't; I only wish I could; but I suppose they are too real to be forgotten."

Lady—Why, Tom!"

Knight—"What?"

Lady—"Won't you love them?"

Knight—"Them?"

Lady (impatiently)—"Yes, them, them, the children, Fred and Nellie. If I should—I mean if we should—of course it's all nonsense."

Knight—"What's all nonsense?"

Lady—"Well, if we should, wouldn't you love the children?"

Knight (stolidly)—"No."

Lady (horrified)—"No?"

Knight—"Now look here, Helen, be reasonable about this. I'll agree to love you all the days of my life; but when you ask me to love a couple of children I have never seen—children that ought to have been mine and are not, children that will constantly remind me of the very unpleasant fact that you were for years the wife of another man—I positively refuse to make any such foolish promise. I'll tolerate them in our house when they must be out of that excellent place—school. I'm not a brute dear. Don't look so grieved if they are nice children.

Lady—"They are very nice."

Knight—"Very possibly in time I may, when I forget they are yours, grow fond of them. Now, sweet one, do something for me. Take off your gloves a minute."

Lady—"Here, in the station?"

Knight—"Here, in the station; quick, dear, its time for your train."

Lady (drawing off gloves slowly and baring two pretty, dimpled, white little hands, the right wearing a solitaire diamond ring; she looks wonderingly on the Knight)—"What in the world——"

Knight—"Now put that Koh-i-noon in your pocket for Nellie, and put this in its old place." (Takes from his waistcoat pocket a velvet ring-box, somewhat faded, which he lays in the lady's lap.)

Lady (whose eyes suddenly fill with tears, as she opens box and takes out a pearl and sapphire ring)—"My little ring; my dear, dear little ring! after all these years!"

Knight—"Put it on."

Lady—"Here, now? I can't, Tom. You must put it on as—as—you did before."

Knight (rising and standing so as to shield her from the rest of the room)—"No, Helen, dear, you ask too much, it is too late for that. From my heart I love you, and I believe I can make you happy, but I'm a world-worm man now, cynical, unbeleiving in most things. I beleive in you, my early, only love. I beleive you can give me the missed happiness, the lost content, but even you cannot make me young again! As I did then! I had wooed a fresh, inocent child, with boyish vows and protestations. I put on that ring with my first kiss, it was moonlight and romance, youth, and fairyland; you were not 18, I just 22. Perhaps this is better; we are wiser now. It is not likely we will again throw aside our happiness without a cause; but you are a widow of 36, I a club man of 40. The summer of our lives is past; there isn't any illusion left us. Past midday, and the sun streams in the windows; the world, the real world we have found, not created from our dreams, is all about us. Put the ring on, Helen, and trust me to keep unspoken vows. You shall never regret it."

Lady (very low and brokenly)—"I—I—"

Knight—"Have I been too confident, over bold, Ellie? Is the old love all dead? Helen, don't send me from you. I never needed you so much, never loved you so well. Say one word, dearest."

Lady—"Tom!"

Knight (as she slowly drops diamond ring in her lap)—"Put it on dear."

Lady—"Just let——"

Knight—"Put it on!" (Voice of usher in distance, "Frankford, Holmesburg, Bristol, and Trenton.") "Thanks; here's your train; telegraph me when to meet you." (Picks up bag, shawl-strap, umbrella, and basket of roses—lady following him with gloves and book. E. P. starts up impulsively, but thinks better of it and sinks back on her seat, beaming benignant and heartfelt congratulations from behind her glasses and they disappear from view.)

THE CZAR'S MERRY CAPITAL.

Frivolity and Immorality That it is the Government's Policy to Encourage.

New York Sun.

St. Petersburg.—This is a capital of the country known as the Holy Russia. It is in the stage of lesser siege. It is ruled by a ministry in which zealous church members decidedly preponderate. It is believed that under several of its streets there are mines charged with dynamite. Though being a capital, it rarely sees its august master. Now, one hardly would believe that under such circumstances this town could be a merry one, and yet that's what it is. Nay, it is not simply merry; it is madly merry, and for that it has the full sanction and encouragement of the government.

In the very center of this capital there are five great institutions for the public amusement which cannot be classified either with theatres, or hotels, or saloons, though they have some traits of each. Here is, for instance, the Orpheum, a magnificent house. Its entrance is brilliantly lighted. A gorgeous-liveried footman shows the public in. You enter an immense hall containing a stage. Next room is the buffet, and there are also a number of private rooms. The entrance fee is a rouble for a man and a half rouble for a woman. The assemblage at the Orpheum is mixed. There are Russian merchants, foreign clerks, young military and civil officers and women of doubtful reputation. Many of the men are jolly, and some are tipsy. Full freedom reigns. They talk, sing, exchange amorous compliments, quarrel, and even fight without any interference from the police. On the stage they perform invariably light operettas, consisting of immoral songs and cannon dancing. Between the acts audience and performers rush to the buffet, and vodka, beer, wine and sandwiches are attended to with perhaps a livlier interest than is evinced towards the play itself. The ballet dancers in their scanty dress particularly command the attention of the cavaliers. What conversations are conducted there, and what scenes take place! About two o'clock in the morning the amusement turns into mad Bacchanals. The proprietor of the Orpheum spends 100,000 roubles a year. Each month brings new ballet dancers, paying each from 100 to 600 roubles a month, and yet he makes money.

Here is another institution of the kind, the Golden Palace, occupying an old princely mansion. Its former aristocratic occupants never dreamed that servants, shop girls, and clerks would ever assemble there for indescribable orgies, wasting their hard earned money and lives. On the stage of the palace they give pieces in which mockery is made of the purest and most sacred things.

Here is also the Palace of Pleasure frequented by unmarried people. Of the pleasure offered, and indulged in here it is better not to say a word. Then there is the dancing room of Alexandroff. On the stage the ballet dancers perform such pieces as "A Wife to Hire," and on the floor the public, sometimes as many as a hundred pairs at a time, engage in the most outrageous dances. When between the acts the performers and the public mix up, one hardly can tell who belongs to the stage and who to the audience, to such an extent do the ballet costumes and manners predominate. Here, too, vodka, beer, wine, and obscene conversation freely flows.

Thus tens of thousands of the poorer people of the czar's capital pass all their evenings and nights. Besides the places I have mentioned, there are scores of others which infect the outskirts of this city. In all of them the public are allowed to stay through the night. It is known here that the government favors this kind of institutions. It is the men and women of the type Brutus that the imperial ministers fear, hate and persecute; they fear nothing of the jolly men and frivolous women who frequent Orpheums, Golden Palaces, Palaces of Pleasure, dancing rooms and other places of the kind. And this state of things exist throughout Russia in all towns and villages. It is a kind of internal policy of the present ministry. What a delusion! As if ever a government could be strenghtened by systematic immortality.

If we look up from below we find things only apparently cleaner. On the stage of imperial thatres great dramas and noble operas are replaced by operetts and light pieces of French make. In the fashionable clubs and hotels the aristocratic and rich public pass their evenings in dancing, drinking wine, and card playing. Well, by using up the cards they increase the funds of charitable and educational institutions under her Majesty's protection. It is an imperial privilege to make and sell cards here.

A Kansas City man had suffered 30 years from a loss of memory. His friends had spent hundreds of dollars for its restitution. Not long ago he was taken to a new physician and his case explained. After careful thought the new doctor said: "Try a minstrel show." It was a bright thought. They took the sufferer to the next minstrel show that came along. The end man's first gag acted like magic. The poor man gave a start, clasped his hands to his head and gasped; "Merciful heavens, where am I? That voice! Those jokes! Ah I remember. Thirty years ago I was a boy!" Saved! saved! saved! sobbed his family.

An Arkansas literary society recently discussed the question, "Resolved, That a circus is superior to a district school as a civilizing agent." The circus packed the convention from the start. Only one orator got up to speak for the district school. He was a teacher, and the president fined him twice and then made him sit down.

No further violence has occurred at Angus, Iowa. The owners of the mines have again offered the advance of 3¾ cents, and the strikers have called a meeting to either accept or reject these terms. They will no doubt accept and go to work the 15th. The Lincoln guards of Boone returned home.

Personal Paragraphs.

Judge Poland, the venerable Vermont statesman, has discarded the light-brown suit which made such a stir in the House the first time he wore it, last session, and gone back to the spike-tailed blue coat, ornamented with brass buttons, that he has worn ever since the time of the Wilmot Proviso.

John Vivian, a miner near Nevada City, said to one of his companions: "I had a dream last night that makes me feel very uncomfortable. I dreamed that an accident happened in the mine to me and I was killed. The whole thing seemed so real that it left a strong impression on my mind. I wish I could forget it this morning, but I can't." Vivian was suddenly killed at 4 o'clock that same afternoon.

A distinguished ex-confederate officer now a resident of Washington, used to drink a great deal in his wild and gilded youth. He reformed, and is no a sober business man. He married the other day a prominent society lady, who is a devoted Roman Catholic. The groom in speaking of his marriage said to one of his club friends: "I have tried Rum and Rebellion. I am now going in for Romanism.

Mlle. Marie Colombier, the authoress of the infamous "Memoirs of Sarah Barnum," having been condemned to a term of imprisonment which influence and protection have reduced to fifteen days, is now purging her imprisonment, not in a dungeon or a penitentiary or a house of detention, but in a hydropathic establishment at Passy, where her predecessor not long ago was Plon-Plon.

A beautiful and most sensible memorial of the late Emma Stebbins, the biographer of Charlotte Cushman, has just been erected at Lenox, Mass. It is described as "a bowl of gray granite four feet six inches square, supported on a base of unhewn Scotch red granite. The four sides of the bowl have polished tablets bearing inscriptions, and on one side at the base is a small basin with the head of a dog carved in high relief. Above it a horse's head in relief also adorns one side of the large bowl." Emma Stebbins passed the last summers of her life at her home in Lenox, and this tribute to her memory was suggested to the three friends who erected it by her marked fondness for animals.

Dr. Schliemann's house at Athens is said to be the most costly house in the city, though he calls it a cottage. It is an imposing square mansion, of the best Pentelic marble, crowned with marble statues of the whole Olympic host, in groups of two or three. The front has a deep portico, set to each story, while the plain moulding between the two stories contains in large Greek letters, the inscription, "Ilion Marathon." The interior consists of lofty, spacious rooms, with marble floors and ceilings frescoed richly with illustrations from Grecian mythology. Part of the collection of antiquities dug up at Troy is within this marble "cottage," the remainder being in Germany.

Robert Stevenson left no family behind. His wife died many years ago, and he remained a widower, so that the direct line from George Stephenson, the eminent engineer, has died out. James Watt, the noted inventor, left no descendents. It appears that the men noted for mechanical genius, like many of those famous in literature, science and government, leave no children to perpetuate their names. Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Newton, Harvey, Pope, Mansfield, Pitt, Fox, Grey, Cowper, Collins, Thompson, Goldsmith, Congreve, Hume, Bishop, Butler, Locke, Hobbs, Adam Smith, Bentham, Davy, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Byron, Lord Clyde and others well known to fame have no representatives now living.

How The Coachman Won Her.

Notwithstanding the fact that volumes have been written and published about the famous Morosini elopement case and several explanations made as to how the lady became infatuated with her father's coachman, the real facts were never brought to light until they were obtained by a reporter here from Mrs. Schelling herself. The story is a remarkable one. Mrs. Schelling, in reply to questions on the subject, said:

From chilhood up it has been my pleasure to roam at will through the forest which surrounded my home. Riding, too, was a great enjoyment to me, not because Ernest drove, for then I had no interest in him. One day I went to ride on the road that winds along the banks of the beautiful Hudson river. From one point on that road the ruins of an old stone mansion are visible. It stands on the top of a hill at a considerable distance from the road to the right. I had often wished to go nearer to its moss grown walls, but had always been deterred by some member of the family being with me, or else the sign marked "Dangerous" which was nailed to a tree in front of it. But this day I was alone and determined. Ernest drove, and notwithstanding his entreaty, I sprang out of the carriage and was soon peering into the great entrance of the old ruin. Arming myself with a stick I pushed aside the vines and creepers that overhung the open door, and stood within the great hallway, which was filled with poisonous undergrowth. The interior presented such a wild and gloomy aspect that I was almost upon the point of running away. Had I done so, Victoria Morosini would never have married Ernest Schelling. Being that day imbibed with a spirit of adventure, I mounted to the top of a flight of stone steps. There I found a narrow hallway leading into a large room at the back. I started to traverse that hall, but on taking three or four steps forward, there was a crash. I felt myself falling—falling—and then I became unconscious. When I regained my senses some days later, I was lying in bed at my father's house, surrounded by anxious friends and relatives, and Ernest, (who had rescued me, crushed and bleeding from beneath the wrecked floor) stood over me with a white face. They were awaiting the doctor's decision as to my chances for life. I had lingered for days, wasting slowly. "She has suffered great loss of blood, and I predict her death within an hour, unless one chance alone, remains for her; it is blood transfusion." All this I heard him say without being able to open my eyelids or speak a word. Then there was another pause. Not one of them moved. Then Earnest Schilling stepped forward, and without a moment's hesitation he bared his strong right arm and said, calmly, yet, oh, so determinedly: "Take from my veins the last drop of blood if it will save her life." The blood was transfused from Ernest's arm to mine. He saved my life, for I grew strong almost immediately. Then there arose an intuitive attachment between us. How could I resist loving the man to whom I owed my life and who pleaded for that love—the being whose life-blood courses in my veins, warming me back to life? It was a great debt I owed him, and one which I cheerfully paid—if, indeed, the poor recompense of my willing hand could pay it. He says it has. Our vows at least are indissoluble. It is a bond of love between us that is fixed, unaltered, unalterable. Had I a thousand years to live I'd live it with him. And now you know why Victoria Morosini wedded with Ernest Schelling.

Poverty of the Presidents.

If you will look back over the list you will see from the beginning most of our Presidents have been poor men. George Washington was, perhaps the wealthiest of them and Rutherford B. Hayes will perhaps rank next. John Adams, at the age of 66, after twenty-six years of continuous public service, retired to his little estate at Quincy, Mass., with barely enough property to give him the needs of life on a farm. Thomas Jefferson had to borrow something less than $10,000 of a Richmond bank to pay his debts before he left the White House, and the history of the last seventeen years of his life is one of almost continuous financial embarrassment. President Madison left some property at the time of his death, but his widow, the peerless Dolly, was for a time dependant on the bread and meat furnished her by an old negro servant, and her last days were made easy only by Congress buying of her for $30,000 the manuscript notes of the debates of the Constitutional Convention which Madison had taken. President Monroe, though he declined, it is said, $358,000 from the government for his public services, died very poor in New York. John Quincy Adams must have received over half a million dollars in government salaries, and he is one of the few Presidents who again took up life after he left the White House. He remained in retirement only about a year, and then entered the Lower House of Congress. After about sixteen years of service there he died in the Capital in 1848, exclaiming, "This is the end of earth, I am content." Andrew Jackson gained nothing in wealth from his White House salary. It cost him, he says, every cent of it to pay his expenses, and the most of the proceeds of his cotton crop in addition. He returned from Washington at the close of his second term with just $90 in his pocket, to find his farm going to ruin, and himself so deeply in debt that he had to sell part of his land to get out. Van Buren was a close, cautious, money-making fellow. He got good law fees and began to learn economy while saving enough as a young man to get married. At his estate at Lindenwald, where he lived during his last years, he was surrounded with comforts. President Harrison owned a farm in Ohio when he was inaugurated. President. It is safe to say he was poor, for he had been lately doing the drudgery of a clerk of the courts at Cincinnati. President Tyler supplied much of the money which ran the White House out of his own pocket, and congress would not pay the salary of his private secretary. Moderately wealthy while here at Washington, he left little to his children, and one of his sons is now a clerk in the treasury department in Washington. Zach Taylor was by no means wealthy when he died in the White House. James K. Polk left a big house and enough to keep his widow, and Millard Fillmore, who started life as a wool carder, died ten years ago with enough of an estate to create a lawsuit over the sanity of his second wife. James Buchanan did not leave such an estate as enabled Harriet Lane to keep Wheatlands, and within the past year it has been advertised for sale. Buchanan spent all his salary as president at Washington, and what he had left after paying his White House expenses he gave in charity. Abraham Lincoln died poor, and it was due to congress that his family was provided for. Andrew Johnson went back to his house at Greenville, Tenn., where he had started life as a tailor. He died with a stroke of paralysis, and left no fortune behind. Of the other Presidents Grant's necessities are agitating the country to-day, and Garfield's family is wealthy only through the voluntary subscriptions of the people. Truly, as Sidney Smith used to say, "There is nothing so expensive as glory."—"Carp," in the Cleveland Leader.

A Heroic Son.

Capt. Edward Rice, of the schooner J. A. Griffin, Philadelphia, tells a thrilling story of heroism at sea. Capt. Rice says: "When our vessel was a little south of Henlopen it was struck by a terrific storm, during which I was knocked overboard. I sank into the sea thinking that my last hour had come, and I gave up all hope. Those of the crew who could see the accident were horrified. Without a moment's hesitation my son, fastening a rope to the taffrail, jumped overboard with the coil in his hand. I was just aft of the ship, rising from my first sinking. He swam out to me, though how he buffeted those waves in that cold water God only knows. A moment later he had me in his grip, and with a power that was almost superhuman, kept himself afloat while he passed the rope around my waist. Then catching the rope himself and hauling me up, for I was helpless, he signaled the crew to draw us in. They got us alongside and we were saved. I was pulled up first, more dead than alive, and my son was then hauled up. My boy is only 21 years old."—New York World.

Iowa State Temperance Convention.

Des Moines, Iowa, Special Telegram Jan. 22.—The session of the state temperance convention recently was attended by about four hundred delegates; and though its deliberations were marked by great earnestness, the debates more abounded with charity than did those of one and two years ago. Senator Clark of Clarinda presided.

He said he had no apologies to make for anything he did for temperance. It demanded little talk and much work. "This convention is called to see what is to be done. We have, after a desperate conflict, made prohibition a law, and now the question is which is the biggest, a few thousand saloonkeeping conspirators or the grand millions of Iowa people?" He had no patience with this talk about the enforcement or repeal, nor with the spirit that only Prohibitionists are responsible for the enforcement of the law. It is the duty of the minority, as well as the majority, to enforce the law, and any other course is resistance to duly constituted government. He declared that prohibition can, will and must be enforced, as it is already in his own county (Page) and many others. The trouble is that there is a conspiracy, especially in large cities, to make the law odious and secure its repeal. For his part, he would rather see liquor illicitly sold than under protection of the law. Has it had a chance to be enforced? [Cries of "No, no"] No, it has not had a chance. The litigation has not been settled, and the fulfillment of the wishes of the people has been delayed. He did not care what the parties of Iowa did in regard to it. He wanted the people to take it up and enforce it, and go on the principle of "Lay on, Macduff," until breakers of the law were in jails and penitentiaries and the evil itself became a stench in the nostrils of the people. He wanted to take the devil of party politics out of the struggle. These delegates want to go home and set the state on fire, for the enforcement of the law, like a heap of pig iron, is very quiet, but its possibilities are alike great. It must be tried as by fire. Keep the saloonkeepers hiring lawyers. They have to pay them, but there are a thousand lawyers willing to work on the temperance side for nothing. Prohibition has not had a fair trial. Try prohibition as long and it will gloriously succeed.

The other usual officers and committees were designated.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

After dinner the committee on resolutions reported to the effect that:

The manufacture and sale of liquors is in itself a crime, and that the license system has filled the land with pauperism and crime. The verdict of the people of Iowa has been four times given for prohibition; and standing on the conscientious convictions of the convention of the right and duty of prohibition, and strengthened by these repeated declarations of the people, and regarding this question as of paramount importance, the convention will stand by the present law of the state and secure a thorough enforcement by all the proper means which it can command; that it will claim at the hands of the next general assembly such amendments as will cure any defects or inefficiency that may be discovered, and make it more easily and universally enforced for the future. Every decent element should arraign itself against the saloon. The sixth resolution reads that "in our social and political action on this subject we will take no backward step; nor will we be turned aside by any temporary expediency, and we shall expect of any organization of any kind that looks to prohibitionists for support, that there be no retreat or equivocation in supporting the law."

The main discussion arose on the last amendment. Senator Sutton said it might be interpreted as a threat to the republican party; but he believed such was not the intent of the committee. He stood pledged to work in the next Republican state convention against any backward step on this issue. Mr. Soverign said that as a Greenbacker he considered the resolution not a menace to anybody. Judge Nourse for the committee said that when Admiral Nelson delivered his precept, "England expects every man to do his duty," he insulted no British sailor or soldier. The resolutions then passed without dissent, and a liberal dropping of dollars into the hat followed. In the evening Francis Murphy addressed the convention.

Wonders of Naval Architecture.

It was thought by naval architects that the limit of naval strength has been reached in the construction of the Italian monster ironclads Duilio and Dandolo launched within a few years. But the Italia and Lepanto, the most recent additions, are heavier yet, both in armor and ordnance, and might be considered the most powerful fighting ships in the world. The last two carry four guns, each weighing 100 tons, and capable of throwing shells of 2,018 weight. Now the British Government will lay down one first-class ironclad, which will be armed with two guns only, but these will be of 110 tons weight, and will need over 600 pounds of powder to load, and will throw a Palliser steel shell of 2,500 pounds. The armor of this vessel will be only eighteen inches of steel on a similar thickness of wood, showing that no attemps will be made to imitate the Italian method of thick armor. The most powerful ship in the British navy—the Inflexible, considered a match for either of the Italian monsters—has twenty-four inches of solid iron incasing her citadel, and twenty-four inches of solid teak backwhile her eighty-ton Armstrong gun throws a shot which has penetrated her own armor plates to a depth of thirty-one inches. The British generally believe her to be the equal, if not the superior, of any ship afloat.—Boston Globe.

Prof. J. W. Sanborn, Secretary of the Missouri State Board of Agriculture, in his November report, says the average of corn crops for the State is 35.7 bushels, or an aggregate of 209,867,594 bushels—the largest crop ever known in Missouri. Yield of castor beans, 10 bushels; tobacco, 1,030 pounds; hemp, 967 pounds; broom corn, 1,063 pounds; barley, 32.2 bushels, and potatoes 108 bushels per acre. He reports a growing disposition to give more attention to grass and stock and to grow less grain. He says the creameries, though not managed as they should be, are meeting with success, and thinks that as the managers get more knowledge of the business and give them better care, they will become very popular. The average number of cows to each creamery at present is 308.

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

An English Blue Book shows that Gen. Wolseley, commanding the English army in Egypt, has received $465,000 from the English Government in reward for his military services. The bounty given him for the victory of Tel El Kebir was $150,000; for his Ashantee victories, $125,000, and for his Indian services, $190,000.

General Grant has recently repaid a loan of $1,000 made to him last May, when the firm of Grant & Ward failed, by a man in Lansingburgh, N. Y. The use of the money was voluntarily offered for one year without interest, and in returning it General Grant expresses his thanks and explains that he had been able to earn the sum himself within the time specified. No doubt the latter fact gave the General especial satisfaction, and the entire transaction reflects credit upon the persons concerned.

Major Stemberg of the United States army, an expert in the matter of disinfectants for contagious diseases, made several tests in Brooklyn recently, by which he determinnd that steam is a better disinfectant of cholera and small-pox germs than sulphuric acid is. Bales of rags were infected with the germs and were treated, some with the fumes of the acid and others with steam. Afterward rabits were inoculated with the germs, and only the animals inoculated with those treated by steam escaped death.

The Nestor of the New York Bar is Mr. David Dudley Field. On the 13th inst. he completed his 80th year, and is a remarkable example of physical vigor in old age. His step is as firm, his carriage as upright and his endurance as great as most men's are at forty. The secret of his preservation is worth knowing, and Mr. Field attributes it to regular exercise, and especially to horse back riding and daily cold baths. He takes a glass of claret at dinner, but discards all other liquors. He never used tobacco in any form.

Clergymen who eke out a bare living from salary and wedding fees combined, the latter not amounting to much, may be surprised to learn that there are several ministers in New York and Philadelphia who received $5,000 for wedding fees alone during the year 1884, and a larger number of ministers received $2,500. Cases are not unfrequent where from $500 to $1,000 were paid by rich parishioners. In a large majority of cases, however, the nuptial fees were ridiculously small, taking into account the lavish expenditure on such occasions for other matters not so essential as the work of the clergyman.

The greatest enterprise yet exhibited by the English military authorities is the determination to reinforce its army in the Soudan by way of the Red Sea. The distance from Suakin, on the Red Sea, to Berber on the Nile, is only one-fourth or less the distance from Cairo by way of the Nile. But without railroad transportation it would be impossible. To lay a railroad as fast as an army can march and so keep it constantly supplied, will, if successful be a fine piece of engineering construction. Nothing like it has been done since the Union Pacific Railroad was pushed forward so rapidly across the American desert. To build it in the two months proposed will require the construction of five or six miles a day.

The London (Can.) Standard in trying to make out that the Manitoba climate had entered a go-as-you-please race with the North Pole, said that the thermometer had registered fifty degrees below Winnepeg. Whereupon the Free Press of that city, with a self-respect and courage worthy of its name, says that this attack upon the climate of the Northwest is utterly outrageous; that on the very day when the Standard said the thermometer was fifty degrees below, it was by the most trustworthy thermometer only forty-six degrees below. There is a difference to be sure, but it does not amount to much when the mercury gets below zero, and then thermometers are very apt to vary, as everybody knows. The signal service observers never have it as cold or as hot as outside instruments and observers.

A law was a year or two ago enacted in Michigan which other States might well adopt for putting a stop to the disgraceful and ever increasing contests that go on in our courts over the wills of deceased rich men. Under it a testator who wishes to put his will beyond dispute, after making the same, informs all the legatees that he has done so. It is not necessary that they should know what they are to get or who the others are, simply that they are down in writing. Then if they have any doubt as to the sanity of their benefactor they can have it decided by a jury in a court of law while the man is alive. His immediate relatives are also informed that a will has been made, and they can enjoy the same privilege of testing his sanity. If any of them fail to do so and the man dies all further dispute over the will is precluded and the same is admitted to probate without question.

It is said that the national editions of the works of Victor Hugo, announced by [illegible] of Paris, will cost 2,500,000f., the illustrations alone coming in for about 1,600,000f. There will be 40 small quarto volumes, containing about 1,250 etchings and 2,500 copper plate vignettes.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

SENATE—Not in session.

HOUSE—Bills were introduced fixing the salary of judges of probate; to provide for the incorporation of subordinate lodges K. and P.; relating to the service fees of domestic animals. The day was spent in committee on the whole, and a number of important bills acted upon favorably. The bill limiting service of county commissioners was indefinitely postponed.

The general orders, consisting of sixty-three bills, was cleared. Among the important bills favorably acted upon were the Lienan bill for the establishment of a high school, Mr. Spaulding's bill prohibiting the sale of spurious dairy products unless they be duly labeled so as to indicate their true character, the amended Foster bill, regulating the transfer of cases by foreign corporations from the local to the federal courts, declaring dogs personal property, the amended Brill divorce bill; Senator Castle's bill reducing the interest on sales of public lands from 7 to 5 per cent, the bills introduced by the senate judiciary committee relating to the duties of guardians, to offenses on railroad cars, and providing for the organization of religious corporations.

Difficulty was experienced in heating the hall of the house, and a number of members resorted to their overcoats to keep warm. A motion to adjourn was made on account of the insufficient warmth of the room, and finally the house adjourned over one day to allow of preparations for the legislative reception.

SENATE—Bills were introduced appropriating $44,000 for new buildings for the deaf, dumb and blind; amending the laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes. The senate spent several hours discussing the railroad bill, and finally all amendments were referred to the railroad committee. Adjourned until 10 a. m.

The bill will be printed, and by agreement goes before the senate committee of the whole without further reference to a committee. It is regarded as highly probable that the senate will pass the bill without material changes. What the house will do it is yet too early for any fellow to find out.

SENATE—Bills were introduced to provide for arbitration in case of strikes; making appropriations for state institutions for two years; to allow the Duluth & Winnipeg road to change its line; authorizing county commissioners to appropriate money for county agricultural societies. Senate bills were passed: Providing for a state census; making trespass on pine lands a felony; amending the military code. In the afternoon the railroad committee introduced a substitute entitled "An act for the regulation of railroad companies;" the finance committee introduced a bill for general appropriations for the two years ensuing from July 31, 1886.

HOUSE—Bills were introduced: Requiring railroads to build guards at all wagon crossings; to provide for the incorporation of assessment life endowment and insurance associations; appropriating $35,000 per annum for two years' maintenance of state reform school; increasing appropriation to aid county agricultural societies from $6,000 to $20,000; relating to property of insolvent debtors; amending statutes relating to prosecutions before justices of the peace; for the appointment of a state entomologist at a salary of $1,000; appropriating $20,000 for new building and improvements at the state reform school; providing for an inventory of property at the state institutions; requiring registers of deeds to number documents in the order of filing; to amend statutes relating to the taxation of building associations. Senate bills were passed: Appropriating $4,000 for furnishing the state capitol; fixing the salary of the recording clerk of the secretary of state at $1,000; amending statutes relating to salary of county treasurers; amending statutes relating to term of county commissioners; reducing the rate of interest on the sale of public lands from 7 to 5 per cent.

The bill proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purpose of improving the property given to the state by Ramsey county for state fair ground purposes came up in the house yesterday in the regular course, elicited a good deal of discussion, but finally it was recommended to pass. During the debate it was stated that the expenses of the state for its ordinary expenditures for the next two years would be as follows: For standing appropriations 1886, $182,000; 1887, $182,000; for support of state institutions, 1886, $458,260; 1887, $496,360; general expenses of the state, 1886, $102,925; $111,425, and interest on bonds, $100,000, for each year, a total for 1886 of $843,185, and for 1887, $880,785. The resources of the state for 1886 would be from state taxes, $386,000; from insurance companies, 67,000; from sundry sources, $20,500; from railroad company taxes, $645,000, and from taxes on telegraph companies, $6,000, a total of $1,130,500. An overdraft of $200,000 and $50,000 due the school text book fund would reduce the total to $880,500, leaving a balance of $30,315. The items of resource for 1887 would amount to $1,157,500, leaving a balance on that year of $267,715. To make this appropriation and others would necessitate the increase of the rate of tax levy to one and one-half mills.

SENATE—The senate in committee of the whole recommended its own railroad bill recently introduced for passage, after several hours' debate. No important amendments were made in the bill as drafted, and only one significant vote was taken. Senators Hickman and Steenerson were active in the attempt to graft upon the bill some of the provisions of the house bill, and the former secured a vote upon the proposed amendment to section 20, prohibiting discrimination. The amendment was defeated—14 to 25. This is a fair measure of the stength of the senate bill and the house bill, respectively, in the senate.

The senate considered the bill presented by the special health committee to "prevent deception in dairy products," an almost exact copy of the New York law and similar to a bill on the same subject in the state. An effort to increase the salary of the dairy commissioner from $1,500 to $1,800 per annum was lost. The bill was recommended to pass, with only two dissenting voices.

One of the longest arguments in the Senate was upon consideration in committee of the whole of the bill concerning chattel mortgages, introduced by the judiciary committee. The main discussion was over the vexed question of chattel mortgages on grain. The bill provides that if the innocent purchaser shall use reasonable diligence in discovering whether the wheat is mortgaged or not, the filing of the mortgage with the register of deeds shall not be deemed legal notice of such mortgage. The bill provides for recovery of damages equal to twice the amount of the value of the grain from the mortgagor who has sold it fraudulently, and also provides for the fine and imprisonment of the latter if he misrepresents facts as to levies on the grain. Senator Crosby succeeded in having the bill amended so that the fees to registers of deeds for recording chattel mortgages shall be 10 instead of 20 cents. Senator Van Hoesen's amendment making the bill take effect May 1, 1885, was agreed to and the bill recommended to pass as amended.

HOUSE—The house got down to business Thursday and had three sessions, passing, during the day, fully fifty bills, clearing the calendar of all but sixteen bills. There remain on the calendar, beside these, about twenty senate bills, with about thirty bills on general orders for consideration in committee of the whole. The monotonous calling of the roll was of little interest to the public. Among the bills passed were the following: Fixing the time of holding terms of court in the Seventh judicial district.—To prevent the catching of fish in Lake Minnetonka, except during the summer season.—Appropriating money to meet a deficiency in the conduct of the state board of corrections and charities.—Amending statutes fixing the term of office of county commissioners.—For the appointment of a commission for a revision of the names of the lakes in the state.—Amending statutes extending the term of notaries public.—For the election of a second judge in the Twelfth judicial district.—To regulate garnishee proceedings in justices' court.—[illegible]—Amending the road law requiring a survey being made, and an accurate description being filed with the town clerk.—Amending the statutes relating to the publication of annual insurance statements.—Requiring insurance companies to pay the full amount of their policies in case of total loss.—To authorize all fire insurance companies to insure against hail, cyclone and hurricane [illegible]—Amending general laws relating to draining and reclaiming lands.—To authorize the formation of mutual insurance companies for protection against loss by hail, hurricane and cyclone.—Amending statutes relating to railroad crossings.

SENATE—Bills were introduced providing for general deficiency by appropriating $85,778; to provide for the disposition of estates of insane persons; allowing railroad companies to relocate lines of road. House bills were passed appropriating $1,500 for text books and school apparatus for Spring Valley, Fillmore county. A number of local bills were passed under suspension of the rules.

The bill making the minimum liquor license throughout the state $500 was reached in committee of the whole. An effort to have its consideration laid over was lost by a vote of 9 to 11, Senator Houlton insisting that he wanted a conclusion reached, and not last year's experience—when one high licence bill passed the house and one the senate, but both too late, to have a substitute agreed upon—repeated, as it was likely to be if further postponement was made. Many amendments were voted down and the bill was recommended by a small majority to pass. Senator Pillsbury presented a petition from a large number of signers asking that women may be given the suffrage so far as presidential electors and county superintendents of schools are concerned, and that the laws may be so amended that wives can list personal property separate from that of their husbands. Bills were introduced as follows:

The senate refused to concur in the house amendment to the bill reducing the rate of interest on sales of public lands from 7 to 5 per cent.

Senator Billson has introduced a joint resolution calling upon Minnesota members of congress to further the following matters relating to the Indians: First, appropriating the unpaid sum for session of lands to the purchase of stock, farming implements and tools for Indian manual labor schools; second, to set apart a portion of the proceeds of the sale of Indian lands to create a permanent education fund; third, giving of lands in severalty and providing for citizenship for Indian youths who have graduated from schools; fourth, granting all Indians legal personality and protection as to other races; fifth, rewarding their civilized industries; sixth, increasing the salaries of Indian agents.

HOUSE—The grain bill was slightly amended and reported favorably for passage. Bills were introduced: For an inspection of gas meters; to provide for notice of expiration of time of redemption; to determine the heirship of real estate; to legalize certain instruments; making it possible to place liens on ties for labor; for the relocation of the line of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad; raising the price per description for publishing the tax list to 20 cents; increasing the number of school boards to seven. Bills were passed: Giving women the right to vote for county superintendents of schools; for the protection of dairymen; giving a lien on horses for their care; the amendments to the divorce law; giving a check on county treasurers; in relation to the place of trial of civil actions; in relation to bonds in probate courts; relating to offenses against property; appropriating $100,000 for the state fair ground buildings.

Just before taking the recess at the close of the afternoon session in the house, the bill to appropriate $100,000 for the improvement of fair grounds was reached. After a long debate. The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were yeas 67 and nays 22.

SENATE—The senate railroad bill passed by a vote of 39 to 2, and the high license bill was recommended to pass by 23 to 14. Bills were introduced for inspection of gas meters; regulating boomage on logs below the Falls of St. Anthony. Senate bills passed, appropriating money for insurance on state buildings; to secure civil rights to colored citizens; consolidating and amending the acts relating to chattel mortgages; to prevent deception in dairy products; to prevent pollution of sources of water supply; for amendment to constitution as to investment of permanent school fund.

The nays on the railroad bill were Hall, Hickman.

Absentees—Ackerman, J. B. Gilfillan, Shaleen, Buckman, Crosby, Vollmar.

The nays on the $500 license bill were Christiansen, Doran, Fletcher, Gilfillan, C. D., Goodrich, Griggs, Langdon, Morrison, Peck, Peterson, Rice, Sackett, Waite, Welch.

Absentees—Ackerman, Buckman, Castle, Crosby, J. B. Gilfillan, O'Brien, Shaleen, Steenerson, Vollmar and Wheat.

The bill to regulate the practice of dentistry, prepared by the state dental association as a protection for the profession against quacks, was recommended to pass the senate committee of the whole.

Senator C. D. Gilfillan's bill to secure civil rights to negroes, (already discussed at length) passed the senate. Of the eleven democrats in the house, Griggs and Welch were alone in voting aye. Rice, Steenerson and Peterson, republicans, voted against the bill.

HOUSE—Bills were indefinitely postponed, amending tax laws; for a state entomologist; for a correct system of surveys; for a third hospital for the insane; for the assessment and taxation of omitted property; relating to chattel mortgages; to incorporate Martin Luther college; relating to tolls that may be taken by custom mills. Bills were introduced: For a fourth judge in the Minneapolis district; amending statutes relating to official trusts; making it a misdemeanor to permit wild mustard to go to seed; for the taxation of policies of insurance companies not authorized to do business in this state; to provide for the destruction of burdock; to legalize defective organizations of corporations, relating to inmates of the deaf, dumb and blind institute; amending game laws.

The house has had 605 bills thus far introduced in that branch. This is more than a hundred in excess of the number at any previous session. The senate has 497 bills introduced, making a total of 1,102.

St. Paul Honors the Legislators.

The reception tendered to the members of the legislature by the common council of St. Paul, at the state house last evening, was a brilliant success in point of attendance—more of a success than was anticipated, unless the committee of arrangements overestimated the capacity of the state house to accommodate the large number who were invited to participate. Something over three thousand invitations were extended, and a moderate estimate places the attendance at fully 4,000 people. The number was estimated even as high as 5,000, and some of the number who were caught in the crush at one place or another are prepared to believe that the number was even greater.

The company was as democratic as it was large, and all classes jostled each other in the crowd which was found everywhere—in the corridors, the halls, in the galleries, in the sacred precincts of the supreme court room, the committee room, and the galleries, from which undiminishing crowds watched with interest and more or less amusement the throng of dancers.

Despite the discomforts attendant upon the presence of so large a number there was evident enjoyment of the whole affair. Those who did not dance enjoyed seeing those who did, and not the least of the interesting features of the evening was the study of the vast company, and its very varied and differing elements.

A new discovery in the balloon business has been made by a German engineer, which puts the vertical action under much better control. It is an application of carbonic acid, by which the gas in the balloon can be expanded or compressed at pleasure, and hence the balloon raised or lowered to within the right currents. Military folks think that with this it may be possible to go into an enemy's country drop down, and then up and back again.

The Russian stove is made of fire-resisting procelain, is always ornamental, and frequently a highly artistic, handsome article of furniture. Internally it is divided by thick fireclay walls into several upright chambers of flues, usually six in number. Some dry firewood is lighted in a suitable fireplace, and is supplied with only sufficient air to affect combustion, all of which enters below and passes through the flue. The productions of combustion being thus undiluted with unnecessary cold air, are very highly heated, and in this state pass up and down through the different compartments. At the end of this long journey they have given up most of their heat to the 24 heat-absorbing surfaces of the fireclay walls. Then all communication with the chimney is cut off, the fire is put out, having done its work, and the interior of the stove has bottled up its caloric ready for emission into the room, and passing through the non-conducting walls of the stove is radiated into the apartments [illegible]

Miscellaneous Matters.

Key West, Fla., which has a population of 15,000, is one of the most peculiar cities in the world. The town it is said, has no chimneys, no show windows, no brick blocks, no fine buildings no planing mills, no steam mills, no machine shops, no farmers driving in with loaded teams, no country roads, no railroads, no rattle of machinery, no noise of any kind except the beating of the waves against the coral bound shores, and yet, for its size, does a very large manufacturing and shipping business.

A spool of silk twist found in the mill pond at Florence village, Northampton, a few weeks ago, is believed to be a relic of the mill river flood of 1874. The wood of the spool was so decayed as to be a mere pulp, but the silk is strong, elastic, and of good color, and has a tensile strength of ten pounds. The method of dying the silk is supposed to account for its durability.

There is likely to be the greatest crowd in Washington at the coming inauguration ever assembled on a like occasion. The Chairman of the Committee of arrangements says: "I have rented sixteen halls, and will rent more if I can get them." He has contracted for 3,000 cots and 2,000 mattresses, and his charges for lodging well be from $1,25 to $2 per night, each lodger to furnish his own hairbrush comb and toothbrush. He already reports 700 cots engaged.

It is claimed that England and France can make a better grade of fine papers than this country on account of the quality of the water, which is here injured for paper making by frequent changes in the temperature. Acting upon this idea, experiments are about to be made in Florida, where the temperature is more equable. If successful, it is said a large mill, especially for the manufacture of finer grades of stock, will be built there by Massachusetts capitalists.

Professor Blackie has been taken to task by the Scotch Sabbatarians for the sin of breaking the Sabbath by lecturing upon the "Love Songs of Scotland." In reply to these critics he asks for any text of Scripture which lays down a "law of monopoly in favor of Geneva gowns;" he refers his censors to St. Paul's teaching on the Sabbath; he wants to know it is more improper to discuss the "Love Songs of Scotland" than the Song of Solomen; and, finally, he thinks that "good advice is no better for being given with a sour face," and "no worse for being seasoned with a smile."

Nine States of the Union have thus far furnished all the Presidents, and from ten States have come all the Vice Presidents. The following table gives the names of the States that have supplied the Presidents, and the number of years that each has had this honor: Virginia, 36 years; Massachusetts, 8 years; Tennessee, 16 years; New York, 10¼ years, Ohio, 4¼ years; Louisiana, 1 year; New Hampshire, 4 years; Pennsylvania, 4 years; Illinois, 12 years; total—1789 to 1885—96 years.

Lady Wilde in her 'Driftwood from Scandinavia,' says that in Hamburg she saw more pretty faces among the middle classes than she had ever come across before. "The serving maidens of Christiania are tall and slender as young pine trees, dark-haired and exceedingly pretty, with splendid teeth flashing through merry smiles." "In Christiania," she observes, "one meets representatives of all the northern nations—Swedes, Danes, Norse, and Germans—all of the one Teutonic race, yet with strongly marked differences. The characteristic of the Norse is strength, of the Swedes refinement and culture, of the Danes grace and gayety."

Talks With His Mouth.

Gen. Chauncey McKeever, of the army, a bluff, hearty, good-hearted veteran, who always speaks his mind with freedom and emphasis, is not to be court-martialed for expressing his opinion about Hazen's mismanagement of the Arctic expeditions. Somehow the war department does not consider McKeever the proper one to court-martial. They tell a good story about McKeever in army circles which you ought to hear. It seems that some years ago McKeever was a witness before a court-martial in the west, and refused for his own good reasons to testify. So he was committed for contempt, and sent to Washington in arrest. On his way to Washington McKeever met a brother officer. "Where are you going"? asked the latter. "To Washington," replied McKeever. "Ordered there?" asked the brother officer. "Yes," said McKeever, "in arrest." "In arrest," repeated his friend in astonishment; "for what?" "For the strangest reason imaginable. I can't expect anybody who knows me to believe it. It is for keeping my mouth shut."

A Camille Case in Buffalo.

A Camille case is making a sensation in Buffalo society circles. Cyrus Clarke Vandeventor recently married the "Countess" Lena DeGrasse, and Lena's record has been looked up and printed. She ran away with a lover from Toronto at the age of 15, and went wild and wrong. In two or three years she suddenly flashed on Buffalo, where she captured a rich young man, lived in a fine house, drove out in a stylish carriage and was called "countess." The young man's infatuation continued, and his father offered the "countess" $10,000 if she would leave his son, quit Buffalo and never return. She took it, and left town with the intention of keeping her word, but it appears she couldn't stay away. She returned, and soon the marriage took place, which is Buffalo's reigning sensation. De Grasse is an assumed name which Lena took when she went for trial on the stage in New York. She is 21 years of age, and luxuriously beautiful, with great blue eyes, dark brown hair and a perfect figure.

The framework of the new Congo State Constitution is based upon the principles of English colonial administration, there being a governor, entitled Chef d'Etat, three deputy governors, and a full number of officials in the various districts. Brussels will be the headquarters of the Government.

SUMMARY OF NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A FIENDISH ACT CONFESSED.

A Negro Inmate of the Philadelphia Almshouses Confesses Setting the Fire Which Destroyed Twenty Human Lives—Instigated by One of the Chief Attendants, Who Had a Grudge Against the Superintendent.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 20.—At the coroner's inquest this afternoon in regard to the death of the twenty victims of the recent fire at the Blockley almshouse, a sensation was developed by the confession of Joseph Nadine, a young negro, that he had set fire to the building and was instigated to the act by Peter J. Schroeder, one of the chief attendants. Nadine, about twenty-three years of age, was committed to the institution as an imbecile, but it is said by physicians of the institution that he is morally responsible, and that he was frequently permitted to go home unattended. As a result of Nadine's confession Schroeder was arrested. Nadine said Schroeder had given him a match on the night of the calamity and told him to set the place on fire. Nadine then went to the drying room, and, lighting a match, applied it to some rubbish on the floor. He then called Schroeder, and the two, with the assistance of an attendant named Mullen, endeavored to get the patients out, but the fire gained such headway that they were forced themselves to leave the building. Nadine says when Schroeder gave him the match, he told him to set fire to the building. He was tired of the place and was going to leave, and disliked Dr. Richardson because he had refused to give him a railroad pass. Nadine intimates that of his having set fire to the building, but thinks he did not know of it until the next day. Mullen was not placed in custody, but will be detained as a witness against Schroeder. In his further testimony, Nadine says he twice before set fire to the building, but both times flames were discovered and extinguished. On both occasions he afterward told Schroeder of his acts, but the latter assured him he would not report to the authorities of the institution. Nadine was at times nervous and greatly frightened, apparently, but on being assured that no harm would be done him, he would become calm. Nadine told of many cruelties being inflicted upon patients by Schroeder when the latter was in violent temper. Schroeder after his arrest admitted that he had intended leaving the institution, but denied the truth of Nadine's story or that he had said he was "down on Dr. Richardson."

THE DEVOURING ELEMENT.

Rather Extensive Fire in New York, Entailing Physical Suffering as Well as Pecuniary Loss—Further Statement of Losses Caused by the Grannis Block Fire in Chicago.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—The Marvin Safe company's factory, a huge eight-story building, embracing Nos. 324 and 332 West Thirty-seventh street, was destroyed by fire during last night. The tottering walls of the building threatened the surrounding tenements, which were cleared by the police, and hundreds of half-clad children, women and men shivered in the sharp, frosty air till morning, or found shelter with neighbors. The tenements at Nos. 320 and 334, adjoining on either side of the burned factory, are more or less damaged by the falling walls. The loss to the Marvin Safe company will be $230,000, of which $100,000 is on stock, $50,000 on machinery, with $80,000 on the building. The insurance is $125,000, placed in thirty companies. Two hundred and fifty men are thrown out of employment.

The New Cabinet.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, Feb. 20.—The principal feature of the cabinet talk today was the report that F. L. Stetson has been sent to confer with Mr. Thurman over the interior department. It was both affirmed and denied in the most positive manner. Inquiry among Mr. Stetson's associates elicited the information that he has gone West on law business. This may or may not include "soliciting" a statesman to the office, but the average politician sees in it at least the suspicion of politics. There is a report that ex-Mayor Edward Cooper is in line for the English mission. It is understood that a number of statesmen will be in Albany, Sunday, and that by Monday one or two more places in the cabinet will have been decided upon and will be semi-officially announced. There is a great deal of opposition manifesting itself toward the selection of Mr. Manning. It comes from the Independents, who regard him as purely a machine man, and from the revenue reformers, who regard him as the coadjutor of Randall. The Western silver men are also inclined to kick because of his known opposition to silver coinage. Mr. Bayard's hand is beginning to be seen in the cabinet selections. It is found in the effort to bring Thurman into the counsel and the apparent coolness with which Garland is now regarded. Tilden's influence is thought to have been exhausted in the Manning matter. It is part of the gossip that William C. Whitney will run for governor next fall as the administration candidate.

THREE SOUTHERN MEMBERS.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 20.—John E. Develin, who dined with Cleveland last evening, said to-day that Cleveland not fully decided upon all the members of his cabinet yet, but there was one thing which he believed sure, and that was Manning would be secretary of the treasury. It is said to be the fixed intention of the president-elect to give the South a representation of three members in his cabinet, including Senator Bayard. The other two representatives will come from the circle of senators, and the choice is understood to be restricted virtually to Lamar, Garland and Jackson. It is possible that, in addition to Manning, New York may be awarded another cabinet office.

Land Explorers' Tickets.

CHICAGO, Special Telegram, Feb. 20.—The Union Pacific company has addressed the following circular to its ticket agents:

The following information is given to enable you to satisfactorily answer inquiries relative to land explorers' tickets to points in Kansas and Nebraska: Passengers holding land tickets are carried in first-class coaches and express trains, and have the privilege of stopping over within the limit of their tickets on application to the conductor for stop-over checks. The provision in some foreign issues, that land tickets must be used within five days, west-bound, has been canceled, and all land tickets will be honored by our conductors for passage westward within fifteen days from date of sale, regardless of the wording of the contract. Extension tickets will be made good for the same time as the original tickets, and allow stop-overs in either direction within limit of ticket.

Trouble for the Union Pacific.

OMAHA, Special Telegram, Feb. 20.—Representative locomotive engineers have arrived here from all divisions of the Union Pacific railroad, all from the Kansas Pacific, to hold a conference with Manager Calloway relative to new rules which the company is endeavoring to enforce, and to which the engineers and other employes object. Manager Calloway is absent, but a conference will be held with General Superintendent Smith. Unless other matters are satisfactorily adjusted there will probably be trouble all along the line very soon.

A NORTHWESTERN EXHIBIT.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 20.—There was another great attendance at the world's exposition to-day. This was the day of the exhibit of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad in the government building. The National Agricultural association took a recess and attended the opening in a body, and their presiding officer, Mr. Grinnell of Iowa, made an address. Speeches were made by Gen. T. L. Rosser of Minnesota, Col. Pat. Donan of Dakota, and John Plankinton of Milwaukee. Col. G. L. Shoup, United States commissioner for Idaho, is master of ceremonies assisted by J. L. Clark, general superintendent, and W. E. Powell, general emigration agent, of the road. The exhibit made by the railroad is one of the handsomest and most complete in the government building.

Another Railroad Holocaust.

A serious collision on the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac railway, between Washington and Alexandria, has been reported. The collision occurred in or near a short tunnel at Four Mile Run, the colliding trains being the New Orleans mail over the Virginia Midland, which should have reached Washington at 11 p. m., and a freight train going south. Both trains were badly wrecked, and the shattered cars took fire, the flames being fed by petroleum from two oil cars in the freight train. Thirty-three cars were burned, including the baggage and mail cars, with contents. Andrew Augur, conductor of the freight train, was killed, and several train men are missing. Seven or eight persons are injured, some of them seriously. Both engineers and fireman and the conductor of the passenger train were killed, and the mail agent and several passengers slightly injured. The engineer of the passenger train had both legs and one arm cut off and died before he was taken from the wreck. The conductor of the passenger train was crushed between two of the cars, and the engineer of the freight and the fireman of the passenger train were evidently killed when the engines came together.

Wisconsin Knights of Honor.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Special Telegram, Feb. 18.—The annual session of the grand lodge of Knights of Honor was held here to-day, the entire business being concluded, the session lasting to mid-night. Subordinate lodges were represented by delegates. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Grand dictator, Charles H. Ross, Milwaukee; vice dictator, N. Benzley, Fond du Lac; assistant dictator, Frank Challoner, Omro; reporter, O. D. Howard, Milwaukee; treasurer L. Silber, Milwaukee; chaplain, J. B Webb, La Crosse; guide, S. G. Leland Fond du Lac; guardian, F. W. Bruce Racine; sentinel, E. H. Henry, Omro; trustee for three years, Ira Kimball, Waukesha; representative to the supreme grand lodge for three years, C. H. Ross, Milwaukee; alternate, E. W. Ford, La Crosse. The officers were installed and the place and time of the next meeting fixed at Fond du Lac, the first Wednesday in March, 1886.

There are said to be 75,000 people out of employment in New York, 30,000 of whom are women.

George Oliver, aged thirty, probably fatally stabbed his wife in Boston and then fatally cut his own throat.

Alex. Boyd of New York has sued his wife for half of her estate, which she promised him when they were married.

Mrs. James Russell Lowell died in London at 2 o'clock on Thursday, the 19th inst. The funeral will be strictly private.

Edward S. Gould, the author and philologist, was struck down by a horse while crossing Broadway N. Y., crushing his skull.

The main portion of the Mansion house, on the old Waldo Adams estate at East Watertown, Conn., was burned recently. The house was valued at $30,000.

The Arkansas senate defeated, by a vote of 20 to 10, the bill regulating railroad freights, the main feature of which forbids charging more for short than for long hauls.

A West Point cadet named Wright, who recently resigned from the military academy because he was unable to keep up with his class, has been confirmed by the senate as a second lieutenant in the army.

A party of Iowa excursionists at Andersonville, Ga., after being heartily welcomed by citizens, caused universal indignation by starting away singing, "We'll hang Jeff Davis to a sour apple tree." The citizens got ahead of them by wire, and they received no more cordial receptions.

Secretary Teller is virtually charged with suppressing or destroying documents called for by Senator Hill regarding land frauds in New Mexico. If the story told in connection with them is true it will possibly afford material for some one to move the expulsion of Mr. Teller from the senate.

A destructive fire occurred on Chesinut street, Philadelphia, between Second and Front streets, a locality devoted entirely to large warehouses and business houses. Nine large business houses were almost completely burned out; six damaged, while four others incurred losses which many thousand dollars cannot repair.

The Grannis Block, Dearborn street, Chicago, was burned recently. The Grannis block was erected three years ago by W. C. D Grannis, president of the Union National bank at a cost of about $175,000. The building was insured for $120,000. Its tenants were for the most part prominent in their professions, having offices expressly fitted up, which fact makes estimates of furniture, etc., mount up well toward $75,000.

Gen. Sir Herbert Stewart, who was wounded at the battle of Abu-Klea, died on the 16th inst at Gakdul Wells, to which place he had been removed. His death casts a gloom over the entire British army. Surgeons stated that Gen. Stewart's wound was of such a character that recovery was hopeless from the first. Lord Wolseley's dispatch says: Gen. Stewart will be buried at the entrance of the valley leading to Gakdul. No brave soldier or more brilliant leader ever wore the queen's uniform. England can ill afford to lose this young general.

A printed protest of large proportions against permitting Masonic societies to participate in the dedication of the Washington monument, has been received by the congressional committee charged with the arrangement. The signers claim to have 13,000 signatures. The protestants say the Masonic order has no more right to any such distinction than the Hibernians or any other secret order. The stone sent by the pope for the monument was, they say, broken up and thrown into the Potomac. Why, they ask, are Catholics snubbed and Freemasons honored? The Masonic order, they say, is of foreign birth, is entirely un-American and unrepublican. Its public displays are pompous and barbaric, its titles extravagant and lordly, its constitution despotic, its oaths extra judicial, which, they say, should be suppressed by law. They pray that only such ceremonies as are national in their scope and Amercian in their character be permitted. The protest came too late for action by the committee.

It is announced that in view of the fall of Khartoum and the death of Gen. Gordon having rendered the main object of Gen. Wolseley's expedition impossible, the government has deemed it expedient to change the whole plan of the campaign in Soudan. Gen. Brackenbury, who succeeded the late Gen. Earle, has been ordered to abandon his advance on Berber and to concentrate his troops at Korti. Col. Sir Redvers Buller, who evacuated Gubat on the 18th and withdrew his forces to Abu-Klea, has also been ordered to fall back on Korti. All the available troops in Wolseley's command will be concentrated at that place and at Debbeh and Kerosk, the main body being at Korti. It is probable that Gen. Wolseley may evacuate Korti and retire to Debbeh, where the desert routes from Ombarman, El Obeid and Darfour converge on the Nile. Gen. Wolseley will there await help from England. At Korti the general could be surrounded. In his retirement all available supplies will be swept up, and the whole army entrenched at Debbeh could hold its own, if necessary, until the rising of the Nile occurs. Dongola, Hannek Deba and various other points of the river between Deba and Halfa are held by weak detachments of British troops, and there is a line of telegraph which possibly might be maintained, while the steam launches on the clear reaches could keep up some sort of communication with the second cataract.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE—The Indian appropriation bill, after protracted consideration, passed. Mr. Dolph introduced a bill making Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., ports of delivery.

An amendment was yesterday proposed by Senator Morgan to the anti-silver coinage bill. It strikes out the present provision for the suspension of the coinage of the standard dollar, and authorizes the president, on and after April 1, 1885, and in any succeeding month until April 1, 1886, to direct the secretary of the treasury to suspend, in whole or part, the purchase of silver bullion for the coinage of standard dollars.

SENATE—The bill authorizing the sale of part of the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska passed. The bill prohibiting the importation of foreign contract labor was considered at great length.

A vote was then taken on a motion of Mr. Bayard to strike out sec. 3, which prescribes a penalty of $1,000 for violation of the act, and the motion was not agreed to—yeas 12, nays 40. Those voting to strike out were Messrs. Butler, Coke, Colquitt, Garland, Groome, Hampton, Harrison, Maxey, Morgan, Saulsbury, Slater and Williams. Democrats voting with Republicans to retain penalty were Messrs. Brown, Call, Camden, Fair, George, Gibson, Jackson, McPherson, Pugh, Ransom and Vest.

Mr. Morgan moved an amendment that the bill should not apply to any agent of a state acting under authority of law, who should induce immigration, nor to any person who in good faith should assist the families to come to the United States.

HOUSE—The senate amendments to the Indian bill were non-concurred in. A bill was introduced regulating the coinage and promoting the circulation of gold and silver equally. The legislative, executive and judicial bill passed, having been so amended as to make Tacoma and Seattle, Wash., ports of delivery.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The joint resolution providing for an alcoholic liquor commission, which was to-day reported back adversely by the house committee having the matter in charge, is accompanied by a report in which the committee says:

The power to regulate retail liquor traffic has from the foundation of the Union been regarded as the exclusive rights of the states rather than the general government. Attempts have been made by some states to entirely prohibit the manufacture or sale of spirituous or malt liquors, but with little apparent success; and the interests of temperance and sobriety, so much to be desired, would seem to demand wise and stringent restrictions and effective safeguards in connection with liquor traffic rather than impracticable efforts at absolute prohibition. To the several states of the Union properly belongs the right to enact such local police regulations as will throw every proper restriction around the liquor traffic compatible with the personal and property rights of citizens; but uniform police regulations enacted by congress, practically suited to the different wants and requirements of the people of all the various states, would be difficult to frame and more difficult to enact. Any attempt to control the personal habits and private conduct of the individual should be opposed so long as he does not interfere with the personal rights of others or the peace and order of society in general. As it is a matter of grave doubt whether congress has a right to regulate the liquor traffic in the several states of the Union, and as there seems to be no great pressing or urgent necessity for the passage of this bill, your committee holds it is not advisable to attempt to exercise doubtful powers, which appear most properly to belong to the states themselves.

SENATE—The consideration of the bill prohibiting the importation of foreign contract labor was concluded, and the bill passed by a vote of 50 to 9.

Mr. Lapham offered an amendment providing that the whole penalty recovered shall be paid into the United States treasury, instead of, as by the bill, permitting one-half of the penalty to go to the person who may first bring the suit. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Blair offered an amendment making it the duty of the United States district attorney of the proper district to prosecute at the expense of the United States every case of violation of the act. Agreed to; yeas 42, nays 15.

The nays were:

Butler,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,
Groome,	Maxey,	Vance,
Hampton,	Morgan,	Williams.

The nomination of Emory Speer to be United States district judge of Georgia, kept the senate in a general uproar for two hours and a half this afternoon. At half past six a vote was taken and Mr. Speer confirmed by 27 yeas to 26 nays, Brown being the only Democrat voting for Speer. Democratic Senators say the quarrel between Brown and Colquitt will not extend to the party in Georgia, but will die with the winter.

HOUSE—In the McLean-Broadhead contested elected case (Missouri) the committee reported in favor of the latter, the sitting member. Nearly the whole day was passed on the river and harbor bill. On motion of Mr. Price, the appropriation for the harbor at Superior, Wis., was increased from $12,500 to $28,000.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Representative Millard, of the committee on reform on the civil service, submitted a minority report signed by the Republican members of the committee, in favor of Representative Taylor's bill to prohibit the discharge of honorably discharged soldiers or sailors or dependent relatives from any office in the civil service of the United States except for cause. The report says in part: "This class of government employes have claims upon the gratitude of the nation that cannot easily be compensated. They saved the country from dismemberment and dishonor. We submit it is but just and proper recognition of their claims that they should be retained in the government's service as long as they can faithfully and efficiently perform their official duties. The bill is eminently just in its provisions and should be passed with the following amendment: 'It shall not apply to the class of officers embraced in the original tenure of office act, passed March 3, 1867, and amended April 5, 1869.'"

SENATE.—After the consideration of the Des Moines river lands bill, the bill to forfeit the land grant of the Texas Pacific Railroad company was debated at much length, and finally passed, the vote being 56 to 2. The nays were Blairs and Bowen. During the debate Senators Morgan of Alabama and Beck of Kentucky had a passage. Morgan said: He had been in the Democratic party before the senator from Kentucky (Mr. Beck) enjoyed the privileges of citizenship in this country. He had been a true and faithful Democrat and it did not rest with the senator from Kentucky to impeach his Democracy.

Mr. Beck, disclaimed any allusion to Mr. Morgan or any other senator. "He is not quite so important," Mr. Beck said, "in my estimation in regard to these questions as he may think I think he is. I did not happen to be born in this country, but I was not consulted about my birth. I have been a citizen of the United States since 1838. That is a good while ago. The senator may have been a very important man at that date, but I doubt it. I have endeavored to perform my duty as a private citizen and public officer to the best of my ability since that time, and if the senator thinks it adds anything to his dignity or diminishes from my standing to make the suggestion that I was born in Scotland instead of the United States he is welcome to all the honor he thinks he has made by that fling at the place of my nativity.

HOUSE.—The committee on elections reported in favor of Frederick, who contested the seat of Mr. Wilson, the sitting member from the Fifth Iowa district. The river and harbor and naval bills were considered at length.

SENATE—The agricultural appropriation bill passed. The postoffice appropriation bill was debated, and the senate disagreed to the senate committee's amendment striking out the provision reducing letter postage.

The senate to-day, by a vote of 27 to 22, made the silver bill a special order, and subsequently Mr. Morrill yielded to the agricultural appropriation bill, which the senate considered and passed. Mr. Morrill, who has

Mr. Gorman offered a resolution, which was agreed to, calling on the secretary of the interior for information as to whether the subsidized Pacific railroads have constructed and are maintaining and operating their own lines of telegraph, and where telegraphic messages are accepted and transmitted for all persons and corporations without discrimination provided by the act of July 1, 1862.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Nominations were made to-day: Joseph Bell, United States attorney of New Mexico; Rev. William H. Hicks, late of Washington, surveyor general of Florida. Registers of land offices: Patrick H. Winston, Jr., of North Carolina, at Lewiston, Idaho; Charles F. Earley, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

Confirmations—Timothy Sheehan, Minnesota, Indian agent at White Earth agency, Minnesota; Stephen F. Wilson, Pennsylvania, associate justice of the supreme court of New Mexico; Warren Truitt, register of the land office, Lake View, Oregon.

HOUSE—The river and harbor and naval appropriation bills were considered. A bill appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa, passed. An evening session was held for the consideration of private pension bills.

THE BRAINERD AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILROAD.

Only $800,000 Asked of Polk County to Build the Road!

Notices are posted calling for an election upon Tuesday, March 10th, 1885, to vote upon the proposition from the Brainerd and Northwestern Railroad for $800,000 in aid of said road. The proposition reads: "If said County shall issue to said company to aid said company in the construction of a railroad hereinafter described, bonds of said county at the par value of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars ($200,000). SAID BONDS TO DRAW INTEREST AT THE RATE OF TEN PER CENT PER ANNUM, payable annually, the principal sum of said bonds to mature in thirty years from the date of issuance thereof, and to be payable before the maturity thereof; at the option of said County, said railroad company agrees to build," &c., &c., &c., "a standard gauge road from Brainerd to East Grand Forks via Red Lake Falls and Crookston." Well, who wouldn't build a railroad under such circumstances, $20,000 a year for thirty years, and then $200,000 on top of that? What do they offer for this princely gift? Well, that question is a poser. As near as we can figure it out they offer the same condition of things as already exist, and nothing better. What this country needs is cheaper freight rates. If this proposed B. & N. W. Railroad line (limited) should offer a square proposition to Polk County to carry out its wheat to St. Paul or Duluth for 10 cents per bushel and to carry all other freights in proportion, there would be some object to be gained; there would be some reason in this county giving a reasonable bonus, but to ask for the magnificent sum of EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, just simply for another road which would not be a whit milder in its charges, is simply outrageous. Why don't they come right out and ask for our farms and all our property at once and make a clean thing of it. They might as well. They or somebody else would get them for taxes if this preposterous $800,000 proposition should carry! Another thing that voters who are willing to stand the racket should consider well is that if this monstrous fraud is voted down there will be a road built direct to Duluth before the B. & N. W. could get in from Brainerd. The Duluth & Winnipeg road intends to commence operations next spring (if not headed off by this wild-cat scheme) and will build as rapidly as the work can be done, and so far as we know the county will not be asked to contribute a cent for it. We know that farmers living in the eastern part of the county need a road and need it badly, but this is no reason why they should contribute all they are worth to obtain it. TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS a year added to our taxes in this county would be a big thing, especially as we are not lonesome for the want of taxes now. We advise our friends to be careful in this matter as it is a very serious one. It is a very safe plan to be assured that you will get value received before you invest in any enterprise, and we are free to confess that we cannot see wherein Polk County will get value received for EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS invested in the B. & N. W. Railway.

If nothing should be accomplished in the Legislature this winter we have the assurance that our representatives, Messrs. Steenerson and Canning have done all in their power to accomplish some good results. Mr. Canning has made a good record of which his constituents may well feel proud, and he has the proud consciousness of having well and faithfully discharged his duties.

It is getting to be fashionable for real estate dealers to form a railroad company and blandly announce to the "dear people" that in order to save your bacon you must give our company a bonus to build our road through your county! If every wildcat proposition of the kind was entertained, what would the country come to? Not many roads could be "encouraged" at $800,000 per "encourage," and the better way would be for the citizens of the county to advertise for bids, offering to give the whole county as a bonus to the company that would build and equip the most roads through the county. In this way we should get more roads and less county quicker by a few years. In this way two or three roads running from somewhere to nowhere would clean out the county, while by our plan we might get five or six—they must come cheaper by wholesale on the same principle that the roads can haul one hundred thousand bushels of wheat cheaper for P. & H. than they can for three or four farmers. Of course we need a competing road, but we don't need to pay $800,000 for it. We need a competing line to Duluth, and sharpers and schemers know that and so they tell us that the D. & W. road has sold its franchises to another company who now offer to build a road to Brainerd for the modest sum of $800,000. The simple facts are that the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad has not sold its franchises, as the writer well knows, having conversed with Mr. Hill and Mr. Fisher on Friday last, who said that if this bill now in the Legislature providing for the forfeiture of their grant to the B. & N. W. did not pass, they expect to be in shape to resume work in the spring. It's true this country needs a competing road, but it wants a road running direct to Duluth and could well afford to give such a road a generous bonus. Such a road, from a business point of view would be best calculated to afford the relief sought, but before a bonus should be given it even, some sort of assurance should be exacted that we should obtain the relief sought. As much as we need a road we cannot afford to give $200,000 and $20,000 a year for thirty years! Farmers, if you wish to save your little farms and homes, vote against the $800,000 proposition.

An Old Farmer's Experience With Cattle.

The farmer wants to know, not so much what is absolutely the best feed, but what is most economical—something good and substantial, and not too expensive, which he can raise on the farm. Corn fodder, when properly cured and stored, makes good feed, but if it is left in the field, or long exposed to the weather, it is scarcely worth the labor of cutting and shocking, particularly if the weather has been wet. Wheat straw is not very nutritious food for cattle, but as most farmers raise wheat, it is a good plan to have plenty of straw well stacked, to which cattle, during winter, may have free access, and let them eat what they will. About the best and cheapest feed for cattle is good timothy hay, with occasional feeds of corn. Clover hay may be fed to cattle with good advantage. Turnips and pumpkins, where they can be successfully raised, make good feed for fall and early winter. Potatoes, either raw or cooked, make good feed, and the small ones cannot be used to better advantage than by feeding them to cattle. Potato and apple peelings mixed with bran or meal, make good feed, particularly for milch cows. Cattle, as well as other farm animals, appreciate good treatment, milch cows in particular do so, and should always be treated kindly, and even petted. They will very soon learn to recognize those who are kind to them, will take from the hand almost everything in the way of food, and seem to relish whatever is offered, simply because it is given by a known friend. The writer has often seen pet cows eat bread, pies, lettuce, tomatoes and other things from the table, and even drink sour milk, when offered by a recognized friend. Cows should always be milked by some one who is naturally kind and gentle, and, so far as may be, by the same person—never by any one who is excitable, peevish or impatient.—[Old Farmer in American Agriculturist for March.

Good Seed Corn.

It is a poor plan to take seed-corn from the bin, or even save it at husking time. It ought to be selected just when the kernels are hardening, about the first of September. Then, in passing through the field, one can see where two ears are set upon one stalk, which should be of medium height, leafy and erect, with ears well covered with husks, and well tipped out. Such ears, upon such stalks, particularly the best ears on two-eared stalks, should have a string tied around them so that at the husking they will be thrown out unhusked. This is no uncommon practice among corn growers who take pride in their own seed-corn. When it comes to husking there ought to be four times as many ears thrown out as will be sufficient for seed, and they will probably be a fine-looking lot, with few exceptions. If the variety is a favorite, or a really good one, there will very likely be a sale for these ears at a good price for seed after the best shaped ones have been taken for home use. Which are the best? First: The medium sized ones, because the large ones are monstrosities in a small way, and not so likely to reproduce themselves as to produce a diversity of ears, some large and some small. Second: The even-rowed ones, because irregularities in the rows indicate an unfixed type, and a tendency to depart from the type. An eight-rowed corn should always be eight-rowed, and eight-rowed throughout the ear; so with the ten, the twelve, sixteen, or twenty-rowed ears. Ten at the but, and eight at the tip, shows a wrong tendency, as already said, in the matter of type; besides, it shows an inclination to form big buts. Third: The buts must be small, easy to break off from the stem and husks, yet not weak and flabby, for those are as hard to break off as a leather thong. I have been into fields of corn to husk and had my hands blistered in a short time, on account of the size and toughness of the buts of the ears, while in other cornfields the work of husking was a real pleasure, at least for a short time. Fourth: The cob must be small, straight and stiff. The size of the cob is easily known by the length of the kernel. When well-ripened corn dries on the ear, the cob shrinks more than the grain. Hence it holds the kernels firmly set, and the whole ear feels as stiff as an oak pin.—[Col. Weld in American Agriculturist for March.

Feeding and Care of Swine.

None of our farm animals answers more quickly to, or yields more profit from good treatment, than swine; and, in many localities, none are more neglected than these homely, but useful animals. In the West, where hogs run at large and follow the droves of feeding steers, their management after they are weaned is very simple, but where hogs are kept in yards or pens, and are expected to subsist mainly on skimmed milk, or the refuse from the kitchen, more care is necessary and their wants must be carefully attended to, or they will not thrive as they ought. The most important thing to remember in feeding hogs is, that there is no such thing as "stock order;" the pig that is not so fed that it gains in weight continually and rapidly, is not a profitable animal, and soon eats more feed than it is worth. Many farmers keep a pen of store hogs in low condition through the winter, at a dead loss; the pigs do not grow, and yet eat almost as much as the fattening hogs. Here, again, we come to the "food of support." The larger part of the pig's food is needed to keep him alive, and prevent him from going backward; and a very little more food, judiciously applied, will usually make all the difference between profit and loss in keeping pigs.

The cheapest pork is that made from pigs which have been fed all that they would eat. If it does not pay to make pork by liberal feeding, it does not pay to make it at all, and it had better be given up. The care of pigs should begin as soon as they are born; sometimes the sows are very savage and, if not prevented, will eat the pigs as soon as they appear. If a sow shows this disposition she should be watched and the pigs taken from her. When her labor is finished, they should be carefully put down beside her and she will generally take up with them at once. The pen for breeding-sows should be roomy and warm, the floor nearly level, so that the weight of her body will not settle down and crush the pigs.—[Stock-breeder in American Agriculturist for March.

The Dorcas Magazine, a periodical devoted to the interests of women and the Home, has completed its first year's work. Its pages are filled with plain directions for making an infinite variety of useful and decorative articles, and its aim is evidently not only to help women to employ their time in a useful and pleasing manner, but also to be of service to those whom necessity compels to labor. There are thousands of women throughout the land supporting themselves by the use of the Crochet-hook and Knitting-needle, to whom the Dorcas is invaluable. The patterns given are selected with care and taste, and the working directions, which, by the way are printed without abbreviation, are tested by an expert to prevent mistakes. Knitting, netting, crocheting, all kinds of embroidery, and artistic needle work are treated in its columns. Innumerable hints and suggestions with regard to personal and home decoration are given, which may be enlarged indefinitely. The Dorcas has found an unoccupied field and is filling it in so satisfactory a manner that it is fast becoming a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to womanly handicraft. During its first year it gave double the value promised. Each number contains more technical matter than can be purchased separately for ten times its cost to subscribers, which is $1.00 per year. Sample copies sent to any one in the United States or Canada on receipt of 10 cents. Address, DORCAS, 872 Broadway, New York City. For sale by all newsdealers.

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

[This column is placed at the disposal of the Crookston W. C. T. U., who are cordially invited to fill it each week. ED. JOURNAL.]

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

"Little by little," the Tempter said,
As a dark and cunning snare he laid
For the young, unwary feet.
"Little by little, and day by day,"
I will tempt the careless soul away
Into the broad and flowery way,
Till the ruin is made complete.
"Little by little," sure and slow,
We fashion our future of bliss or woe
As the present passes away.
Our feet are climbing the stairway bright,
Up to the region of endless light,
Or sliding downward into the night,
"Little by little, and day by day."

—Exchange.

The "Tar and Feather Temperance Society" is a prosperous organization located in a New Jersey city. On the night of December 31st, 1883, three young men sat around a tavern fire, all under the influence of liquor. As the clock struck twelve one of the young men said: "Boys, the new year is here. Now let's swear off and form a temperance society." The others in a spirit of fun, agreed. The men were reckless, but they were in earnest, for the pledge adopted had the following penalty attached: "And any one of us who shall drink any intoxicating liquors for any purpose whatever, between now and midnight of Dec. 31st, 1884, shall be tarred and feathered." This clause becoming known, gained the club the name of "Tar and Feather Temperance Society." It grew in numbers and last New Year's Eve the society gave an entertainment to which a large number of the best people of the place were invited. The hall was filled. At midnight the President announced that the pledge had expired. By an unanimous vote it was renewed for another year, and twenty names were added to the roll. The society's badge is a blue ribbon, with a lump of tar filled with chickens feathers attached." Some one has suggested such a society for Crookston.

The W. C. T. U. held a very interesting and profitable meeting last Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. P. A. Dufour. We are happy to say that temperance work is reviving in Crookston. The ladies seem more than determined than ever. Let us bid them God speed, for this is a great work.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss.
County of Polk. } In Probate Court.
Special term, held Feb. 25th, 1885.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Anderson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of E. E. Lommen the administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come to his hands, and the disposition thereof; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, and a description of all the real estate of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions thereof; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of said real estate or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the debts of said deceased. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, and that it is necessary in order to pay the same, to sell a part of the whole of said real estate; and that it will be for the best interests of said estate that said real estate shall be sold at private sale.

It is therefore ordered, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before the Judge of this Court, on Saturday the eleventh day of April A. D. 1885, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the office of the Probate Judge, in the City of Crookston, in said County, then and there to show cause, if any there be, why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell said real estate according to the prayer of said petition.

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order shall be published for four successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, the last of which publication shall be at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County, and personally served on all persons interested in said estate residing in said County, at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, and upon all other persons interested according to law.

Dated at Crookston this 25th day of February A. D. 1885.

THE BRAINERD AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILROAD.

Only $800,000 Asked of Polk County to Build the Road!

Notices are posted calling for an election upon Tuesday, March 10th, 1885, to vote upon the proposition from the Brainerd and Northwestern Railroad for $800,000 in aid of said road. The proposition reads: "If said County shall issue to said company to aid said company in the construction of a railroad, hereinafter described, bonds of said county, at the par value of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars ($200,000). SAID BONDS TO DRAW INTEREST AT THE RATE OF TEN PER CENT PER ANNUM, payable annually, the principal sum of said bonds to mature in thirty years from the date of issuance thereof, and to be payable before the maturity thereof, at the option of said County, said railroad company agrees to build," &c., &c., &c., "a standard gauge road from Brainerd to East Grand Forks via Red Lake Falls and Crookston." Well, who wouldn't build a railroad under such circumstances, $20,000 a year for thirty years and then $200,000 on top of that? What do they offer for this princely gift? Well, that question is a poser. As near as we can figure it out they offer the same condition of things as already exist, and nothing better. What this country needs is cheaper freight rates. If this proposed B. & N. W. Railroad line (limited) should offer a square proposition to Polk County to carry out its wheat to St. Paul or Duluth for 10 cents per bushel and to carry all other freights in proportion, there would be some object to be gained, there would be some reason in this county giving a reasonable bonus, but to ask for the magnificent sum of EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, just simply for another road which would not be a whit milder in its charges, is simply outrageous. Why don't they come right out and ask for our farms and all our property at once and make a clean thing of it. They might as well. They or somebody else would get them for taxes if this preposterous $800,000 proposition should carry! Another thing that voters who are willing to stand the racket should consider well is that if this monstrous fraud is voted down there will be a road built direct to Duluth before the B. & N. W. could get in from Brainerd. The Duluth & Winnipeg road intends to commence operations next spring (if not headed off by this wild-cat scheme) and will build as rapidly as the work can be done, and so far as we know the county will not be asked to contribute a cent for it. We know that farmers living in the eastern part of the county need a road and need it badly, but this is no reason why they should contribute all they are worth to obtain it. TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS a year added to our taxes in this county would be a big thing, especially as we are not lonesome for the want of taxes now. We advise our friends to be careful in this matter as it is a very serious one. It is a very safe plan to be assured that you will get value received before you invest in any enterprise, and we are free to confess that we cannot see wherein Polk County will get value received for EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS invested in the B. & N. W. Railway.

If nothing should be accomplished in the Legislature this winter we have the assurance that our representatives, Messrs. Steenerson and Canning have done all in their power to accomplish some good results. Mr. Canning has made a good record of which his constituents may well feel proud, and he has the proud consciousness of having well and faithfully discharged his duties.

It is getting to be fashionable for real estate dealers to form a railroad company and blandly announce to the "dear people" that in order to save your bacon you must give our company a bonus to build our road through your county! If every wildcat proposition of this kind was entertained, what would the country come to? Not many roads could be "encouraged" at $800,000 per "encourage," and the better way would be for the citizens of the county to advertise for bids, offering to give the whole county as a bonus to the company that would build and equip the most roads through the county. In this way we should get more roads, and less county quicker by a few years. In this way two or three roads running from somewhere to nowhere would clean out the county, while by our plan we might get five or six—they must come cheaper by wholesale on the same principle that the roads can haul one hundred thousand bushels of wheat cheaper for P. & H. than they can for three or four farmers. Of course we need a competing road, but we don't need to pay $800,000 for it. We need a competing line to Duluth, and sharpers and schemers know that and so they tell us that the D. & W. road has sold its franchises to another company, who now offer to build a road to Brainerd for the modest sum of $800,000. The simple facts are that the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad has not sold its franchises as the writer well knows, having conversed with Mr. Hill and Mr. Fisher on Friday last, who said that if the bill now in the Legislature providing for the forfeiture of their grant to the B. & N. W. did not pass, they expect to be in shape to resume work in the spring. All [illegible] true this country needs a competing road, but it wants a road running direct to Duluth and could well afford to give such a road a generous bonus. Such a road, from a business point of view, would be best calculated to afford the relief sought, but before a bonus should be given it even some sort of assurance should be exacted that we should obtain the relief sought. As much as we need a road we cannot afford to give $200,000 and $20,000 a year for thirty years! Farmers, if you wish to save your little farms and homes, vote against the $800,000 proposition.

An Old Farmer's Experience With Cattle.

The farmer wants to know, not so much what is absolutely the best feed, but what is most economical—something good and substantial, and not too expensive, which he can raise on the farm. Corn fodder, if when properly cured and stored, makes good feed, but if it is left in the field, or long exposed to the weather, it is scarcely worth the labor of cutting and shocking, particularly if the weather has been wet. Wheat straw is not very nutritious food for cattle, but as most farmers raise wheat, it is a good plan to have plenty of straw well stacked, to which cattle, during winter, may have free access, and let them eat what they will. About the best and cheapest feed for cattle is good timothy hay, with occasional feeds of corn. Clover hay may be fed to cattle with good advantage. Turnips and pumpkins, where they can be successfully raised, make good feed for fall and early winter. Potatoes, either raw or cooked, make good feed, and the small ones cannot be used to better advantage than by feeding them to cattle. Potato and apple peelings mixed with bran or meal, make good feed, particularly for milch cows. Cattle, as well as other farm animals, appreciate good treatment, milch cows in particular do so, and should always be treated kindly, and even petted. They will very soon learn to recognize those who are kind to them, will take from the hand almost everything in the way of food, and seem to relish whatever is offered, simply because it is given by a known friend. The writer has often seen pet cows eat bread, pies, lettuce, tomatoes and other things from the table, and even drink sour milk, when offered by a recognized friend. Cows should always be milked by some one who is naturally kind and gentle, and, so far as may be, by the same person—never by any one who is excitable, peevish or impatient.—[Old Farmer in American Agriculturist for March.

Good Seed Corn.

It is a poor plan to take seed-corn from the bin, or even save it at husking time. It ought to be selected just when the kernels are hardening, about the first of September. Then, in passing through the field, one can see where two ears are set upon one stalk, which should be of medium height, leafy and erect, with ears well covered with husks, and well tipped out. Such ears, upon such stalks, particularly the best ears on two-eared stalks, should have a string tied around them so that at the husking they will be thrown out unhusked. This is no uncommon practice among corn growers who take pride in their own seed-corn. When it comes to husking there ought to be four times as many ears thrown out as will be sufficient for seed, and they will probably be a fine-looking lot, with few exceptions. If the variety is a favorite, or a really good one, there will very likely be a sale for these ears at a good price for seed after the best shaped ones have been taken for home use. Which are the best? First: The medium sized ones, because the large ones are monstrosities in a small way, and not so likely to reproduce themselves as to produce a diversity of ears, some large and some small. Second: The even-rowed ones, because irregularities in the rows indicate an unfixed type, and a tendency to depart from the type. An eight-rowed corn should always be eight-rowed, and eight-rowed throughout the ear; so with the ten, the twelve, sixteen, or twenty-rowed ears. Ten at the butt, and eight at the tip, shows a wrong tendency, as already said, in the matter of type, besides, it shows an inclination to form big butts. Third: The butts must be small, easy to break off from the stem and husks, yet not weak and flabby, for those are as hard to break off as a leather thong. I have been into fields of corn to husk and had my hands blistered in a short time, on account of the size and toughness of the butts of the ears, while in other corn fields the work of husking was a real pleasure, at least for a short time. Fourth: The cob must be small, straight and stiff. The size of the cob is easily known by the length of the kernel. When well-ripened corn dries on the ear, the cob shrinks more than the grain. Hence it holds the kernels firmly set, and the whole ear feels as stiff as an oak pin.—[Col. Weld in American Agriculturist for March.

Feeding and Care of Swine.

None of our farm animals answer more quickly, or yield more profit from good treatment than swine, and in many localities none are more neglected than these homely but useful animals. In the West, where hogs run at large and follow the droves of feeding steers, their management after they are weaned is very simple, but where hogs are kept in yards or pens and are expected to subsist mainly on skimmed milk, or the refuse from the kitchen [illegible] more care is necessary and their wants must be carefully attended to, or they will not thrive as they ought. The most important thing to remember in feeding hogs is, that there is no such thing as "stock order"; the pig that is not so fed that it gains in weight continually and rapidly is not a profitable animal, and soon eats more feed than it is worth. Many farmers keep a pen of store hogs in low condition through the winter, at a dead loss; the pigs do not grow, and yet eat almost as much as the fattening hogs. Here, again, we come to the "food of support." The larger part of the pig's food is needed to keep him alive, and prevent him from going backward, and a very little more food judiciously applied, will usually make all the difference between profit and loss in keeping pigs.

The cheapest pork is that made from pigs which have been fed all that they would eat. If it does not pay to make pork by liberal feeding, it does not pay to make it at all, and it had better be given up. The care of pigs should begin as soon as they are born; sometimes the sows are very savage and, if not prevented, will eat the pigs as soon as they appear. If a sow shows this disposition she should be watched and the pigs taken from her. When her labor is finished, they should be carefully put down beside her and she will generally take up with them at once. The pen for breeding sows should be roomy and warm, the floor nearly level, so that the weight of her body will not settle down and crush the pigs.—[Stock-breeder in American Agriculturist for March.

The Dorcas Magazine, a periodical devoted to the interests of women and the Home, has completed its first year's work. Its pages are filled with plain directions for making an infinite variety of useful and decorative articles, and its aim is evidently not only to help women to employ their time in a useful and pleasing manner, but also to be of service to those whom necessity compels to labor. There are thousands of women throughout the land supporting themselves by the use of the Crochet-hook and Knitting-needle, to whom the Dorcas is invaluable. The patterns given are selected with care and taste, and the working directions, which, by the way are printed without abbreviation, are tested by an expert to prevent mistakes. Knitting, netting, crocheting, all kinds of embroidery, and artistic needle work are treated in its columns. Innumerable hints and suggestions with regard to personal and home decoration are given, which may be enlarged indefinitely. The Dorcas has found an unoccupied field and is filling it in so satisfactory a manner that it is fast becoming a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to womanly handicraft. During its first year it gave double the value promised. Each number contains more technical matter than can be purchased separately for ten times its cost to subscribers, which is $1.00 per year. Sample copies sent to any one in the United States or Canada on receipt of 10 cents. Address Dorcas, 872 Broadway, New York City. For sale by all newsdealers.

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

"Little by little," the Tempter said,
As a dark and cunning snare he laid
For the young, unwary feet.
"Little by little, and day by day,
I will tempt the careless soul away
Into the broad and flowery way,
Till the ruin is made complete."
"Little by little," sure and slow,
We fashion our future of bliss or woe
As the present passes away.
Our feet are climbing the stairway bright,
Up to the region of endless light,
Or sliding downward into the night,
"Little by little, and day by day."
—Exchange.

The "Tar and Feather Temperance Society" is a prosperous organization located in a New Jersey city. On the night of December 31st, 1883, three young men sat around a tavern fire, all under the influence of liquor. As the clock struck twelve one of the young men said, "Boys, the new year is here. Now let's swear off and form a temperance society." The others in a spirit of fun, agreed. The men were reckless, but they were in earnest, for the pledge adopted had the following penalty attached: "And any one of us who shall drink any intoxicating liquors for any purpose whatever, between now and midnight of Dec. 31st, 1884, shall be tarred and feathered." This clause becoming known, gained the club the name of "Tar and Feather Temperance Society." All grew in numbers and last New Year's Eve the society gave an entertainment to which a large number of the best people of the place were invited. The hall was filled. At midnight the President announced that the pledge had expired. By an unanimous vote it was renewed for another year, and twenty names were added to the roll. The society's badge is a blue ribbon, with a lump of tar, filled with chickens feathers attached. Some one has suggested such a society for Crookston.

The W. C. T. U. held a very interesting and profitable meeting last Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. P. A. Dufour. We are happy to say that temperance work is reviving in Crookston. The ladies seem more determined than ever. Let us bid them God speed for theirs is a great work.

Skim-Milk As Food For Hogs.

Writing to the National Live Stock Journal in 1883, Mr. H. B. Gurler, of DeCalb, declared that "skim-milk, skilfully fed, is worth just half as much per hundred pounds as corn is per bushel." This statement may have appeared to some, at the time, as not sufficiently proven, but it is gratifying to know that, after a number of interesting experiments conducted by Prof. W. A. Henry, at the Wisconsin Experimental station, the professor elected to quote Mr. Gurler's statement, as the best summary he could give of the results of his experiments, a deserved compliment to Mr. Gurler's experience and judgment. We prefer, however, not to dispose of the matter so summarily here, and while we have not the space to give the entire report of these experiments, we wish to present to the reader some of prof. Henry's conclusions. He says:

While the reader will notice a large variation in the value of the skim-milk fed in these two experiments last detailed, it will appear plain, we think, that in the most economical feeding a comparatively large amount of meal should be fed with the skim-milk. It will be noticed that the greatest gain for a given amount of food was with the third lot of pigs in the second experiment, where two pounds of meal were fed with three and a third of milk. It will be noted that the German feeding tables were no guide to economy, and that a feed ration where there was an excess of carbo-hydrates, according to the tables, was superior to one where protein was in excess. In other words, the experiments indicate (for they are too few to prove,) that by feeding more protein than the standard calls for, we may produce a greater gain, and by feeding more carbo-hydrates than the standard calls for we may produce both a greater and a cheaper gain, while Lot IV warns us that, if we let the amount of protein sink too low, we shall get a very unsatisfactory result.

So far as corn meal and skim-milk are concerned, this is equivalent to saying that meal should be fed with the skim-milk, since the meal furnishes largely carbo-hydrates and the skim-milk largely protein. The advantage of stating the results in this way is that they may be applied to any combination of feeds, if the feeder only knows how much protein and carbo-hydrates they contain.—[Nat. A Big Round Dollar.

It was always a mystery to us how any housekeeper could get along without that practical and useful monthly, The Housekeeper, published at Minneapolis, Minn. Now that it has been doubled in size and vastly improved, it is doubly worth the $1.00 per year subscription price. Those who order before April 1st get a special rate. Trial trip three months 15 cents. The publishers who also publish the famous Buckeye Cook Book, want to secure at least one lady or gentleman in every county to introduce it on liberal commission, or salary. The Best and Cheapest Dairy Paper.

Every well posted dairyman has heard of the Jefferson County Union, published at Fort Atkinson, Wis., the leading dairy paper of the Northwest, edited and owned by W. D. Hoard, who for a number of years has filled the position of President of the Northwestern Dairyman's Association. For the sake of placing sound dairy reading within the reach of all, Mr. Hoard has commenced the publication of a compact edition of all dairy, market and agricultural matter contained in the Union, which will be issued weekly under the name of "Hoard's Dairyman." This paper will be issued for a time in a six column folio form, and is truly a very valuable compendium of dairy knowledge. The Dairyman will contain each week the finest and most extensive dairy market reports from all important markets besides a letter from Elgin, the great butter market of the Northwest. In addition will be given letters from the most practical dairymen of the country, on all that pertains to first-class dairy farming, breeding dairy stock, &c. Reports in summary of all the leading Dairy Conventions, will be published. Each number contains a record of the sales of butter by the leading dairymen around Fort Atkinson, and elsewhere. This is a valuable feature. Every farmer who keeps a half dozen cows ought to read "Hoard's Dairyman." It will pay him a hundred fold on the investment. We will send the Dairyman with THE JOURNAL, for one year for $2. Call and see sample copies. [43-46]

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First Publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen hundred and eighty seven 68-100 dollars ($1887.68-100,) which is claimed to be due, and is due, at the date of this notice, upon two certain promissory notes secured by a mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Polina Angelina McIntyre and H. D. McIntyre, to Morris E. Brown, bearing date the eleventh day of November A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 27th day of November A. D. 1882, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 409, which mortgage was for a good and valuable consideration on the 23d day of February A. D. 1883 duly assigned to Joseph Kelso, and said assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for said County on the 27th day of February A. D. 1883, in book "K" of mortgages on pages 260 and 261, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nineteen (19) Block number sixteen (16) in the original Townsite of Crookston according to a plat of said Townsite, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars ($50) attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State on the 12th day of March A. D. 1885, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., of said day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred forty-five and 50-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. Anderson Foord, an unmarried man, mortgagor to Fredrick Peterson and John Peterson, mortgagees bearing date the 21st day of May A. D. 1883, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of May A. D. 1883, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 22, and whereas the undivided one-half interest in the said mortgage and the debt secured thereby was by the said Fredrick Peterson, one of said mortgagees, duly assigned in writing under his hand and seal to Harold Swenson and Peter Broberg "copartners" by assignment, dated July 31st 1884, which assignment was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of August 1884, at 1:20 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages on page 330, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given. That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north one half (n½) of the southeast one-fourth (se¼) and the east one-half (e½) of the southwest one-fourth (sw¼) of Section twenty-eight (28,) of Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), Range forty-three (43,) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to government survey, said lot, piece, or parcel of land being situated in Polk County, and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the fourteenth day of March A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, Pierre Dulude, as mortgagor, did on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of July 6th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situated in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The south half of the northwest quarter, and the south half of the northeast quarter, of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west, of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of three hundred and twenty-five dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881, at 2:45 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "B" of mortgages, on pages 87, 88, 89 and 90; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and fifty-eight and 10-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of July, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of three hundred and seventy-seven and 40-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammoned, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated February 13th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS Israel Dion, as mortgagor, did on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 25th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18,) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 92, 93, 94 and 95; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 25-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable; and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider and declare, and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 55-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, Arthur Cote, as mortgagor, did on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of March 1st, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The southeast quarter of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1881, at 4:20 o'clock, p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 196, 197 and 198; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of two hundred and fifty-six and 85-100 dollars due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of March, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did, on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of eighteen and 80-100 dollars, for which sum so paid, the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lein on said premises for the amount so paid, with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid, the sum of two hundred and ninety-nine and 15-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

March 10th 1885.

CHAIRMAN. The voters of Polk County will please come to order. As you are aware, gentlemen, the object of this meeting is to decide whether Polk County will add a little matter of $800,000 to her debt. If no opposition is made I will now proceed to take the vote of the county by the sign of the uplifted hand. As there appears to be no objection all who are in favor of saddling an enormous debt upon the already overtaxed farmer for the benefit of a rich railroad company and a few wealthy real estate speculators please make it manifest by raising the right hand.

All those who are opposed to giving away this magnificent fortune to a railroad corporation which will be of no earthly benefit and will only add to already sufficiently large tax-roll will manifest it by the same sign.

It is a vote. The nose seem to have it; the noes have it. I declare the bonds lost. Gone to join the G. F. C. R. L. F. B. and D. R. R.,—up the spout! A motion to adjourn is now in order.

Prepare for the Hatching Season.

The time is now approaching for the interested poultryman and the thrifty farmer who thinks, and rightly, that fowls properly managed, are good paying stock on the farm, to make preparations for the annual setting of eggs and hatching of chickens. It will not be well for those having no warm place for the young chicks, to attempt hatching before the last of March or the first of April. Pullets coming out at this time lay in October, and with good care, will continue to lay all winter, when eggs are scarce and high, and cockerels will bring more for broilers at three months old than when raised later and kept much longer. Keep watch of your flocks, so that the difference in their disposition can be noted. Use only those hens for sitters that are quiet and not inclined to be nervous, for they will invariably make surer hatchers and better mothers. A hen that is uneasy and wants to be off the nest frequently during incubation, especially in the cold weather of spring, should not be depended on. Provide the hens with large, flattish nests, and place whole corn and fresh water each day near them. It is most necessary to keep the nest and body of the fowl free from vermin, for if they are not, they will not sit quietly, and labor and eggs are lost. It cannot be expected that success will follow attempts at hatching and raising chickens, unless the hens have been kept in a clean and thrifty condition during the winter. Filth causes weakness and breeds disease, and the product, if any, of a slovenly kept flock of fowls, will always be weak and unprofitable in the extreme.—[H. C. Brown in American Agriculturist for March.

HOLSTEINS FOR BEEF.

Breeder's Gazette.

It will be gratifying to the friends of the Holstein breed of cattle to read the following statement, which proves what has often been stated, that the Holsteins are superior beef animals.

A few days since we caused to be slaughtered the recorded Holstein bull Syracuse (822), calved April 24, 1882; the recorded cow Signet (1817), calved April 6, 1880, and Little Wonder (1788), calved May 14, 1880, with the following result:

Syracuse weighed alive, on day of killing, 2,200 lbs.; dressed beef, 1,430 lbs.; hide, 142 lbs.; rough tallow, 120 lbs. Per cent of dressed beef, 62 44-100; per cent of offal, 26. He was killed by Messrs. Calfelz & Lenhart, Syracuse, N. Y.

Signet weighed alive, 1,470 lbs.; dressed beef, 915 lbs.; hide, 76 lbs.; rough tallow, 120 lbs. Per cent of dressed beef, 62 31-100; per cent of offal, 24.

Little Wonder weighed alive, 1,493 lbs.; dressed beef, 791 lbs.; hide, 78 lbs.; rough tallow, 124 lbs. Per cent of dressed beef, 52 98-100; per cent of offal, 33.

The butchers that purchased and cut up the carcasses of Signet and Little Wonder send us the following strong testimonial as to the quality of the beef of those two cows: "We were much pleased with the two Holstein heifers purchased of you last month. We have been in the meat business for the last twenty-five years and have killed all grades of cattle, the best we could find in this country, but never have we had any in quality that would equal those purchased of you. We have had a great many compliments from the leading families in the city in regard to the Holstein beef."

Syracuse and Little Wonder had not been fattened for beef, and Signet we had fed for some time, but she was not what beef men would regard fat. Taking everything into consideration we think this shows decidly to the advantage of Holsteins as beef animals.

Live Stock Notes.

This is a trying month for live stock, and they will need extra care until the pastures produce sufficient herbage. All animals should be kept from exposure to the long, cold storms. We have seen many flocks and herds that were obliged to be in deep mud continuously through the spring. The yards should be properly drained, and the floors of the sheds and feeding-rooms kept dry. Horses have heavy work at this season, and need to be fed and groomed accordingly. Much depends upon the driver; let him be patient and gentle. Fretting horses are never doing their best. Milch cows thrive when kept clean and fed with an abundance of wholesome food. Let the milking be done by careful hands, otherwise new cows will be spoiled, and old ones dried off. For lice on calves, pigs and fowls, nothing is better than grease or kerosene. Speak now for June pigs. Give brooding hens clean nests, with food close at hand. Be an "early bird" in the spring.—[American Agriculturist for March.

Poultry Suggestions.

If they are cared for, and always have clean, wholesome quarters and not crowded, poultry will always be healthy. If a fowl merely acts a little "cranky," do not imagine that it is sick, and commence stuffing it with drugs; simply remove it to a pen some distance from the flock, and let it alone a few days. If it proves to be very sick, chop off its head and burn it. For cholera, a strong solution of hyposulphite of soda, given three times a day, in teaspoonful doses, is probably the best remedy we have. For gaps, dip a feather in turpentine, and insert it into the windpipe. One application will generally cure; two are sometimes necessary. Dip scaly legs in kerosene two or three times. A little sulphur mixed with the food once a week in winter, prevents packing of the crop, and irregularities of the bowels, caused by over-eating, and the constant production of eggs. Gravel and coarse sand are necessary for the digestion of food. Crushed bones, old plaster, lime, etc., are necessary for the formation of egg-shells. Cayenne pepper in small quantities, mixed with the food occasionally during the winter, promotes egg-laying.

Fifty hens will eat and trample down half as much grass, if yarded upon it, as will keep a cow. A coop of small chicks in the garden will destroy an enormous number of bugs and worms. Do not permit your poultry to forage upon your neighbor's farm; it is a mean, contemptible trick, and often practised by men who would resent it if accused of petty thievery. Ducks and geese prefer to have their nests on the ground; some will not lay anywhere else. Place their nests in rows along one side of the house, and separate them with thin board partitions.—[Poultry Keeper in American Agriculturist for March.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

CARE OF STOCK.

It is probable that more than half of the winter season has passed, and we are gratified to learn that not half of the hay and fodder put up by the farmers in this part of the northwest for the use of their stock is consumed. This fact will enable the stock-growers to get their cattle through the winter in excellent condition. It is well that it is so. There is nothing so discouraging to farmers as to be short of hay as spring approaches, because it is the very time they need it in abundance. From now until the stock can be turned into the pastures every hoof should have a liberal allowance of fodder of some kind. There is nothing that can take the place of good, bright, early-cut hay, and it is fortunate that there is plenty of it. Of course, corn stalks, straw and roots of different kinds can be used, but from now, when we are liable to have cold storms, wind, snow, sleet and rain, all operating to weaken or waste the flesh of farm animals, hay will be found to be the best of dried or artificial food to be fed out on the farm. From this time until spring special attention should be given to the stables. Cattle that are stabled in winter are more apt to be neglected in cleanliness than horses. It seems revolting that the animal from which we receive so much of the supplies of the table, butter, cheese, milk and cream, should be compelled, as they are in many instances, to lie on foul beds and breathe a foul atmosphere. Such causes must of necessity injure the quality and lessen the quantity of these products at the same time the animal suffers in condition. Cows are coming in, and they should have clean, dry beds, which, with frequent cleaning and attention, and good, wholesome air, will contribute much to the comfort of the animal, and still more to the comfort of the owner and attendant, if they have any appreciation of the elements of enjoyment. As spring approaches stock requires more actual care than in midwinter. Water should be given them at least twice a day. They should have free access to salt two or three times a week. Every precaution should be taken to prevent them from reaching the pastures in an impoverished condition, so that it will require all the first part of summer for them to recuperate and take on the flesh they had at the commencement of winter.

THE AMOUNT OF MILK FOR A POUND OF BUTTER.

At a late meeting of the New York State dairymen's association, a creamery manager from Bradford, Penn., gave the following as his experience in determining the amount of milk required for a pound of butter: A mixed herd of twenty-one cows in the eight months from April to November, inclusive, 1882, averaged 202 pounds of butter per cow. Fourteen grade shorthorns in the same time averaged a pound of butter to twenty-four and one-half pounds of milk, and averaged 221 pounds of butter per cow. Fourteen Holsteins in the same time averaged a pound of butter from twenty pounds of milk, and averaged 235 pounds of butter per cow; and eleven Jerseys in the same time averaged a pound of butter from sixteen pounds of milk, and in ten months averaged 289 pounds per cow.

WHITE CLOVER FOR THE PASTURE.

There is nothing equal to white clover for sheep pasture, and in fact all kinds of farm stock do well on it. It springs up of itself on many farms that are suitable to its growth. Not one farmer in a thousand ever sowed white clover seed. If you are intending to seed down for permanent meadow or for pasture the coming spring, let your mixture of grass seeds contain one pound of this clover seed to the acre, and in a few years you will admit that you sowed better than you thought.

A Holstein and Shorthorn cross is said to produce an excellent dairy cow, and one good for many pounds of good beef when ready to turn off. This cross is being tested in some of the dairy counties in Iowa.

ARTICHOKES FOR HOG CHOLERA.

The Journal of Agriculture says that it is claimed by J. C. Evans, of Clay County, Mo., that artichokes are a preventive of hog cholera, in the statement that in nineteen years he has had hog cholera among his hogs but one year, and that was the only year of the nineteen in which he had no artichokes. We have not a word to say against the artichokes, for, as long as they are a success as a preventive, no substitute could be found that is at once as good and less expensive. The points we would here make is that the tubers simply keep the system in order, which might be accomplished with several other vegetables, such as turnips or potatoes. If a crop is to be raised for this especial purpose next year or any future year, let it be artichokes, as they are easily raised and yield well, but if hogs are now dying or exposed to any disease by running in large herds, we would advise the use of any of the crops named, and we should use them with perfect confidence in their virtues in the winter season. We have repeatedly asserted and here reiterate that the sanitary conditions surrounding the herd and the feed which they eat, are the main factors in the disease or healthfulness of the same.

We recommend the Minneapolis Tribune to all our readers.

Experiments on the Farm.

In general farm and garden culture, the opportunities for investigation are endless, and the methods are simple. The trial of new seeds; the variation of time of planting and harvesting, to determine the best results; experiments with new or unusual crops, as seed-raising, new fodder crops, such as millet, sorghum, mustard and others; the effects of drainage; the value of special fertilizers, as lime, bone-dust, potash; the trial of the various remedies suggested for insect pests; the methods for preserving posts and other timber; the feeding and management of stock; ensilage; the production of new varieties of vegetables, fruits, grains and fodder plants, by selection, and it may be, by crossing the existing varieties; the invention or improvement of agricultural implements, etc.—these are a few of the many interesting branches of agricultural investigation. Consider next the methods of experiment. There are two great essentials at the foundation; exact measurement, and exact record. Measure everything, either by weight, by dimensions, or by duration of time, and keep a systematic record of everything. Add to this thoughtfulness, and you have the whole secret of experimental science. Think what you desire to ascertain, and direct the experiments accordingly. Think over the results of your experiments carefully, and draw your conclusions. In dealing with crops, the customary method is, to divide a sufficient area of land into carefully-measured small plots, and use each plot, or a number, for any particular plant under trial. Where it is a question of soil or manures, always have the crop under test on at least one plot, the soil of which is left in the natural condition. This last serves as a basis of comparison with other plots that have been variously fertilized.—[X. Clark in American Agriculturist for March.

George Alfred Townsend (Gath), the greatest living American correspondent, writes solely for the Minneapolis Tribune.

The American Agriculturist for March, 1885, is a step in advance of any previous issue of this remarkably successful Journal of the farm, garden and household. With over a hundred columns of carefully chosen and accurately prepared original, seasonable reading matter, fully illustrated with original and instructive engravings, this number of the American Agriculturist is a triumph in rural journalism, that only needs to be seen and read to be appreciated. Among the larger engravings are: "We'll have that Bear Yet," "March," "Pelham Bay Park," Portrait of the late veteran pomologist Charles Downing, Octagonal Barn, "Stormy March," "A $2,600 Cottage," "The Old and the New Home," "Angus Bull," "Marguerite," "Beech," etc., and a number of new labor-saving devices for all departments of rural and household work. A score or more of well-known writers are represented with the best efforts in their respective departments. Dr. Geo. Thurber writes on new and rare plants, etc.; Joseph Harris walks and talks in his "taking" away; Col. M. C. Weld brings the New Orleans Exposition before the readers; A. S. Fuller presents the claims of the beech-tree; Dr. B. D. Halsted mentions a loss gladly sustained, etc.; Col. F. D. Curtis on the right pigs; Dr. D. D. Slade on animal ailments; Hon. J. S. Newman on plant food for southern farms. The household and children's departments abound with useful and entertaining reading and engravings. Yearly subscriptions, $1.50. March 10th 1885.

CHAIRMAN. The voters of Polk County will please come to order. As you are aware, gentlemen, the object of this meeting is to decide whether Polk County will add a little matter of $800,000 to her debt. If no opposition is made I will now proceed to take the vote of the county by the sign of the uplifted hand. As there appears to be no objection all who are in favor of saddling an enormous debt upon the already overtaxed farmer for the benefit of a rich railroad company and a few wealthy real estate speculators please make it manifest by raising the right hand.

[illegible]

All those who are opposed to giving away this magnificent fortune to a railroad corporation which will be of no earthly benefit and will only add to already sufficiently large tax-roll will manifest it by the same sign.

[illegible]

It is a vote. The nose seem to have it; the noes have it. I declare the bonds lost. Gone to join the G. F. O. R. L. F. B. and D. R. R.—up the spout! A motion to adjourn is now in order.

Prepare for the Hatching Season.

The time is now approaching for the interested poultryman and the thrifty farmer who thinks, and rightly, that fowls properly managed, are good paying stock on the farm, to make preparations for the annual setting of eggs and hatching of chickens. It will not be well for those having no warm place for the young chicks, to attempt hatching before the last of March or the first of April. Pullets coming out at this time lay in October, and with good care, will continue to lay all winter, when eggs are scarce and high, and cockerels will bring more for broilers at three months old, than when raised later and kept much longer. Keep watch of your flocks, so that the difference in their disposition can be noted. Use only those hens for sitters that are quiet and not inclined to be nervous, for they will invariably make surer hatchers and better mothers. A hen that is uneasy and wants to be off the nest frequently during incubation, especially in the cold weather of spring, should not be depended on. Provide the hens with large, flattish nests, and place whole corn and fresh water each day near them. It is most necessary to keep the nest and body of the fowl free from vermin, for if they are not, they will not sit quietly and labor and eggs are lost. It cannot be expected that success will follow attempts at hatching and raising chickens, unless the hens have been kept in a clean and thrifty condition during the winter. Filth causes weakness and breeds disease, and the product, if any, of a slovenly kept flock of fowls, will always be weak and unprofitable in the extreme.—[H. C. Brown, in American Agriculturist for March.

HOLSTEINS FOR BEEF.

Breeder's Gazette.

It will be gratifying to the friends of the Holstein breed of cattle to read the following statement, which proves what has often been stated, that the Holsteins are superior beef animals.

A few days since we caused to be slaughtered the recorded Holstein bull Syracuse (824), calved April 24, 188[illegible], the recorded cow Signet (1517), calved April [illegible], 1880, and Little Wonder (1789), calved May 14, 1880, with the following result:

Syracuse weighed alive, on day of killing, 2,200 lbs.; dressed beef, 1,480 lbs.; hide, 142 lbs.; rough tallow, 120 lbs. Per cent of dressed beef, [illegible]. He was killed by Messrs. [illegible], Syracuse, N. Y.

Signet weighed alive, 1,470 lbs.; dressed beef, 915 lbs.; hide, 78 lbs.; rough tallow, 120 lbs. Per cent. of dressed beef, [illegible]; per cent. of [illegible] 23.

Little Wonder weighed alive, [illegible] lbs.; dressed beef, [illegible] lbs.; hide, 78 lbs.; rough tallow, [illegible] lbs. Per cent. of dressed beef, [illegible]; per cent. of [illegible].

The butchers [illegible] up the carcasses of Signet and Little Wonder send us the following strong testimonial as to the quality of the beef of those two cows: "We were much pleased with the two Holstein heifers purchased of you last month. We have been in the meat business for the last twenty-five years, and have killed all grades of cattle, the best we could find in this country, but never have we had any in quality that would equal those purchased of you. We have had a great many compliments from the leading families in the city in regard to the Holstein beef. [illegible]

Syracuse and Little Wonder had not been fattened for beef, and Signet we had fed for some time, but she was not what beef men would regard fat. Taking everything into consideration we think this shows decidedly to the advantage of Holsteins as beef animals.

Live Stock Notes.

This is a trying month for live stock, and they will need extra care until the pastures produce sufficient herbage. All animals should be kept from exposure to the long, cold storms. We have seen many flocks and herds that were obliged to be in deep mud continuously through the spring. The yards should be properly drained, and the floors of the sheds and feeding-rooms kept dry. Horses have heavy work at this season, and need to be fed and groomed accordingly. Much depends upon the driver; let him be patient and gentle. Fretting horses are never doing their best. Milch cows thrive when kept clean and fed with an abundance of wholesome food. Let the milking be done by careful hands, otherwise new cows will be spoiled, and old ones dried off. For lice on calves, pigs and fowls, nothing is better than grease or kerosene. Speak now for June pigs. Give brooding hens clean nests, with food close at hand. Be an early bird in the spring.—[American Agriculturist for March.

Poultry Suggestions.

If they are cared for and always have clean, wholesome quarters, and not crowded, poultry will always be healthy. If a fowl merely acts a little cranky, do not imagine that it is sick, and commence stuffing it with drugs. Simply remove it to a pen some distance from the flock, and let it alone a few days. If it proves to be very sick, chop off its head and burn it. For cholera, a strong solution of hyposulphite of soda, given three times a day, in teaspoonful doses, is probably the best remedy we have. For gaps, dip a feather in turpentine, and insert it into the windpipe. One application will generally cure, two are sometimes necessary. Dip scaly legs in kerosene two or three times. A little sulphur mixed with the food once a week in winter, prevents packing of the crop, and irregularities of the bowels caused by overeating. And the constant production of eggs. Gravel and coarse sand are necessary for the digestion of food. Crushed bones, old plaster, lime, [illegible] for the formation of egg shells. Cayenne pepper in small quantities, mixed with the food occasionally during the winter, promotes egg laying. [illegible]

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

CARE OF STOCK.

It is probable that more than half of the winter season has passed, and we are gratified to learn that not half of the hay and fodder put up by the farmers in this part of the northwest for the use of their stock is consumed. This fact will enable the stock-growers to get their cattle through the winter in excellent condition. It is well that it is so. There is nothing so discouraging to farmers as to be short of hay as spring approaches, because it is the very time they need it in abundance. From now until the stock can be turned into the pastures every hoof should have a liberal allowance of fodder of some kind. There is nothing that can take the place of good, bright, early-cut hay, and it is fortunate that there is plenty of it. Of course, corn stalks, straw and roots of different kinds can be used, but from now, when we are liable to have cold storms, wind, snow, sleet and rain, all operating to weaken or waste the flesh of farm animals, hay will be found to be the best of dried or artificial food to be fed out on the farm. From this time until spring special attention should be given to the stables. Cattle that are stabled in winter are more apt to be neglected in cleanliness than horses. It seems revolting that the animal from which we receive so much of the supplies of the table, butter, cheese, milk and cream, should be compelled, as they are in many instances, to lie on foul beds and breathe a foul atmosphere. Such causes must, of necessity injure the quality and lessen the quantity of these products. At the same time the animal suffers in condition. Cows are coming in, and they should have clean, dry beds, which with frequent cleaning and attention and good, wholesome air, will contribute much to the comfort of the animal and still more to the comfort of the owner and attendant, if they have any appreciation of the elements of enjoyment. As spring approaches stock requires more actual care than in midwinter. Water should be given them at least twice a day. They should have free access to salt two or three times a week. Every precaution should be taken to prevent them from reaching the pastures in an impoverished condition, so that it will require all the first part of summer for them to recuperate and take on the flesh they had at the commencement of winter.

THE AMOUNT OF MILK FOR A POUND OF BUTTER.

At a late meeting of the New York State dairymen's association, a creamery manager from Bradford, Penn., gave the following as his experience in determining the amount of milk required for a pound of butter. A mixed herd of twenty-one cows in the eight months from April to November, inclusive, 1882, averaged 202 pounds of butter per cow. Fourteen grade shorthorns in the same time averaged a pound of butter to twenty-four and one-half pounds of milk, and averaged 221 pounds of butter per cow. Fourteen Holsteins in the same time averaged a pound of butter from twenty pounds of milk, and averaged 235 pounds of butter per cow, and eleven Jerseys in the same time averaged a pound of butter from sixteen pounds of milk, and in ten months averaged 289 pounds per cow.

WHITE CLOVER FOR THE PASTURE.

There is nothing equal to white clover for sheep pasture, and in fact all kinds of farm stock do well on it. It springs up of itself on many farms that are suitable to its growth. Not one farmer in a thousand ever sowed white clover seed. If you are intending to seed down for permanent meadow or for pasture the coming spring, let your mixture of grass seeds contain one pound of this clover seed to the acre, and in a few years you will admit that you sowed better than you thought.

A Holstein and Shorthorn cross is said to produce an excellent dairy cow, and one good for many pounds of good beef when ready to turn off. This cross is being tested by some of the dairy counties in Iowa.

ARTICHOKES FOR HOG CHOLERA.

The Journal of Agriculture says that it is claimed by [illegible] County, Mo., that artichokes are a preventive of hog cholera [illegible]

[illegible] now dying or exposed to any disease by running in large herds, we would advise the use of any of the crops named and we should use them with perfect confidence in their virtues in the winter season. We have repeatedly asserted and here reiterate that the sanitary conditions surrounding the herd and the food which they eat are the main factors in the disease or healthfulness of the same.

We recommend the Minneapolis Tribune to all our readers.

Experiments on the Farm.

In general farm and garden culture the opportunities for investigation are endless, and the methods are simple. The trial of new seeds, the variation of time of planting and harvesting, to determine the best results; experiments with new or unusual crops, as seed-raising, new fodder crops, such as millet, sorghum, mustard and others; the effects of drainage, the value of special fertilizers, as lime, bone-dust, potash; the trial of the various remedies suggested for insect pests; the methods for preserving posts and other timber; the feeding and management of stock, ensilage, the production of new varieties of vegetables, fruits, grains, and fodder plants by selection, and it may be, by crossing the existing varieties, the invention or improvement of agricultural implements, etc.—these are a few of the many interesting branches of agricultural investigation. Consider next the methods of experiment. There are two great essentials at the foundation: exact measurement, and exact record. Measure everything, either by weight, by dimensions, or by duration of time, and keep a systematic record of everything. Add to this thoughtfulness, and you have the whole secret of experimental science. Think what you desire to ascertain, and direct the experiments accordingly. Think over the results of your experiments carefully, and draw your conclusions. In dealing with crops, the customary method is, to divide a sufficient area of land into carefully measured small plots, and use each plot, or a number, for any particular plant under trial. Where it is a question of soil or manures, always have the crop under test on at least one plot, the soil of which is left in the natural condition. This last serves as a basis of comparison with other plots that have been variously fertilized.—[X. Clark, in American Agriculturist for March.

George Alfred Townsend (Gath), the greatest living American correspondent, writes solely for the Minneapolis Tribune.

The "American Agriculturist" for March, 1885, is a step in advance of any previous issue of this remarkably successful Journal of the farm, garden and household. With over a hundred columns of carefully chosen and accurately prepared original, seasonable reading matter, fully illustrated with original and instructive engravings, this number of the American Agriculturist is a triumph in rural journalism, that only needs to be seen and read to be appreciated. Among the larger engravings are "We'll have that Bear," "Yes, March," "Pelham Bay Park," Portrait of the late veteran pomologist Charles Downing, "Octagonal Barn," "Stormy March," "A $2,600 Cottage," "The Old and the New Home," "Angus Bull," "Marguerite," "Beech," etc., and a number of new labor-saving devices for all departments of rural and household work. A score or more of well-known writers are represented with their best efforts in their respective departments. Dr. Geo. Thurber writes on new and rare plants, etc. Joseph Harris walks and talks in his taking away. Col. M. C. Weld brings the New Orleans Exposition before the readers. A. S. Fuller presents the claims of the beech tree. Dr. B. D. Halsted mentions a lost, sadly mistaken, etc. Col. F. D. Curtis on the [illegible]. Dr. D. D. Slade on animal ailments. Hon. J. S. 'ROUND HOME.

John Mullin, of Fergus Falls, took in the Favorite this week.

Progressive Euchre. The latest game out. On sale at Van Dyke & Co's.

M. R. Brown returned from a flying trip to Duluth and St. Paul on Friday.

John Moser has returned to civilization. He did not take in the big Fair.

Uncle Josh comes out "forninst" the bonds. Sober, sound and sensible as usual.

Are you going to paint? If you are save money by buying your paint of Van Dyke & Co.

Mr. A. Dewey, of Graceville, formerly of the Fisher Bulletin, was in the city on Friday last.

We oppose the bonds because they impose a heavy tax without an equivalent consideration.

Ed. Bivins has returned from his visit below. We are told that he intends to locate here.

The place to buy remnants is at the New York store.

We oppose the bonds because we cannot see where the county gets value received for its money.

Fine stationery a specialty at M. Van Dyke & Co's.

While skating, one day last week, Mrs. O. H. Lucken fell and dislocated her wrist. While painful the injury is not serious.

The smoothest joke we have heard of lately is using those smooth-glass paints on sale at Van Dyke & Co's for a little bit of—money.

Hack & Gallasch are selling at cost to make room for spring stock. For bargains call on them. 38tf.

To-day is the last day of grace and if the Legislature does not pass the railroad bill in some shape there will be a demand for an extra session next winter.

The meanest man in Crookston is the man who throws stones through people's windows. STILL, you can buy window glass at Van Dyke & Co's for a very little bit of money.

Mr. Ira D. Blanchard has contracted to put down a well for E. O. Flanders, and is hard at work at it. Mr. B. has a fine machine and we trust that he will do well in the business.

The printer made a mistake (it seems) in setting up the bond proposition. Let not the county make a greater by voting for them. Two of a kind, in that case would beat a full hand.

Van Dyke & Co. keep up with the times. Hence Progressive Euchre, the latest game out, is kept on sale.

The Minneapolis Tribune Co. are now established in their new quarters. The Tribune building is an eight story brick and stone building just completed at an expense of $215,000. The rentals exceed $21,000 per annum, and every room is occupied.

We have been one day under the new administration and have failed to discover the wonderful changes that we have been taught by our good Democratic brethren to expect. We don't believe that there is going to be such an awful shower after all!

Remember that parties wishing wall paper this spring will save money by calling on Van Dyke & Co.

W. W. Hartley was up from Brainerd last week in the interest of the proposition to bond for his road. W. W. is a genial, good-hearted fellow, but his request for us to give him a small fortune for no value received is too utterly absurd to deserve serious consideration.

Van Dyke & Co. have the largest stock of paints and oils in the city for sale at the lowest prices.

Every paper in Polk County, we believe, has declared against the bonds, except one, but some of them may "see light" on the subject and suddenly discover that they (a few of them) would be a good thing to take. A death bed conversion is not the safest thing to tie to.

Van Dyke & Co. have wall paper in great variety. Call and examine.

As far as we can learn from different localities in the county, the proposition for a million or so (in the aggregate) to build a road will be snowed under too deep to find on Tuesday next. There are a few on the east side who would like a railroad, but they do not feel like giving away their farms to get it. It is true they do need a road and the time is not far distant when they will have one and that too without giving their last cent for it. They feel that a road so got would benefit them little. From the north and west sides come reports of a lively opposition, because while they know that a COMPETING line would be of great benefit to the county as a whole, they know, also, that as long as railroads are permitted to pool there is no such thing as getting a competing line of road. Parties from outside and others among us who have "seen light," are working hard to secure the bonding of the county, and it may be well for all who do not wish to incur a heavy debt for nothing to devote one day to the purpose of downing the proposition. Those who are directly interested in bonding will leave no stone unturned to accomplish their object, and it behooves those who oppose to make it a personal matter and to make a personal effort to defeat the sham.

Wm. Anglim returned from a visit to St. Paul on Friday.

The new Norwegian church on Ash Street is being built rapidly.

It is said that Fred Puhler intends to start a Democratic paper in Ada.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

Pete Cornelius drives a fine team of colts. He says there is more money in stock than wheat.

Andrew Eiken rejoices in the arrival of a bright little miss who came to live at his house last week.

Jorgen B. Bjornson was committed for trial at the June term for slashing a man's throat at Fisher on Monday.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

"Gath's" letters, Wilkie Collins' and Miss Braddon's serial stories, can be found ONLY in the Minneapolis Tribune.

Markham has his delivery wagon painted up in fine style. But it don't cost his customers a cent more for his goods.

Work on the new bridge on Robert Street is commenced and it is intended to have the piles driven before the ice goes out.

Harry Wyand lost a valuable mule one day last week. The animal appeared all right until he was found dead in his stall.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

We learn that Mr. A. E. Brush, of Angus, has some thoroughbred Jersey Red, or Duroc hogs. Tally one more to the list of breeders of good stock in Polk County.

James Eiken has gone to La Cross to consult a noted physician in pulmonary complaints. Mr. E. has been failing for some time but his friends hope much from a change of climate.

The St. Paul Globe says: "The lumber interests of Camp & Walker are to be gradually closed out at Minneapolis and removed to Crookston, where the company has large interests."

A. L. Failor, of Grand Forks is over to spend a week or so enjoying city life. A. L. is one of the best pressmen in the Northwest of which fact the Grand Forks Herald bears daily witness.

John N. Ives, being interviewed as to why he liked St. Paul so well, remarked that it was the joke on the editor of the JOURNAL that he liked so well. There's just where we don't agree with him.

Don't forget that for $1.00 a year you can get "Gath's letters," serial stories from Wilkie Collins, "Ouida," Mary Elizabeth Braddon, Miss Oliphant and several other leading novelists of the day.

Some sneak thief entered the barn of A. J. Adams, in the town of Fanny, one night last week and stole 45 bushels of wheat that had been nicely cleaned for seed. Mr. A. thinks he has a clue to the perpetrator and will proceed to make it hot for him if he has.

Judging by Judge Ive's sign one would imagine that he would be butchered if he dropped in to see the Judge. But appearances are often deceiving. We have it on good authority that the Judge is not sanguinary if he does sport a meat market sign.

Bed flannels, plain and twilled guaranteed all wool, from 22 cents to 50 cents, at the New York store.

They now claim the ten per cent business was an "error of the printer." That's right! Charge up all of the ugly features in the case to the printer, then figure the bonds at 6 per cent compound interest and see how much that helps the matter.

A stranger was attacked with a violent hemorrhage of the lungs in front of the Favorite skating rink, one day last week. Dr. Van Dyke was summoned and the stranger so far recovered as to be able to take the train south. [P. S. This is no argument against roller-skating.]

You can buy gents' wool underwear at less than wholesale cost, at the New York store.

Otter Tail County gave a $200,000 bonus with interest for thirty years for connection with the Northern Pacific at Wadena and what good does it do her? She has to pay just the same freights as before because the rates are pooled and so it would be with Polk County in case this proposition carries. Is it worth while to add to our taxes in such a case?

The projectors of the B. & N. W. railroad say that the road will be built whether the bonds are voted or not. They say that the Northern Pacific Railroad is backing the proposed road and will build it anyhow. Well, nobody objects to that. If the Northern Pacific is behind the scheme they can afford to build it without help from us. They would charge us just as much for freight whether we helped them or not. This county is not able at present to supply all its needs, build its bridges and wagon roads, and school houses, to say nothing about giving bonuses to corporations that are not calculated to help us more than this line will. If the road will pay at all it should be built and run on its merits, the same as other enterprises requiring capital have to be. We believe that a road, having Duluth as its terminus would pay a big dividend and if this Brainerd road will pay as well it ought not to be a difficult matter to enlist capital. But Polk County cannot afford to pay the sum asked [illegible]

Wilkie Collins, Mary Elizabeth Braddon, Mrs. Oliphant and "Ouida," four of the greatest novelists of the age, write exclusively for the Minneapolis Tribune.

We have searched Crookston diligently and have found one man who is inclined to think that he is partly in favor of the proposition—and that man owns some land that he thinks the building of the road would enhance the value of. It may be a fact that lands along the line would be more valuable but is that any reason why the hundreds of farmers whose lands would not should be taxed for that purpose?

While the Duluth and Winnipeg railroad company has been very slow, apparently, yet there is much of which other roads whose interest it is to keep us penned in as we are too blame for their apparent negligence and now it is for the interest of those who oppose the building of a line direct to Duluth to have a road built that does not go there direct. The interests of Polk County are so directly identical with the D. & W.'s interests that we should not lay one straw in the way of building that line by voting these bonds. With a little encouragment from Polk County the D. & W. road could go ahead at once and it will doubtless do so in any event at an early day. We certainly do not wish to give the enterprise such a vigorous kick as the voting of these bonds would do.

The Lambertson Safety Burner.

That is the name of the new burner that C. P. Cahoon is introducing. He has sold many of them in this city and they give universal satisfaction. They are not only absolutely safe but they give a better, stronger light than any burner we have ever used and are far handier. They are so constructed as to render an explosion impossible and the moment a lamp is turned over the blaze is extinguished. Mr. Cahoon intends to remove to his farm soon and all who intend to have one should order at once. If you drop a postal into the post office Mr. C. will call.

Fertile Items.

FERTILE, FEB. 22, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL: After a long silence, (for which I suppose most of your readers are devoutly thankful) I will essay to send you a few items from our lively little burg and vicinity.

The grist mills are crowded, but still there is room for all, and farmers from abroad can have grists ground with little or no delay.

Messrs. Sohler & Co. are getting ready to put in rollers for a 75 barrel mill, and will put up this summer a 15,000 bushel elevator at Sohlerville, and buy the wheat raised here, for milling. They will require from 50,000 to 100,000 bushels of No. 1 Hard per year.

La Due & Co. (who are at their old stand again) have the lumber on the ground for a store at Sohlerville, and will build as soon as the weather will permit.

Mr. Fred Barholtz, our former landlord, will move from Wild Rice to this place again, into his hotel.

Mr. A. Gilmour, our druggist, will build a large building for his home.

We are to have another doctor here soon. There is plenty of room and work for both, as Dr. Nelson has more than he can attend to, with his other business.

We understand there are to be some arrests made to-day of the parties who left the babe at Mr. Engelstad's door, some time ago. We did not learn their names.

J. S. La Due and family have returned from southern Iowa, well pleased to get back to their old home again. They much prefer the steady cold to rain and mud.

School is moving along smoothly, with Mr. Peter Hanson at the head.

The young folks at the Grove are having some good literary and spelling entertainments.

Surmises of a wedding, on March 4th, of parties around here are quite freely expressed.

How did you like your valentine? The postal revenue was largely increased by St. Valentine's Day, at this post office.

La Due & Co. are buying lots of wheat. They are going to supply farmers around here with fence wire and binding twine this year.

We are pleased to learn of the convalescence of Mr. D. W. Haight, who has been very ill for some time. Dr. Frank Stuart, of Ada, has been attending him since his arrival from the east.

Several runaways on our streets last week. Boys, "better you go a leetle slow!"

One of our young men, who was going after his girl to attend a party, suddenly found himself flying over the front of his sleigh box. Fortunately he had presence of mind to let go of the lines, or the accident might have been worse. Don't drive so fiery a team next time, Charlie!

We learn that a very pleasant time was had by the neighbors, at the birthday party of Mrs. Luke Dillon.

So many young folks have been married this winter that I can scarcely keep track of them. Go in boys! "It is not good for man to be alone."

If any of your readers find anything interesting in our items we will send on what we can gather from time to time.

Yours, L.

Aldal Items.

ALDAL, Feb. 27th, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL: It is with regret we have to record the recent death of our promising young watchmaker, Mads Ellingson. He came to this country from Norway only about one year ago and established himself as a practical watchmaker, with office in Nelson & Opheim's store-building until harvest when he hired out to a farmer not far from Ada, where he was at work till late in the fall, when he came back to Aldal and went to work at his trade again, with office up stairs in K. Nelson's store. The exposure to the inclemency of the weather in the latter part of the fall seemed to have affected his lungs. The ultimate cause of his death was quick consumption.

Last Monday, February 23d, on complaint of N. R. Engelstad, of Garfield, a warrant was issued by Dr. A. Nelson for the arrest of Samuel Felsing, of Woodside, which was served by constable Andrew Opheim the same day. After being brought before justice A. Nelson, who was assisted by justice A. Gilmour, they examined the said S. Felsing upon the charge that he, on the 4th day of February, inst., assaulted with intent to kill an infant male child by leaving him in a basket in the night time outside N. R. Engelstad's house; the said S. Felsing was bound over to the District Court in the sum of $300.

On the evening of the 11th inst. a very pleasant and successful sociable was held in Knute Nelson's store for the benefit of our church. There was an auction of articles made by ladies of the Little Norway Congregation, oyster supper, &c. The festival was presided over by our pastor, the Rev. A. Ofstedal, with Dr. A. Nelson as auctioneer. The precise nett of the meeting, which was considerable, is not known to your correspondent.

An energetic effort is being made to start a public library and reading room in this community. Meetings have been held and committees on organization appointed, and already quite a number of members have signed the list. The entering fee is placed at $2. This is a very commendable enterprise and we heartily wish it grand success.

Knute Nelson is down on a short visit from Nelson & Opheim's lumber camp in the Thirteen Towns. So far they have manufactured about 500,000 feet of lumber this winter.

On the night of Feb. 24th, Dr. A. Nelson was called to Valley to attend on the unfortunate G. P. Blom, who was run over by his own team. He was conscious when the Dr. arrived, but could speak only a few words, and his limbs were entirely paralyzed, apparently caused by a heavy blow or weight on the spinal column just below the head. His left ear was, on the upper part, torn from the cheek, and both temples were considerably bruised. He lingered till about 5 o'clock in the morning, when he expired.

Our neighbor, Mr. Askel Morvik, is happy over the arrival of a permanent guest in his family—a boy.

The weather does not look much like February and to-day's thaw is ruining our sleighing. Y.

A Card of Thanks.

The undersigned being unable in any other way to recompense Dr. Dunlop for his great kindness, untiring care and skill in treating and caring for us in our time of sickness and want, do hereby most heartily thank him and hope that God's blessing may always attend him. MRS. B. WALSTAD.

Dakota Farmer on Flax Raising.

The following communication gives some good practical points for flax raising in the Northwest. A correspondent of the Grand Forks Herald says:

"Sow best Russian seed upon spring breaking (immediately after breaking to allow seed to have good start over weeds) and harrow well, also lightly after seeding, but rolling is preferred. Sow about 20 quarts to the acre and it should not be put in later than June 10th, with broadcast seeder without hoes. Cut when the buds are brown, with an ordinary harvester with straight knife, not using the binder as flax does not need binding after a day's cutting. Have two rows placed in one to make room sufficient for wagon to pass between (as the flax shells very easily and it is necessary to use all proper precaution to save the seed,) then collect with wagon with a man on each side to load, but no loader on wagon to trample the flax; then place in stack same as hay, and thresh with flax attachments the thresher, from the stack. The flax straw can be used as fodder for stock, and I would give it the preference for cattle, over hay. Ordinary wet weather will not hurt flax the same as wheat and in my estimation raising of flax is preferable to wheat. The above is my experience in raising flax in Iowa. The yield averaged 23 bushels and I think the soil of Northern Dakota is specially adapted to raising flax, and intend to sow 200 acres the coming season.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 23 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 76 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

GRANT'S PITIABLE CONDITION.

The Recovery of the ex-President Now Conceded to Be Impossible—Insomnia Being Added to His Other Afflictions, He Is a Constant Sufferer—Talks with His Physicians and Son Fred.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, Feb. 28.—The announcement of Gen. Grant's alarming and probable fatal illness to-day caused great surprise among his numerous friends. Anxious inquiries were made as to his condition, coupled with expressions of hope that the reports had been exaggerated and that the general would soon be restored to health. It is now believed that the malady from which Gen. Grant is suffering cannot but have a fatal termination, and also that his dissolution may take place within a very short time, a few months being the maximum period of his life, with the chances that a shorter time will end his earthly career. All the physicians in attendance upon him concur in this view of the case, and the general's immediate family have abandoned all hope of his recovery. His wife and all his children, with the exception of Mrs. Sartoris, who has been cabled for from England, are constantly in attendance upon the general, and their deep sorrow is intensified by a realization of the fact that his sufferings are of the most intense character. He can only have temporary relief while sleeping, and even this during the past few nights has become an impossibility, as insomnia has been added to his other complications, so that he is practically an almost continurl sufferer. Death from cancer may not occur immediately, but it is sure to come in a very short time and at a moment when least expected. Gen. Grant presents a pitiable appearance at present. His face and head are bandaged, his eyes are sunken and his face wears a sallow hue, while his hair and beard have whitened greatly. This is the worst form of his disease, and has brought about loss of appetite. His doctors assert that he is subsisting largely upon his vital tissues, and he is growing preceptibly weaker day by day. The trouble is an ulceration of the soft tissues of the roof of the mouth with hardness and soreness at the base of the tongue. It is with great difficulty that the general opens his mouth to admit food. He suffers the most excruciating torture from neuralgia also, but scarcely a murmur escapes him. The general knows he must die, and yet he does not want to believe it. There were many callers at the house to-day, but they were not admitted to the general's presence, and after warm expressions of sympathy with the members of his family they withdrew. Throughout his illness Gen. Grant has labored faithfully at his literary tasks. His history of the rebellion is now practically completed, and the magazine articles for the Century are also finished.

RELATED BY FRED GRANT.

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—In regard to Gen. Grant's health, Col. Fred Grant said to a Post reporter this afternoon:

My father is a very sick man. There is no use longer denying the fact. We have made every effort to keep the facts from the public, because we knew that as soon as it should become known that he was dangerously ill there would be a hundred letters coming in with every mail, and this would only excite him and make his recovery less hopeful. My father he had little rest for the past few nights. He was up and about his room for a little while yesterday, and we hope to get him up again to-day; but he is suffering constant pain in the ear and head. For any facts concerning the nature of his disease, I refer you to his physician.

The doctors who are attending him are Dr. Fordyce Baker, Dr. J. H. Douglas and Dr. H. B. Sands of this city, and Dr. T. M. Merker of Philadelphia. Dr. Douglas said:

I am no wise responsible for the rose-colored report that appeared in a medical journal last week. Two days before the report was published I had a conversation with Dr. Sands at Gen. Grant's house. We both decided that the cancerous growth at the root of the tongue was hardening and steadily growing worse. A microscopical examination by an expert proved beyond doubt that the case was one of malignant epithelial growth. Gen. Grant is a very sick man, and I think there is little or no hope that he will recover. He is breaking down, but has displayed much courage. In less than a month he has done as much as six or eight hours work a day, but has had little sleep for the past eight days and we have tried to keep the knowledge of his true condition from the general because he had so many other troubles to bear. I have, all along, maintained that his trouble is from a cancerous growth at the root of the tongue, caused no doubt by excessive smoking. Every time he speaks or breathes or eats this is disturbed. It is difficult to treat it for that reason. There have been times when the growth has been temporarily checked, but it has never been arrested and is steadily increasing. There has been considerable loss of tissue of the soft palate. He takes nourishment every day in liquid form. He cannot eat solid food because he has lost all his teeth. They were extracted in the hope of easing the pain in his face. This pain, although it resembles neuralgia, is not that pure and simple, but it is a reflection pain caused by cancer in the throat. He has been suffering from severe pain in the right ear and on the top of the head. To ease this his head is kept wrapped in hot flannels. I cannot say how near the end is. He may live months yet, as men suffering from this disease have done; but I do not think there is any hope that he will ever recover.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 28.—Private letters received here confirms the alarming news published by the Philadelphia Times in regard to Gen. Grant's health. He is now recognized as an invalid, and his condition is critical. He is confined to his room, sees but few of his oldest frinds, and is much broken and depressed in spirits.

DR. DOUGLAS' STATEMENT.

Dr. Douglas was asked this afternoon to describe the condition of his patient. He said:

Gen. Grant is a very sick man. His body and hands are greatly emaciated, and he is losing flesh daily. He cannot recover from the disease, and his death is only a question of time. He is losing his grip on life, and has not the force and energy to stand up against the many blows to his strength. He may live for weeks or months. The progress of the disease may be put in abeyance by natural forces, though at present it is advancing rapidly. It is not likely that the cancer will choke him, it will kill him by exhaustion. It is impossible to give him stimulants, as they injure his throat. Gen. Grant came to me first on Oct. 22 last and asked me to examine his throat. I did so, and saw at once that he was suffering from a cancer. I did not wish to frighten him by telling him this, so I said he had an epithelial trouble. He asked me if it was not a cancer, and I told him the disease was of a cancerous character in a mild form. It probably arose from excessive smoking, combined with other causes. He had been suffering with it since June 1. I at once told his family of the nature of the disease, and they know how serious the case is. I think the general also knows it now. He was in the habit of coming down to see me pretty much every morning. The cancer continued to grow worse, although its growth has not been steady. The hardened part of the cancer is at the root of the tongue on the right side. The ulceration is on the soft palate just above where the tonsils lie. The loss of the teeth has prevented Gen. Grant from chewing solid food. He eats minced meat, terrapin, and other soft food, and has no difficulty in swallowing it. Indeed, he swallows more readily than he did two months ago. This is probably due to the fact that ulceration has relaxed some of the membranes. He takes a good deal of nourishment, although he does not want to eat, as the effect of the disease is to destroy all appetite. The bad weather of late has affected him unfavorably. He caught a slight cold. The cancer is what is called a "benign cancer," and if it were anywhere else on the body, we could at least hold it in abeyance. As it is, an operation would accomplish no good. It would be quite impossible to cut it out from the root of the tongue. Within the past ten days there has been a great change for the worse. The mind has a great influence on such diseases, and I believe that distress of mind caused by the failure of the relief bill in congress injured the general very much. Two weeks ago he was feeling much better. Then came the defeat of the bill, and he seemed to lose heart. On Feb. 18 I found that the ulceration had extended very rapidly, and there was a perforation of the folds of the membranes which constitute the interior border of the tonsils cavity. The ulceration had burrowed down until it came out near the root of the tongue. The cancer does not hurt the general unless it is rudely touched. If he talks very long he gets fatigued, and then it hurts him. On Wednesday last he was quite cheerful, and worked most of the day at his book. Almost all night he suffered great pain in the right ear. Hot flannels applied to the head stopped the pain, but he did not sleep until morning. Thursday night was another bad night, although he did not suffer such severe pain. On Friday night he had no pain, and slept brokenly.

HIS CONDITION UNCHANGED LAST NIGHT.

NEW YORK, March 1.—At midnight Gen. Grant's condition was unchanged. The general was up during the day as usual, but his physicians and friends have given up all hope of his recovery. His doctors say he is gradually sinking. There were many callers at the house to-day. The Tribune says: "Was the general alarmed at the publicity given to his case, and on finding out his true condition?"

"I am not in a position to answer questions as to what is done in Gen. Grant's house, but I presume all accounts of his condition that might produce an unfavorable mental impression were kept from him. I saw him about 10 o'clock to-night, and he was then free from pain, and gave promise of passing a comfortable night."

"The condition of Gen. Grant remains about the same. He is neither better nor worse than he has been for several days," said Col. Fredrick Grant last evening. Who the callers were yesterday, or from whom any letters or telegrams were received concerning Gen. Grant's condition, Col. Grant refused to disclose. Dr. Douglass, said: "Gen. Grant passed a comfortable night, slept well and had little pain, and during the day was up and around and enjoyed himself with his family. The general ate more heartily yesterday than he has for several days."

DR. BARKERS' VIEWS.

The New York World of Tuesday will have the following:

Dr. Fordyce Barker, family physician, said yesterday: "These cases turn out so differently from what we expect, often, it is not wise for me to predict how long Gen. Grant will live. I have not seen him for a week. I was present at a consultation of physicians and thought then the case was a very serious one. I have great faith in Dr. Douglass, because he was successful in many cases I referred to him. That is how I came to interest Gen. Grant in having treatment at his hands. The surgeons, Dr. Markoe and Dr. Sands, were called in because it was thought advisable to consider the subject of an operation. The location of the disease, however, was found to be such that a surgical operation was out of the question. There was no way of getting at the ulceration. The general's throat will not be closed up by the growth of the diseased parts. He will waste away because of the drain upon his system and wearing of the disease upon his nervous forces. I am sorry to say the trouble is seldom cured, and there seems to be little hope for his life. We told Gen. Grant he might smoke half a cigar, but in one week from that time he had ceased to use tobacco in any form. It was thought best not to irritate the throat with tobacco, but to say nicotine caused the cancer is going too far. The general's will power in giving up his cigar, especially when he had been in the habit of smoking so many a day is remarkable. He has not smoked a cigar since Oct. 28.

GEN. GRANT'S LITERARY WORK.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, March 1.—A member of the Century company has said to-night in regard to Gen. Grant's literary work:

"It is not true, as has been stated, that the arrangements for Gen. Grant's articles were made after the failure of Grant & Ward. The negotiations were completed long before that time, and the articles have been in the hands of the Century company since last August."

"Do you think that Gen. Grant's book will be profitable?"

"Yes, he ought to make $100,000 from the work without much trouble. A publisher named Webster is to do the work, but I think Gen. Grant would have done much better if he had gone to some larger house. The person he has selected is one whom Mark Twain took up to do his work, mainly, no doubt, because he was rather obscure. Of course he may be a good enough publisher, but the point is that Grant's book ought to be handled by a large firm, who could have placed it at once before every buyer in the land."

ENGLISH SYMPATHY.

LONDON, March 1.—The Standard says Gen. Grant's illness will cause universal distress. The sympathy of the public will be intensified by the unfortunate condition of the general's financial affairs, and the knowledge that though sorely wounded in many ways, he is too proud to complain.

WESTERN CATTLE FOR ENGLAND.

The Projects of Mr. Frewen for Shipping Live Stock Across the Ocean, to Be Fattened and Killed There.

CHICAGO, Special Telegram, March 1.—Morton Frewen, at the head of the largest English cattle syndicate in the West, controlling an immenso territory in Montana, was seen by a reporter at the Leland hotel last evening. The gentleman's scheme has been to ship Montana live stock by rail, lake and ocean to England and then fatten for this market. His first idea was to send them by the Canadian Pacific railway through Canada, but the dominion authorities strenuously objected. His next and present plan is to ship by rail to Duluth, thence to Buffalo through the lakes and from there by rail and steamer via New York. Both of these were, however, dependent upon the procurement of the development of the "Animal contagion act," now in force in England, and to the abrogation of which he has been giving his time and attention for months past. Mr. Frewen has brought the matter to the attention of the privy council and anticipates that whenever a political change is made and England settles down to a season of comparative quiet, action will then be taken and the repeal of the bill secured. In the meantime Mr Fremen is busy with another project that he is carrying on successfully. Fattening cattle, in his opinion, is largely a question of artificial warmth, a combination of feeding and shelter, and acting on this theory he has established large stables at Superior City, selecting this point because lumber could be procured at a nominal price and grain at as low a figure as anywhere in the country. To this place he ships the four-year olds from the Montana range and put them into condition for the Eastern market. And right here Chicago is given the go by. Mr. Frewen says that the stock yards and market here are largely controlled by corporations, which set their own price, and any other outlet is preferable if it can be found. This is secured by way of the lake to Buffalo, the latter being made a distributing point if necessary. Cattle can be shipped from Duluth by the lake route at the rate of $3.50 per head, or about two-thirds less than by way of Chicago, also avoiding the shrinking and bruising inevitable to a long journey by rail. He is investing a large amount of money in this scheme, and looks forward to success. If it comes, his example will be followed, and the Northern cattle trade will give Chicago the go by. Mr. Frewen is on his way to England, leaving on the next Cunard steamer.

The Gould Quo Warranto Suits.

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 1.—Gov. John C. Brown, general solicitor of the Gould railroad system, in an interview says that the quo warranto suits instituted in the Missouri supreme court against Jay Gould and associates for violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting common control of parallel railroad lines, were inspired by President Plant, of the Southern Express company, to compel Gould to admit that company to express privileges over the Southwestern Gould system at Plant's own terms. The Southern Express some time since was put off the Iron Mountain road, and Plant at once commenced suit which he won. This and two other suits are now pending on appeal to the United States supreme court. The Gould counsel refused to agree to a continuance, whereupon the quo warranto proceedings were begun, to force a compromise. Speaking for Gould, Gov. Brown says that there will be no compromise made, but if the federal court decides that the Southwestern system must admit Plant's company, the Pacific express will at once invade all the territory of the Plant company. He denies that there is any parallelism between the Missouri Pacific, Missouri, Kansas & Texas and Iron Mountain, and declares that there can be no violation of the constitution as long as the maximum rates of transportation fixed by law are observed. Hence the quo warranto suits cannot stand.

Nellie Horan's Defense.

MILWAUKEE, Special Telegram, March 1.—From a Whitewater gentleman who is interested in the case of Nellie Horan, the girl accused of poisoning her sister and other members of her family, and whose trial at Elkhorn has begun, the PIONEER PRESS correspondent learned to-day the line of defense which Miss Horan's lawyers will follow. The first point they will present is that there did not exist any motive for the alleged poisoning; secondly, they will charge the chemist who examined the dead sisters with incompetency, and attempt to prove by the testimony of other experts that the proofs given by the chemist for the existence of poison are no proofs at all; thirdly, that the work of embalming dead bodies by the injection of certain chemicals leave effects upon the viscera of human bodies similar to those left by the use of strychnine; and, lastly, that the package of poison purchased from the drug store by Miss Horan before her sisters' death, was delivered into the hands of the sheriff without having been opened.

ELKHORN, March 1.—In the Horan case the jury has not been completed. It is thought the work of selecting one will be finished so that the trial will begin on Tuesday, at the latest.

The Result of Whisky.

NORTHFIELD, Minn., Special Telegram, March 1.—About 3 o'clock a man named Kingman shot a comrade named Murphy. Several young men were on a hand car on the Cannon Valley railroad just below this city when Kingman, who was partially intoxicated, threatened to shoot into a house. He was prevented and put the revolver in his pocket, but suddenly drew it out, when it accidentally exploded, driving the ball through Murphy's arm into his body. Murphy is in a critical condition, as the ball has not been found. Kingman has served a part of a term in Stillwater but was pardoned. He has not been arrested.

A PROCESS OF MAKING SHOT.

How the Globules are Formed in Their Fall Through the Tower and Then Assorted.

From the New York Tribune.

Every person who has walked about the lower part of this city must have noticed a high, round tower, as high as the roadway of the bridge, which rears itself high above the surrounding buildings and has small windows at different places. The tower is in Center street, near Worth street, and belongs to the Colwell Lead company. There are several of those towers in this city. They are places built especially for the casting and manufacture of shot. The tower rises to a height of 176 feet, and is fifty feet in diameter at the base. It diminishes in diameter as it ascends, being about thirty feet across the top. It is divided into several stories. A circular stairway made of iron, extends to the summit, giving access to the several stories. Great height is essential for casting, as the lead must cool in the descent, and thus assume a spherical shape. If not, it would flatten when it strikes the water into which it falls.

The first method is making what is called "temper." This is a mixture of arsenic and lead. The mixture is melted in large kettles and is constantly skimmed and stirred. It is cast in bars, the same as lead. When the temper is made it is carried to the top floor, where there are kettles and a furnace for melting it. The temper is mixed with the lead, as pure lead would assume various shapes in casting, but when mixed with the temper in the proportion of three tons of lead to one ton of temper, it takes the shape of globules when it is cast.

The casting pans are large colanders, round pans with holes perforated in the bottom. The casting is all done on the top floor, and the colander is suspended over an opening in the floor, which goes through the entire height of the building to the ground, where there is a well of water. The lead is melted in large kettles, and is dipped out and poured into the colander with ladles which have long handles. It oozes through the holes in the bottom of the colander and falls through the opening to the ground floor into the well. The shot is taken out of the well by small buckets fastened to an endless belt, which runs over a wheel, which carries it from the well up to a long hot metal table. Here the shot is constantly stirred by men with long rakes, and the heat rapidly dispels the moisture, and the shot soon becomes perfectly dry.

It is taken from the "drying table" to the "screeners," a series of tables with narrow openings between them, the table being set at a slight angle. If the shot is round and perfect, it rolls rapidly along these tables, skipping the openings, until it reaches a box at the extreme end, into which it falls. If it is imperfect, it cannot roll fast, and falls into the openings, under which boxes are placed.

The shot then goes to the "separators" which are a series of drawers, not unlike a bureau, which rocks backward and forward by machinery. The shot is poured into the upper drawer, which has an iron bottom, parforated with holes of a certain size. The second drawer has holes of a smaller size, and so on down to the lowest drawer, the bottom of each drawer being perforated with holes of a size smaller than those in the drawer above it. The backward and forward motion throws the shot from side to side, letting all the shot the size of the holes or smaller, pass through into the second drawer, while all larger than the holes remain in the drawer. The same is repeated down to the lowest drawer, so that each drawer contains a smaller size of shot than the one immediately above it.

The next process is "polishing." The shot is put into irregular shaped iron boxes, which continually revolve. When the box is nearly full, powdered black lead is put in. The irregular motion of the box throws the shot from side to side and the black lead is so ground into it that it cannot be rubbed off. And it is this that gives it the beautiful shiny appearance.

How he Was Treated.

Mr. Warren Lee Goss in his "Recollections of a Private" in the Century Magazine, illustrates the efforts made in the army to disipline a man into a machine, and drill out of him the ordinary habits and freedom of citizen life. The colonel of the regiment was a severe disciplinarian, and the old drill-officer (whom he calls Sergeant Hackett) in charge of the recruits, was a perfect martinet, and rather impatient and profane. One day, Goss went to the colonel to complain of the sergeant for swearing at him. "Knowing that swearing was a breach of discipline, he called upon the colonel as one gentleman would call upon another. After the usual salute, he commenced his complaint by saying,—

"'Colonel, Mr. Hackett has'—— The colonel interrupted me angrily and with fire in his eye, exclaimed,—

"'Mister!' There are no 'misters' in the army.'

"'I thought, sir'—— I began apologetically.

"'Think? think?' he cried. 'What right have you to think? I do the thinking for this regiment! Go to your quarters.'

"I did not tarry. There seemed to be no common on which he and I could argue questions of personal etiquette. But I should do injustice to his character as a commander if I failed to illustrate another manner of reproof which he sometimes applied.

"One day, noticing a corporal in soiled gloves, he said, 'Corporal, you set a bad example to the men with your soiled gloves. Why do you do so?'

"'I've had no pay, sir, since entering the service, and can't afford to hire washing.'

"The colonel drew from his pocket a pair of gloves spotlessly white, and handing them to the corporal said, 'Put on those; I washed them myself.'

"This was an unforgotten lesson to the whole regiment, that it was a soldier's duty to attend himself to his personal neatness."

It is a fixed law among the Apache Indians that a man and his mother-in-law must never visit each other or see each other if it can possibly be avoided.

The admiral commanding the United States steamer Lancaster, which has arrived at Tangier to support the demand of the United States consul for the release of two persons unjustly imprisoned, gave notice to the government of Morocco on the 21st that twenty days would be granted within which the prisoners should be liberated and reparation given, and that if within that time the demands were not acceded to the admiral would denounce the Madrid convention of 1880 and refer the matter to the government at Washington for further action.

A Chancellor's Opinion.

Hon. James Harlan, ex-Vice Chancellor of Louisville, Ky., a brother of Justice Harlan, U. S. Supreme Court, says of St. Jacobs Oil: "I use it, and I know full well whereof I speak in pronouncing it a most extraordinary cure for all that is claimed for it by its proprietors. Every family should have it."

Lieut. James W. Pope, Fifth infantry, has been appointed captain and assistant quartermaster, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Capt. A. F. Rockwell, to be major. The other vacancy, resulting from the retirement of Capt. T. B. Hunt, has been filled by the appointment from civil life of William H. Crook of Indiana.

"Fools Rush in Where Angels Fear to Tread."

So impetuous youth is often given to folly and indiscretions; and, as a result, nervous, mental, and organic debility follow, memory is impaired, self-confidence is lacking; at night bad dreams occur, premature old age seems setting in, ruin is in the track. In confidence, you can, and should write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the author of a treatise for the benefit of patients, and describe your symptoms and sufferings. He can cure you at your home, and will send you full particulars by mail.

"Is there no balm in Gilead?
Is there no physicians there?"

Thanks to Dr. Pierce, there is a balm in his "Golden Medical Discovery"—a "balm for every wound" to health, from colds, coughs, consumption, bronchitis, and all chronic, blood, lung and liver affections. Of druggists.

The attorney for the Des Moines river land settlers bill fell dead just as his bill had passed the senate.

Best French Brandy, Smart-Weed, Jamaica Ginger and Camphor Water, as combined in Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-Weed, is the best remedy for colic, diarrhœa, cholera morbus, dysentery or blood-flux; also, to break up colds, fevers and inflammatory attacks if used early.

A Hundred Years might be spent in search of a remedy for Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Hay Fever, without finding the equal of Ely's Cream Balm. It is applied with the finger. Being pleasant and safe, it supersedes the use of all liquids and snuffs. Its effect is magical. It relieves at once and cures many cases which baffle physicians. Price 50 cents at druggists. 60 cents by mail. Ely Bros., Oswego, N. Y.

The La Crosse public building passed the house, the limit of the appropriation being fixed at $100,000.

Catarrhal Headache.

I think Ely's Cream Balm is the best remedy for catarrh I ever saw. I never took anything that relieved me so quickly, and I have not felt as well for a long time. I used to be troubled with severe headaches two or three times a week, but since using the Balm have only had one and that was very light compared with former ones.—J. A. Alcorn, Agent, U. P. R. R. Thousands Hastened to their Graves.

By relying on testimonials written in vivid glowing languages of some miraculous cures made by some largely puffed up doctor or patent medicine has hastened thousands to their graves; the readers having almost insane faith that the same miracle will be performed on them, that these testimonials mention, while the so-called medicine is all the time hastening them to their graves. Although we have of testimonials of the most wonderful cures, voluntarily sent us, we do not publish them, as they do not make the cures. It is our medicine, Hop Bitters, that make the cures. It has never failed and never can. We will give reference to any one for any disease similar to their own if desired, or will refer to any neighbor, as there is not a neighborhood in the known world but can show its cures by Hop Bitters.

A Losing Joke.

'A prominent physician of Pittsburg said to 'a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill health, and of his inability to cure 'her, jokingly said: "Try Hop Bitters!" The 'lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, 'from which she obtained permanent health. 'She now laughed at the doctor for his joke, 'but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost 'him a good patient.

Fees of Doctors.

The fee of doctors at $3.00 a visit would tax a man for a year, and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.

MOLLY'S PERIL.

How the Danites Tracked a Husband Who Had a Pretty Wife.

From the San Francisco Argonaut.

It was the close of a pleasant day, when a party of sportsmen were sitting about the door of a substantial farmhouse, chatting with our host, a sturdy specimen of manhood, whose winter of life was "frostly, but kindly." One of the party had started on the "Mormon question," when another, pointing to the old man, said:

"Adams was a pioneer Mormon, and can tell you all about it. Ask him why he apostatized."

No sooner suggested than acted upon and old John, smiling good-humoredly, consented to give us the story. Would that I could give the quaint phraseology, the rough yet tender pathos, and the kindly humor which gave the narrative its great charm. The former I will preserve so far as I can, and "tell the tale as it was told to me."

"Ya-as, I hev been a saint," began Adams, and continued: "I went to Utah in '48, and walk't most of the way. Ye see I was a young feller then, an' hed a good farm an' a purty wife, who hain't got over being purty yet, ter my way o' thinkin.' My heart was jist tied up in her, an' we was happy and comf'tibul when one o' them Mormon mishoners cum along, an' he was the slickest talkin' coon ye iver heerd, an' he put up at my house. He didn't have no pus nor scrip'; but that wan't nothin;' thar was dum few as cum trompin' along thar in them days as did hev much of enythin.' I tuk 'em in all a-same, and we gin 'em what we had.

"This feller said he was a saint of the Lord, an' he wanted ter preach the gospil in our parts, kase thar's whar his mishun was. I didn't hev no scrupils; an' the woman—wall, ye know how wimmen is about preachers—she said 'Let him stay,' an' he stopped along thar fur nigh onto a month, a-preachin' an' a-tellin' about the glorees o' Zion an' the bliss o' the Kingdom, an' all sich stuff, till he got the wimmin mos' crazy.

"Now, I wun't say but how I was sort o' taken in 'ith the doctrine myself; anyway, I was taken in an' dun fur on the Mormon question. I was convarted. But I'll say this 'ere, as how my wife done as much torts it as the mishuner. She'd gi'en right in to the doctrine, an' she uset to talk to me about bein' wan o' the Lord's chosen, an' a-goin' with Joseph, and Hyrum, an' the rist o' the Saints, right along on the trail to glory. So I sold out the farm fur cash, and Molly and me we movet over into Nauvoo, whar we hed ter go thro' the endowment biz'ness, kase we wa-ant married fur time an' etarnity in 'the world.'

"Gents, ye mayn't think it, but my ole 'oman was jist too purty for enything them days. She'd brown, shiny har, an' great, big hazel eyes, red cheeks, an' a little mouth as was jist a livin' kiss, and thar wa-an't nuthen' cud beat her on shape, nuther. I jist loved that gal, for she wa-ant much more'n a gal then."

The old man looked around to see whether his "ole oman" had heard his praiseful reminiscences, but that comely dame had disappeared early in the course of the story, and if within hearing was not in sight, so, after draining a mug of cider, Adams proceeded:

"I don't s'pose thar's eny use in goin' over the Nauvoo biz'nis. No two he's iver tole it the same. Eny way, Joseph an' Hyrum wus kilt at Carthege, an' iv'ry thin' wus in a mix till Brigham Young tuk holt, an' then things jumpt, fust to Winter Quarters an' then to Salt Lake. The story's bin tolt of'en. Did iver eny wan o' ye drive an ox-team about a thousand or twelve hundert miles? It's bad 'nough, eny way, but over them sandy ridges an' hollers, day arter day, the burnin' sun pourin' down, an' the clouds o' alkali dust an' fine sand fillin' up yer eyes, an' nose, an' mouth; mighty little water, an' that bad, an' durn short rations. Then at night the cold northers cum rushin' along with nuthin' to break 'em, an' the kayotees yelpin' an howlin' fit ter set ye crazy, an', on top 'v all, the fear o' Injins. Wal, it jist tuk the spirit outen the best o' the men, an' bruk the wimmin's hearts all up. I cud see 'em wan arter t'other growin' paler an' thinner, an' mo' an' mo' worn out an' dispairin, 'til, wus'n all, my Molly, my purty Molly, got peeket an' the color wint outen her cheeks, an' her eyes war dull, an' her mouth, that sweet little mouth, got drawd at the corners an' sad, an her har wur sun-tanned and faded, an' she got sort o' careless in her dress, cummin' o' livin' in a wagin so long, an' then ye see, gents, we war expectin' a babby. It war hard on Molly. I sort o' think I car'd more for her jist then n' I iver did.

"Sometimes she'd cum out an' walk along side me, an' she'd talk about the ole farm an' the ole times, wen we was a-cortin', an' her v'ice 'd git sort o' sad an' mo'nful, an her eyes'd luk jist as tho' [illegible] didn't see nuthin' nur nobody, all [illegible] with big tears, but she wouldn't cry. An' wen' we'd stop at nights she'd cum an' sit in my arms, an' put her head on my shoulder, an' cry out, so weak an' pitiful, 'Oh, John! ain't we never goin' to git thar?'

"Wal, wen we were in the Rockies the babby cum, an' I tho't as how it'd be a comfort to Molly, but it didn't stay long, poor little gal, an' I buried it in a pleasant green valley, war we left it, as Molly said, to be taken car' of by Him as calls the little children to Him, tho' it's mighty little eny Mormon children hears about a Christ fur them—an' I don' think," said the old man parenthetically, "as I'd car' much about hevin' a gal o' mine raised Mormon; thar' don't seem to be no holt on 'em—the gals, I mean—to make 'em keep straight. But that's neither here nur thar, kase it ain't in my story, but it's truth all same.

"Fin'ly we got to Salt Lake, an' I left Molly thar to git risted an' went up no'thards an' took up some land, an' arter four or five months I got things in shape an' brot Molly up. An' it was my ole Molly, with bright face and laffin mouth at wint singin' aroun' that air dobee shanty an' made it hum fur me, an' a happy wun.

"Wall, the lan' give good craps, an' my stock was gittin' more 'n more, an' I was look't on as a rizin' man in Isarel, an' thar was only wan thin' as bothered me—but I niver let on to Molly, fur I wuddn't a' tolt her fur a good bit. Ye see, those durnd biships an' elders kept arter me to go inter the celeschil marriage biz'nis, an' I wuddn't do it. They kept a-sayin' as how Molly didn't hev no more children, an' how it was my dooty to bild up the Kingdom. Fin'ly I got mad an' tolt 'em that ef my bildin' up the Kingdom ment takin' another 'oman, they cud figger on my doin' mighty little of the work. But they kept at it fur three or four years till I up an' siz to Brigham that ef I heered eny more about it I'd just pull up an' leave the Kingdom altergether. It made the old man purty mad, but he didn't say much; that wa-an't his way—he did things; an' wot he did ter me was ter send me on a mishun. Thar wasn't no use kickin', so I jist got reddy an' started fur my field o' labor.

"It don't make no matter whar it was but I don't think the Lord prospered my work. Thar was more kicks nor ha'pence, an' I was thinkin' a good sight more o' Molly than mishuns. I never heerd from her, fur mails was skeerce in them days, but I was alluz a-thinkin' about her, an' wondrin' how she was out thar all alone, an' wen my two years cum to an end ye bet I startid west sharp set.

"Goin' across the plains I jist kept a-dreemin' to myself how the house look't an' how Molly was, an' how s'prised she'd be ter see me agin, an' a-wond'rin' whether a babby we sort o' s'pected when I cum away had arriv. An' so the time wint on until we was past the Rockies, wen wan day a stranger rid up an' sort o' looked over the people an' gives me o' long stare, then he wint off a-talkin' with the cap'n—he was a Gentile—ev'ry wancet'n a wile lookin' torts me. I didn't s'picion enythin' at fust, but somehow didn't feel easy in my mind about the way the stranger looked at me, an' wen he startet off west'ards I was glad to get shet o' him. But I was clean tuk back wen the cap'n cum an' call't me out o' heerin' and sez:

"'Wot, hev ye bin a-doin' ter git the Danites arter ye?'

"'Doin'?' sez I; 'I haint bin doin nuthin'.'

"'Look a-here, John,' sez he, 'I've took a fancy ter ye, an' I don't want ter see ye git hurt, but them devils is arter ye, an' ye'd better make yerself mighty skeerce if ye don't want a hole in yer skin. I tell ye this train aint healthy. They've got ye mark't.'

"I didn't skeer very much in them days, but when I heerd that the cole sweat bruk out all over me, fur I know't ef that gang got arter me I was a gone coon. Thin I thot o' Molly, an' I jist gritted my teeth an' swore I'd see her agin, enyway, an' find out what the row was.

"I lookt mighty keerful to my arms that night; I hed a good rifle an' two good pistils, an' I hed a fust-class American hoss. I wasn't afeard o' Ingins, an' I know't most iv'ry trail over the mountains; so I jist laid my plan, an', without sayin' a word to eny wan, I laid in some rations, an' that night, wen iv'ry thin' was dark an' quiet, I lit out torts the mountains. It was purty sharp work gettin' out without enybody knowin', but I did, an' at sun-up I was miles away an' clos't to the Wasatch Range, makin' fur a pass I know't that 'ud bring me out clos't to my ranch.

"Arter I got inter the hills I went slower, sparin' my hoss, but hurr'in' all the same, an' about sundown the third day arter leavin' the train, I look't down the kenyon an' thar was my farm below me.

"Now, ye see they was specting o'me at Salt Lake fust, and ef they was layin' fur me it 'ud be on the road thar, an' I know't I was clar ahead o' the train, but thar wa-an't no use in bein' too fast, so I jist pickets my hoss in a side kenyon and laid low till dark, when I started down the pass an' crawls up ter my own house jist like an Ingin or a thief. I don't know wot made me do it, but somehow I hed an idee the quieter I kep the better it ud be for me. An' I was jist about as right as a man cud be, for thet time eny how.

"Thar was a light in wan o' the rooms that shun tho' the window, and I crawl't up and lookt in, and thar was a sight as jist tuk away my breath. Thar was Molly, an' thar was suthin' else, too; an' wen I see that little thin in a sort o' box, I nearly hollert right out, fur twas a babby,—a reel live babby; an' iv'rythin' lookin' sweet and hum-like like in the room. An' I was jist thinkin' o' makin' myself known, we'n Molly gits up from whar she was a-settin' an' I sees her fur the fust time, an' sich a sad, car'worn face it was. She leent over that kid, an' then knelt down an' clasps her han's tergither, an' I cud see the tears a-rollin' down her cheeks, an' she was a rockin' back and forrits. I tell ye, ef she wa-an't rastlin' in prar then, nobody iver was. An' I jist stood thar and lookt, an' was jist goin, in ter put my arms around her, an' tell her that her ole Jack was back again, wen I heert v'ices, an' then I see her gi'n a start an' a look o' fear come into her face as she stud listenin'.

"I crawlt up ter the cornor o' the house, an' I see two men a-cumin' torts the door, an' wen they got purty clost they stopt, and wan says to 'tother:

"'Wal, I reckon we've got the durned cuss now, fur Bill Hickman's got a hint he's ter be removet.'

"'Ef Bill is arter him,' says 'tother fellow, he'll be whar no man 'll iver see him again. I s'pose, bishop, ye'll console the widder, an' be a father to the fatherless, wun't ye?' An' the cuss give a sort o' chuckil that made me grit my teeth.

"Then the fust man spoke up agin, an' sez he:

"'Keep yer durn mouth shet, ye fool, she mought heer us. Ye go 'long hum, an' I'll go in an' break the sad news.'

"Wal, I tell ye, I was layin' low an, keepin' dark then, an' I watcht the feller go to the door, heerd him knock, an' the door opent an' he wint in, an' the other feller, arter seein' him in, give another chuckil, an' started right torts me, an' before he knowt whar he was I had him down with my hand on his throat an' a pistil in his mouth. He jist give wan skeert look an' whispert, 'Jack Adams, by God!' then he laid still.

"'Yes, it's Jack Adams!' sez I, 'ye didn't s'pect ter see him, did ye, Tom Hentz?'

"'Now, wot's goin' on here?' sez I, 'jist ye tell me, an' don't talk too loud, er git excited, kase this gun's mighty easy on the trigger.'

"'Jack,' sez he, quiet like, 'let me up an' I'll tell ye iv'rythin'. I was allers yer fren', Jack, an' it's me as sent the man ter tell the train cap'n ter give yer notice. Damn that biship! I hate him, an' I'll git quits with him ef I die fur it.'

"'All right,' I sez, 'cum out to the barn, but walk keerful, kase the gun mought go off.'

"Wen we gets to the barn Hentz sez in a whisper: 'Jack, they want ter put ye outen the way. They've bin a-tryin' to make Molly take a biship's diverse an' marry the biship in thar, but she wouldn't. Then they tolt her ye was ded, an' she wouldn't b'lieve 'em, kase I kept tellin' her ye wasn't; jist ask her ef I didn't. Then I got on to Bill Hickman's bein' sent for, an' s'pishon't was fur ye, an' I got word ter a Gentile trapper ter go out an' warn ye. Now yer here, wot ye goin' to do? I'm yer fren', an' I'll stan' by ye an' go with ye, fur I'm sick of this. Jack'—an' his v'ice had an awful whisper—'Jack, I want ter kill the biship; he rob't me o' my gal. I swore to kill him, but I've bin a watchin' yer wife an' waitin' fur ye ter cum back. I made up with him, an' he thinks I'm a fool, but I hate him."

"Wal, ye see, gents, I know't that Hentz had been a good fren' o' mine in ole days, an' I know't the biship hed taken away his sweetheart, besites which thar was truth in the way he talkt, so I jist up an' sez:

"'Tom Hentz, I'll trust ye! Now, wot shell we do?'

"'Leave,' sez he; 'leave iv'rythin.' Yer life, yer wife, an' yer babby air all gone ef yer try ter stay here. I've laid awake nights thinkin' it out, an' I've tolt Molly time an' time agin about it. Ye've got nigh on three thousan' dollars hid up in the house. Thar's wot ye left with Molly, what Molly's made sence, an' all o' mine—its all thar. Thar's five good saddle-horses here, two rifles, an' plenty o' powder an' ball. Molly kin ride an' shoot with eny one—I larnt her—an' ye an' me kin take turn about a packin' the kid. Thar's lots o' grub reddy fur the time, an' the time hez cum.'

"'Wot about the biship?' sez I.

"'Jist yer leave him ter me, an' he wun't trubbel ye. We'll pack two horses, an' thar's mine, an' we'll strike over the mountains an' run no'theast fur a tradin' post, an' then to the states.'

"'Injins?' sez I.

"'Mormons is wus,' sez he.

"'I'm yer man, Tom! Now fur the house an' the biship.'

"'The biship's mine,' sez Tom, as we walk't sof'ly to the house, him leadin'.'

"'Go in fust,' sez Tom, 'an' skeer the biship, I'll do the rist.'

"'So we wint up an' opn'd the door sof'ly, an' I heert Molly's v'ice a-sayin':

"'It's a lie! He aint dead; an' ef he is, it's you that killed him.'

"'An' thin I jist steps in the door an' sez I, solem like;

"'It are a lie. He aint dead!'

"Wall, ye ought ter see that biship's face. He just turnt witer'n any sheet an' sort o' stagger't back, an' the nex' minit Tom was on top o' him, an' he was down with a gag in his mouth an' a lariat aroun' his arm.

"Molly jist give wan screech, an' she was hangin' on my neck, cryin' like her heart'd break.

"Tom finish't tyin' up the biship, an' thin he sez to us: "'Thar ain't no time fur cryin', Molly, it's time ter go. Ye'll hev lots o' time fur huggin' Jack 'tween here an' the States.'

"Wall, how that gal did fly aroun.' Ye, see, she an' Tom hed talkt over so much that it seemt all right to her fur me to be thar, an' in less time 'n it takes to tell the packs was made up an' iv'rythin' wes reddy fur the hosses. All the time we was fixin' the biship laid thar an' follow't us with his eyes. I'd jist as lief kilt him like a snake, but he was Tom's, so I didn't say nuthin' to him but jist kept on fixin' the packs; an' wen Tom fetcht the hosses aroun' we got iv'rythin' on, an' Molly in her saddle; she was drest in boy's clo's an' rid man fashion. I jumps on another hoss with the babby, an' Tom gits on his'n. Molly takes wan lead line, Tom tother, an' off we goes torts the kenyon, an' wen we cum to the fut o' the trail Tom sez:

"'Now I leave ye here ter go ter my cabin an' git my thin's. Ye wait fur me in Rattlesnake Gulch, an' Jack kin git his hoss down an' I'll jine ye with a s'prise party in an hour. It's airly yet, an' by sun-up we'll be fur 'nuff off. Besites, I want ter put 'em off the trail,' an' he went off laffin'.

"Wall, we rides in Rattlesnake Gulch, Molly, an' me, and the babby, an' I gits my 'Merican hoss an' we waits fur Tom; an' in about an hour he cums along, an' durned ef he didn't hev a s'prise party, fur thar on another hoss, in boy's clo's an' ridin' man fashion, was the biship's wife number two, Tom's ole sweetheart.

"Ye see, she'd alluz hated the biship, an' bein' forct into takin' him, she'd tole Tom she'd run weniver he cum fur her, an' they was jist waitin' fur me.

"'Tom,' sez I, 'wot did ye do with the biship?'

"'Wall,' sez he, 'I jist left him lyin thar tied, an' Jane, she stuck a notice on the door, sayin' as how they'd all gone to Salt Lake to go through the Endowment House with Molly.'

"'Then ye didn't kill him?' sez I.

"'Kill him? Naw! He'll eat his own heart out wen he gits loose an' fin's we's all gone, an' Jane hez tuk all the money he stolt from her father wen he died. But he'll be awful hungry wen they fin' him, an' that wunt be fur three days at the quickest.'

"Wall, gents, we started an' hed some rough times, but we got through all safe. Tom an' Jane was marriet all reg'lar by a justice o' the peace, an' are on this farm; an' that's my s'perience with the Mormons.

"I've prospered since, an' kin jist tell ye, gents, that ef eny man wants ter jine the Latter-day Saints he kin do it, but I don't want eny in mine. I'm a 'postate from way back. So's the old 'oman."

FAIRWEATHER'S FANCY.

Chicago Tribune.

"You needn't laugh, Martha," said the little reasoner, and her eyes seemed to shine more courageously as she spoke. She was sweet of voice and attractive in person—Martha must surely have admitted this much—and she had more daintiness about her than is common to the average wife of a dozen years' standing. But then Martha had come of late to a sense of her own growing importance. She had made an excellent marriage; her husband was a merchant and a deacon; her new house stood a mile above that of her brother's on the hill, and had plate-glass windows; her barn had a golden peacock; she had had six dresses to every one of her sister-in-law's. She could, therefore afford to smile on, despite remonstrance from the little woman who, a dozen years before, had become her brother's wife, and so the possessor of the sobriquet "Fairweather's Fancy." This latter had been an orphan, self-supporting and a student at the academy where Richard Fairweather had shortly before been appointed professor of languages. Fancy Fuller had been considered a very good and ambitious-minded young woman; she had taught music and done plain sewing to pay for her board in a respectable family. She had thus worked her way through school with the avowed desire of adopting some profession; she had been suspected of only one delinquency; a leaning towards advanced thought. This had been coupled, however, with a most inconsistently lady-like, and modest demeanor. She had been thus in a measure an enigma to the village, the solving of which became hopeless endeavor when she had capped the climax by accepting, after the briefest courtship, Professor Richard Fairweather. Resigning her brillian dreams of professional fame in the "wide, wide" outer world, she had gone with evident delight to reign as mistress of a one story and a half frame cottage on a poetically lonesome hillside overlooking the village.

Some one had said she must have loved him devotedly.

The professor in question was an amiable man of 40 odd; a slow, considerate man; a man of immense culture, of rare linguistic attainments, decidedly a scholar. He was said to be preparing a book of his own for publication.

He was, at the same time, a man with the "good, old-fashioned notions" of woman's sphere, namely, to marry and prove herself a good wife and mother. There were no children in the case, but Fancy had been a model wife, her advanced ideas to the contrary notwithstanding. She had kept her home a cheery place, herself a dainty, young-hearted creature; she had decided to remain Fairweather's Fancy.

The only weak point Martha Martin had succeeded in establishing in her sister-in-law, after all these years, was "Fancy's ridiculous notions about women." For herself, Martha had no thought that was not worldly wise, no delight more vivid than a brand new dress, no hope beyond her status in village society. She held her intellectual brother in affectionate contempt for his bookworminess; she ridiculed her sister-in-law to her face.

It was, therefore, three against one, such times as Martha and her red-faced deacon-husband took tea with the Fairweathers. Always Martha must bring up the subject upon which she so well knew Fancy's ideas; always the noisy laugh of Philbrick Martin rang through the room at some stale smartness of his own. Martha's shrill titter of wifely admiration was sure to follow; and lastly Richard, with his deprecating smile, must say:

"Now my dear, you see they have gotten the better of you!"

But Fancy never lost her temper. Her cheeks might flush and her eyes glisten, yet all her words were courteous. And it must have required great self-control not to show irritation at Martha's manner.

Mrs. Martin spent occasionally an afternoon with her sister-in-law, chiefly for the purpose of exulting in semi-boisterous fashion over that amiable creature. She had always something new to describe—it might be a bonnet or it might be a carpet-sweeper. Her latest acquisition was a horse and buggy, with which she drove to the village twice each day, taking her husband down to his business in the morning and going after him at 5 o'clock.

The day of which I write was one occurring in all the mid-magnificence of October. The atmosphere was warm and hazy; the foliage of the hillside woody spaces bore the hectic bloom of death. Through the open door of Fancy's sitting room one looked out upon a garden of late flowers—dahlias, asters, mignonette and portulaccas. Inside there was an air of unspeakable peace—a serenity of tasteful arrangement and harmonious influence.

But Martha Martin knew only the pleasure of the scoffer.

"You needn't laugh," Fancy had said, looking absolutely pretty as she spoke—if Martha had given it thought at the moment. Martha, however, had promptly proceeded to refute the assertion.

"Oh, yes; I've got to laugh, Fancy. You never ought to've married and settled down; you ought to've been a female lecturer. You're chuck full of woman's rights ideas. And it seems so funny! Such a tim'rous, insignificant little thing as you. As Philbrick says, 'If a mouse should run out and,'—

"What Philbrick says has nothing to do with it," Fancy responded. Besides, if you introduce a subject as you did this, Martha, you must expect me to say what I think. I shall always maintain that woman should be equipped from childhood up to protect herself. I believe that all parents owe to their daughters, no less than their sons, such a fund or dowry; something better than mere money, something imperishable, the cultivation of a talent, or at least the training to a trade. All women stand a chance of being left alone and friendless. Suppose Richard should be taken away. What do you think I should do? I certainly should not look for any assistance from his relations."

Martha winced, as the other continued:

"I should go out into the world and support myself. . . . I think I could do it." And then Fancy came to a sudden stop as if remembering the swine were said to make a poor meal off pearls.

Richard arrived presently. His afternoon classes were over at 3. He went at once to his study, a pleasant room sacred to his most precious manuscripts. Among these latter appeared a great deal in other handwriting than that of the professor. It was quite possible that Fancy found it a pleasure to assist her husband in his literary labors.

Martha was reminded by her brother's appearance that she must set homeward.

"It's time I was starting," she said, "John'll have the horse all ready and waiting for me to go down after Philbrick. Can't you come up to-morrow, Fancy? My dressmaker'll be there; I'm getting three elegant new dresses made."

Fancy smiled. Her visitor had talked constantly since arriving, and, though at times diverging therefrom, had somehow managed to swing regularly back to the all-absorbing topic of dress.

Martha wore a new red shawl with stripes of gilt tinsel—such a shawl as city women keep for evening use. She drew this over her shoulders and started down the path.

"I'll look for you to-morrow, Fancy," she insisted, without attending the latter's remonstrance and excuse.

Fancy watched her going up the road. She looked voluminous and unwieldy with the afternoon sunlight on her black satin dress and her red and tinseled shawl. By and by she was quite hidden by the trees—the beautiful trees!

Fancy remained at the door. Richard Fairweather came out of his study and spoke with something more than his usual tenderness.

"How is it, my dear?" he queried, "that you always look so nice and young, and—bright? . . . I think it must be the tasteful way you have with your hair. Martha is hardly your age and she looks ten years older."

Fancy smiled.

"Are you going to work any this afternoon, dear, she asked. "Do you want me to come and help?"

"I think we will not begin till after supper. What in the world would I do without you, Fancy? You really inspire me. But for you I should lose all confidence."

"I am of some use then! Martha says I am timorous and insignificant. Do you think so?"

"I don't know about the timorousness," said Fairweather, "but you signify a vast deal—to me at least."

He was impelled therewith to draw her to his knee and kiss her soft cheek several times. He remembered this afterward and blessed heaven for the impulse. He also remembered how she laid a small hand gently on his hair, not a very pretty hand, for hands that have toiled are never fair to see.

"Martha says a mouse would frighten me," she pursued. "Do you think so, Richard?"

Fairweather laughed.

"I'm sure I couldn't say as to that, dear. Most women are a little weak in that respect.

Fancy glanced across the room to where her cabinet organ stood.

"There is a little mouse," she said, argumentatively, "that comes out every morning to hear me practice. I never feel especially frightened. . . . I haven't been a bad wife, have I dear, because I have thought differently from most people on some subjects?"

"You've been the best wife in the world," said Fairweather quite fervently, and kissed her once again ere she left his knee.

Fancy returned to the open door, and stood there looking out. Her husband, watching her, must have felt complacent. He leaned back in his easy chair and dreamed awhile. He was at times most thoroughly a dreamer.

By and by he arose, stretched his rather indolent frame, and joined his wife, resting his fair-complexioned, amiable face upon her shoulder.

"Is anything the matter, dear?" after a little. "You seem unlike yourself, restive and dissatisfied with something. Has Martha said anything?"

She answered, reluctantly.

"I hardly know. Martha has never a a very good effect upon me. She always makes me long to run away somewhere——" Fancy paused abruptly; this was the nearest she had ever approached to the witticism of Richard's only sister. "She makes me feel," she presently resumed. "as if I were living a lie." She turned about and faced her husband, who had lifted his cheek from her shoulder in mild surprise.

"Why, what do you mean," he asked, very slowly.

"I mean that because I am outwardly quiet and peaceable is no reason people should believe me timorous or cowardly. There's more strength and ambition in my nature than even you know, Richard. If I were out in the world I would show people that one woman could amount to something."

She seemed to lack words with which to properly express her thoughts. However, Fairweather must have had a vague idea of her meaning.

"I wish you would not talk so." he answered gravely. "You distress me. It would be a great calamity for you to become discontented with our life. A discontented woman is a husband's curse. There is no place for woman like her home. This going out into the world is a vast mistake. Woman is not fitted for the labor of a man."

When he had finished reading her a lecture, to which the foregoing served as introduction—when he had succeeded, as he felt confident, in convincing her that women were but fair and fragile flowers, ever to be sheltered and shielded from rough winds by the interposing arm of a manly protector—he returned to the doorway and stood again beside her.

She seemed by no means vexed; she smiled and shook her head, but she said no more.

Fairweather looked up the road.

"What madman is that, I wonder," he began curiously, "driving down the hill at such breakneck speed? If the horse veers to either side farther down they'll go over into the gully."

Fancy followed his gaze at the first word. Perhaps her eyes were clearer than his own. For a second she stood motionless, hardly breathing. In that second she must have seen certain things revealed as in a lightning flash. Among these must have yawned darkly prominent the gully a quarter mile below, just where the wagon-road was roughest and narrowest. Over this gully must have flashed and fluttered a tinseled scarlet shawl, and the white face of a woman in mortal terror must have gleamed there also.

She faced her husband, white, yet unshaken.

"The horse is running away," she said clearly. "It is Martha!"

In another second she was flying down the path to the road. And Fairweather stood as if rooted to the threshold, his face more pale than hers had been, a ringing noise in his ears, his eyes strained to see his only sister dashing by to her awful death.

He saw his wife spring forward and seize the bridle; he saw the animal leap madly to one side; he saw his sister jump.

* * * * * * *

Richard Fairweather no longer holds those "good, old-fashioned" ideas. He is even known to have lately written a pamphlet in favor of woman's independence, in praise of woman's aspirations and bravery.

But, then, he has never been quite the same man since the day his wife was killed in the act of stopping a runaway horse to save his only sister's life.

It would be strange if any man were the same after such a night as that on which he walked the house where his wife lay dead—walked the house and felt himself benumbed with one most awful, unavailing remorse: "I stood like a coward and let her go—to her death."

DESERTERS.

A Serious Trouble Encountered by Army Officers.

New York Mail and Express.

"People seem to think it a curious thing that a deserter should have been on the West Shore train the other day, and that he was the only man seriously injured," said the officer in charge of the United States recruiting station on Chatham street to a reporter.

"Why, as for deserters," he added, "it isn't such an unusual thing for a soldier to desert, only you don't hear about it in the papers, and as to the poor fellow's getting injured, why, he was handcuffed and had to roll as the car rolled. He had three ribs broken, I understand, and is now in the hospital on Governor's Island. He was captured in Albany, and the two who caught him left him here for David's Island yesterday. They lost a good deal of clothing by the burning of the cars. Will the deserter be tried? Most certainly he will, although he is pretty well punished. But they are very strict here, and it is generally a sentence of five years in the military prison.

"Where are these prisons, and what do the sentenced men do?" was asked.

"Old Castle William at Governor's Island is one; there is another at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, and another at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The men are obliged to sleep in them, but in the day they are made to work about the post. At the West the sentence is generally two years for desertion and five years for desertion and theft. For good behavior ten days of the sentence are taken off each month."

"Do many desertions occur in the army?" was asked.

"Yes, a good many, especially in the West. They are almost always recruits who have become dissatisfied or discontented. You rarely find an old soldier, or one who has served one enlistment, deserting. Some desert after service of a year or two, and others after a few months. Out west if a man wants to desert all he has to do is to clear out directly after tattoo. He is not missed until after reveille, and by that time he is thirty miles or more away. They don't capture one out of ten. They can't get them. Especially those who go to work in the mines are safe, for the miners won't let them be retaken. Why, the West is full of deserters, and a man can get away easy enough, only he must take his chances for recapture and court-martial. The soldiers are not allowed to have citizen's clothes, and this makes it somewhat harder to get away."

"Are you getting many recruits now?" asked the reporter.

"They are coming in fast enough, and so that we are able to pick the best men. We are taking men all the time to fill up the places of men whose time is expiring. They are first sent to David's Island on the Sound, which is the department of instruction. After that they are sent wherever needed. Every enlistment is for five years. The pay is $13 a month the first and second years; $14 the third; $15 the fourth, and $16 the fifth. But the increase is not paid until the man receives his discharge. After a man gets his discharge he is allowed one day's rations and one day's pay for every twenty miles that he is obliged to travel to reach his home. This often turns out a good thing. For instance, I was discharged in Baltimore. Consequently my allowance to come home was $160, but it only cost me $60.

The Boy of the Burning Deck.

Paris Letter in the Newark Advertiser.

Few but know the very pretty piece of poetry by Mrs. Hemens, "Casabianca," commencing, "The boy stood on the burning deck." The poetess states that the lad was the son of the admiral commanding the flagship L'Orient, which took fire and exploded; that young Casabianca perished in the explosion, refusing to quit the position allotted to him by his father, pending the battle of the Nile. I have been looking into the official account of the incident. The admiral was Brueys, who was wounded in the head, and hand early in the action. He continued to give orders until cut in two by a cannon ball; he uttered the request to be allowed to expire on deck, which he did in the course of some minutes.

Citoyen Casabianca, the father of the poetic hero, then took command; his son was a middy, but only aged ten, not thirteen. At that period lads entered the navy very young. Casabianca was was also a deputy. Pending the action his son was by his side; the father was mortally wounded in the head by a splinter and became insensible; he gave no injunctions to his son, but the latter would not the less quit his wounded parent. By this time the ship was on fire. Several of the sailors had left and saved themselves on spars till picked up by the English boats. Aided by the purser young Casabianca and his father were lowered down on a piece of a mast floating by, but they had only got a short distance from the 120-gun Orient when she blew up, and nothing more was seen of the Casabiancas.

But the noblest thing that perished there
Was that young, faithful heart.

FUN AT WEDDINGS.

Grotesque Happenings and Ridiculous Mistakes—Hymen's Comedies as Related by a Boston Clergyman.

"Yes," said a Boston clergyman, "more ludicrous incidents and queer mistakes happen in connection with weddings or marriages than I ever noticed in connection with any of my other work. There are times when I have difficulty in keeping my countenance straight, and of course you wouldn't like to be laughed at by the minister just as he was about to join you solemnly in wedlock with the lady you loved. The most trying time I ever had was when I was young in the ministry, and when I had not such control over my keen sense of the ludicrous as I have since acquired. I was located at Houlton, Me. One day a couple drove over from Woodstock, N. B., and when they arrived in the village began inquiring for a minister. Some of the mischief-loving boys got hold of them, and took them down to the market, where they were placed on exhibition and plied with all sorts of ridiculous questions, to the great amusement of the crowd and without embarrassment to themselves, for they were too green to appreciate the joke. Finally, after everybody had had his fill of fun, the bride and groom were escorted to my house by a few of the most mischevious of the crowd. It was all I could do to keep from roaring when they entered, and I felt that I must maintain my dignity, not only for the sake of the bride and groom, but because some of the young men present were members of my congregation, and if I yielded to my feelings then, I might have difficulty in restraining myself when I faced them from the pulpit. The woman was the tallest, most awkward and most fantastic female I ever saw. She was six feet and two inches high, and dressed in all the bright colored toggery she could get on, without regard to harmony or style of make. But one article struck me so forcibly, and was thrust on my attention so prominently, that I forgot all the other details. She had a hand which came near answering the description, 'as large as a codfish,' and these were enclosed in a pair of thick yarn mittens, which made every finger look as big as a potato. These gloves were a marvel. They were striped, red and white, the stripes running lengthwise the finger, while on the back of each hand she had worked, in coarse yarn, what she thought was some sort of a flower, into which she had wrought every improbable color that a grotesque imagination could picture. The man was a diminutive half-breed, Indian and French, and he had no vest nor collar on, and his pants were held up by a lumberman's leather belt, fastened with an old, rusty iron buckle. I managed to get through the ceremony, however, and relieved my feelings after they had gone.

"I remember a bashful fellow who came to my house with his girl to get married. He was so bashful that I pitied him. He was absolutely overwhelmed—paralyzed, I ought to say. He came into the parlor with his hat on, and did not remove it once, despite all the hints that his bride and I gave him. I said all the assuring things I could and tried to engage him and his lady in conversation, but he was so abashed that he could neither answer nor move. I hinted that he stand beside his lady but he was so frightened that he did not understand. Finally, in despair, I said quietly and privately to the bride: 'If you will take your place beside the groom I will marry you,' and when she approached him it seemed absolutely to startle him with a new fright.

"One young man, who came on the same errand was struck with curiosity the moment he entered the house. He absolutely ignored his bride, while he wandered about the parlor, scrutinizing in a wondering way every picture, every book, ornament and piece of furniture in the room. The bride sat and blushed, while I tried to call his attention to the business of the moment, but he kept on, and it was more than fifteen minutes before I could get the two corralled near enough together to marry them.

"I married a queer couple once, a short time before I came to Boston. The man had just entered his profession—which we will call that of a physician—and had determined upon his place of settlement. The young lady, a bright, intelligent, well educated girl, who knew the ways of society, had made up her mind that she would marry a doctor, and finally she had brought matters round in a quiet womanly way to the point of his asking for her hand and heart, and of course she yielded. The acquaintance had been astonishingly brief. They were hardly acquainted when I was summoned to marry them. He was very skillful and devoted to his profession, which he had mastered well for a young man in theory and practice. But he knew less of the ways of the world and the customs of social and domestic life than any other man I ever met. He was on the point of starting for his new home the very next day after the marriage, and with the utmost unconcern regarding the proprieties of the occasion, had packed up all his apparel ready for the journey. He was stopping at the house of a friend, who, at the last moment, late in the afternoon, discovered that the bridegroom did not have a change of linen to dress with. Hurried consultations were had, and his hostess, with woman's readiness for emergencies, took the measure of his collar and waist, went down just as the store were about to close and purchased the desired articles, which the bridegroom accepted with the utmost equanimity and as if the articles were not of much consequence anyway. They went away, and in a few days the bride wrote a letter to one of her friends, in which she remarked with charming naivette. "We had a good, pleasant journey, and I found my husband to be quite entertaining. I think I shall like him first-rate when I get acquainted with him."

Rev. Dr. W. Bowditch, of the First Place Methodist church of Brooklyn, has inaugurated the fashion of illustrating his sermons with large pictures.

Dr. Wm. H. Furness of Philadelphia, by his ordination in 1825 the oldest Unitarian clergyman in this country, is still active in his ministry.

WHEN TO REST.

When the sun sinks low in the western sky
Then lay the tools or the needle by;
  Labor is for the light.
Go wash the hands, and say, with a smile:
"I have won my rest for a little while;
  Good-night, my work—good-night!"

Many a trouble a man must bear;
But the day is time for thought and care—
  The day for watch or fight.
When the key is turned in the store then say:
"To-morrow will be another day;
  Worry, good-night! good-night!"

Anger may meet us the whole day long,
For the good must still resist the wrong,
  The true fight for their right;
But oh, when the shadows of evening fall,
The spirit of gentle peace recall,
  And say to the wrong: "Good night!"

For an hour or two let all thoughts cease,
Be glad in the household joy and peace,
  Rejoice in its love and light;
Then sleep, but first, with a kind heart say:
"For the help you have given me all the day Tired hands and feet, good night!"

"Good night, my soul, for I cannot know,
While my body sleeps, where thou wilt go,
  All space and reason scorning;
But thee may all good angels keep,
And fill with holy dreams my sleep,
  Until we say good morning!"

—Lillie E. Burr.

DOLORES.

It was getting dusk, and I could hear the church clock striking, across the water, six o'clock. There were still faint streaks of red and bars of light in the western sky, and the new moon hung like a sickle overhead. I was country born, young and strong, and I knew no fear, though the road was lonely and there had been much talk in the village of gypsies and tramps, and the passengers in the coach coming from London had been robbed not so many weeks ago. I had been a long way across the country, and Tiger and I hurried home, now thinking (at least, I thought, and Tiger was the most sympathetic of dogs) that before the clock struck the half hour we should be sitting comfortably by the fireside.

The path ran for some little distance close to the Black Pond; the hill rose steep on either side of it; here and there with a cluster of bushes, here and there a tree hung over the deep water. In the fast fading twilight I could still see the reflections sharp and clear. I was so close to the water that I could watch the little ripples on its surface. The path was muddy in places; I picked my way cautiously from one dry spot to another. Tiger was a few yards in front of me. Suddenly he growled and dashed forward with a bound. "Tiger, Tiger!" I called, and even at the same moment I felt rather than saw that a dark figure was moving in front of me—moving swiftly, noiselessly, away from me under the shadow of the bushes. "Who is there?"

No answer, only Tiger turned suddenly and slunk back to my side. There were stories enough about the pond and its deep waters. Not so many years since a couple of lovers had lost their lives there; it was said that the body of the girl had never been found. Something I had seen, and Tiger had seen it too. Could it be the ghost of that luckless maid? A low moaning sound fell on my ear; horror stricken I turned and fled up the hill as fast as my feet could carry me. But I did not run far. "What is this?" asked my better self. "Phœbe Lyncombe, will you, the daughter of a brave soldier who died for his country, the wife of as true a sailor as ever sailed on the King's fleet—will you turn coward and fly in a panic? Return, and see if you can help any fellow-creature in misery. Return and face the danger, and God be with you."

Some such thoughts ran through my brain. I was always one to act on impulse, and I retraced my steps, walking with a bold front and beating heart straight in the direction of the shadow. I could see it now again, a tall figure—a woman's figure—in a long cloak. Once it stopped and hid itself beneath a tree—I must have passed by had not Tiger growled and shown his teeth.

"Who are you?" I called in desperation—"tell me. Are you ill? Can I help you?"

Then in the silence of the evening it crept out of the darkness and glided quickly toward the edge, the very edge, of the pond.

"Take care!" I shouted, "the water is deep."

For an answer it flung off the cloak, threw up its arms, and plunged into the Black Pond with a shriek. One glance I had of a white face, the face of a beautiful woman, her black hair streaming round her; and then I rushed to the water edge, beside myself with horror. I was more than a mile from the village. I could get no help—it was vain to scream. By good luck the dog was with me. "Seize her, Tiger! seize her!" and as I raised my hand he sprang after the woman. A tree spread its branches far over the pond at this point. I crawled along a bough as far as it would bear me, and so hanging over the water managed to gain a firm hold of her dress. By Heaven's mercy the pond was not so very deep at this spot; I do not think that she was ever fairly out of her depth, and she had not lost consciousness. How we did it I cannot exactly tell you, but between us—Tiger and me—we got her out, shivering, but alive, on to the bank—moaning and wringing her hands but alive, and, as far as I could see, unhurt. There was no time to question her, I must get home—home to the warm fireside, and take her with me. "Come," I said, holding her hand tight in mine, "come." She lifted her eyes and looked at me—they were wild with terror; her lips moved, but she spoke in a strange tongue that I could not understand.

I took up the cloak that lay on the ground and wrapped it round her, taking care that her face was turned away from the pond. I went my way very slowly, half dragging her, up the hill, and ever and anon she stopped to grasp for breath and to sob and moan. Half past six struck, and seven struck before we reached the garden gate, with Tiger sniffing at our heels. Mariam, the housekeeper, was there, watching for me. She is a discreet woman; I knew I could trust her. "There has been an accident; help me take the lady in," I said.

Miriam asked no more; she put her arm around the lady and carried her fainting to her own room. We got her wet clothes off; Miriam lighted the fire and made a hot posset, (from my grandmother's receipt,) and little by little the stranger came to herself and opened her eyes, again with the wild stare that I had seen before. How thankful I was to be so far from the terrible pond!

"Senora," she said, trying to sit up, "I will intrude no more, I will depart."

I answered her that she was too weak to think of departing, that she was a welcome guest, that she must sleep now, and to-morrow we would converse further.

"As you will, Senora," she replied; "I owe all to you. I kiss your hand." And so her head fell back on the pillow and she could speak no more for very weariness. A few moments later and she was fast asleep, with her dark hair spread around her, her dark eyelashes resting on her cheek. Her hands were clasped together as if she were praying. I noticed that they were white and beautifully formed. On one of them she wore a broad gold ring. How did she come to be wandering alone by the Black Pond? Who was she? Whence did she come? I was thankful—ah! very thankful—that I had been there to help her at that awful moment. The tears sprang to my eyes as I stooped and kissed her. Miriam is my own dear nurse, who was with my mother as a girl, and lived with me during my husband's absence. He had sailed many, many months ago (I write of the year 182-) for a long cruise. She persuaded me to change my wet pelisse, she combed and brushed my hair, and reassured me about the strange lady. Not till then did I know how very tired I was.

My visitor passed a restless night; for days she lay in a fever, shivering and talking fast. Now and then she burst out into broken English, asking for a certain Captain Charles Walters over and over again. He had lodgings at Plymouth, it would seem, and she could not find the house. Miriam is as clever a nurse as she is a good housekeeper, and she nursed the lady with the greatest care. By degrees our patient recovered without the help of the doctor, who lived a good ten-miles' ride across the country, and of whose skill Miriam had no high opinion. But she had many simple remedies of her own, and these she used, and she made dainty dishes and cooling draughts, and at last there came a day when the lady sat by the fireside, with a faint touch of color on her cheek, and then she told us her story. I will make it short, but I cannot make it less sad. Her name was Dolores de Riano; she was a Spaniard born, (as I had guessed,) an orphan, and she had been wooed and won by an English officer, whose ship lay at anchor in the port of Barcelona, hard by the house where she lived with an uncle. (I, too, took an interest in Barcelona, as my husband had described the place to me in his letters.) This officer had married Dolores secretly; his ship had sailed, and he left her with her wedding ring she dared not show, and his address written on a slip of paper—"Lieutenant Walters, 18 Melrose-terrace, Plymouth." And there she was to join him as soon as he should send for her. For a whole year she had no tidings from him; then she took her passage to Plymouth in a merchant ship. They had a miserable passage, being delayed on the voyage by adverse winds. She had finally landed at Plymouth with a few golden pieces in her purse, friendless and alone. She had asked in vain for Melrose-terrace; no one knew of such a street, or, indeed, of the existence or her husband, Lieutenant Charles Walters. After a few weeks her purse was nearly empty. She knew not where to turn for help. At last she thought to find her husband in London, and as she could not pay her coach fare she resolved to walk all those many miles. Then as she passed the Black Pond that evening, faint and suffering, she could no longer endure the misery and suspense, and she had rushed into the water filled with a frantic longing to be at rest.

Having told her story, with many tears, she called the holy stars to bless me for my goodness, (I repeat what she said.) But my heart was full of anger toward the man who had so ill-treated her—this Charles Walters, as he styled himself—for neither Miriam nor I believed that he had given her his right name. I did not tell her this, of course, but I could not keep back what I felt in talking to Miriam. My face grew hot, and I clenched my hand as I cried, "He is a heartless traitor!"

"There may be a misunderstanding, Madam; the lady trusts him still."

"I do not believe it," I cried; "he has deceived her cruelly." You see I was young, and spoke out what I felt.

Miriam put her fingers to her lips, but it was too late. Dolores, from her couch in the next room, had heard me and called me to her side.

"Nevertheless, Senora, he is still my love and my husband. Think, Madam, if your husband should—"

"My husband!" I exclaimed. "It could not be. But if it were possible that he could deceive me, I would never speak to him again, or desire to become reconciled."

She sighed, and took my hand in hers, and pressed it. How pretty she was in a gray gown of mine, adorned with a bunch of rose-colored ribbons. Day by day she grew more lovely, and day by day I discovered fresh virtues in her.

I had not any one to consult at home, so I went to our old clergyman and asked him to write letters on Dolores's behalf, making inquiries concerning her husband. This he did, and after some weeks the answers came, all with the same result. No one had heard of Lieutenant Walters, and there was no such name on the list of officers in his Majesty's navy. By degrees we left off expecting to get any good news, only I cherished a secret hope that, when Ambrose, my husband, came home—in a couple of months—he would throw some light on the subject. Dolores staid on with me, and I learned to love her dearly. The neighbors were all pleased with her society, and no one knew besides Miriam that I had found her on that Autumn evening by the Black Pond. After that there came bitter days for me, Phœbe Lyncombe. It was Easter, and the good ship Thunderbolt was long due at Plymouth, and there was no news of her. I had thought to have my husband with me before the primroses were out, and now the hedges were yellow with blossoms and he never came. My uncle, an old Admiral who resided at Plymouth, had long promised to send me a mounted messenger as soon as he should have tidings of the Thunderbolt, and day after day I stood by the garden gate and looked down the road in vain. In my trouble Dolores seemed to forget her own; she cheered me, bore with my fits of despair, and was in all ways like a loving sister during that dark season. One afternoon she had gone to the parsonage with a message, and I sat trying to sew, by the parlor window. The ivy was beginning to put forth its young shoots, a delicious perfume of violets was wafted in from the garden. The room was trim and orderly, a bowl of yellow cowslips stood on a table by the side of my inlaid work box—it was one of Ambrose's many presents. I saw myself reflected in the mirror hanging on the wall opposite, sitting on a high-backed chair over my tambour frame, with my hair gathered high on my head, a handkerchief pinned across my neck, and the puffed sleeve of my white gown ending above my elbow. Behind me was the door; even as I looked it opened quickly. There was a step I knew, the sound of a voice I loved: "Where are you? Phœbe, my wife!" No more sighing over the frame, no more gazing in the mirror, no more watching for the messenger; before I could well jump from my seat he was there, his face was close to my lips—Well, it is Dolores's story that I am telling you, not mine.

Safe, safe home at last, and there had been no mishap beyond contrary winds; he had outridden the messenger on the road. The time passed quickly. As we sat side by side looking out on the landscape, the hills and dales all green with the freshness of Spring, he took my hand again in his, and then I noticed that he wore a ring that I had never seen before. "What a magnificent ring, Ambrose!" I said, holding his hand up to the light that I might see it better. It was of foreign workmanship, curiously chased, and in the centre was a flashing stone set in diamonds. To my surprise Ambrose did not answer at once, but looked troubled; at last he said: "I cannot tell you the whole story of the ring now, dearest Phœbe; it belongs to my brother Charlford, he is ill at Plymouth; to-morrow you shall hear all about it."

I knew that Charlford's mad freaks and misbehavior had long been a cause of anxiety to Ambrose, (Charlford was his youngest and best beloved brother,) so I forbore to grieve him with another word on the subject.

"Is that our good Miriam at the door?" asked Ambrose presently. There was certainly a step in the passage; but when I went to see Miriam I found her in her own room at the further end of the house. Afterward I remembered that some one had passed along the hedge and gone out at the garden gate, but at that time I took no notice of the occurrence. When the supper bell rang I began to wonder where Dolores could be. It was long past her usual hour for returning. At last I sent a maid to the parsonage bidding her hasten home. Alas! she had left an hour ago. We searched all through the house, in the garden and paddock; it grew dark, and I could no longer conceal my distress. Ambrose, too, looked grave. He went with the coachman, and they made inquiries in the village; they even walked as far as the Black Pond, but they found no trace of Dolores.

There was nothing to be done; we could but wait for the morning, when my husband said that he would himself ride to Plymouth and send out mounted messengers to scour the country; she could not be far off.

Very early the next day a little piece of paper was brought to me. With difficulty I deciphered the words that were written in pencil: "Dear and honored Senora—Do not seek to find me. I shall never return. I have left with my free will. Ever and ever will pray for you your devoted and ungrateful servant. I kiss your hands and your feet. Dolores de Riano Walters."

Ambrose was always a man of few words. He made no comment on the letter. Very shortly he bade me a loving farewell, and set forth on his journey. I spent the day alone, hoping for the return of Dolores. Surely, I said to myself, Ambrose, or one of the men, must find her soon—she could not walk far, and there was no coach to be hired in the village even if she had the means to engage one; and I knew how slender were the contents of her purse. Why had she left me? Was her brain unhinged by trouble? Would she again seek to put an end to her life? Late in the afternoon I wrapped a mantle round me and went out to breathe the air. Perhaps I should meet one of the party and hear the news that I dreaded and yet longed to hear. The gorse hedge at the end of the garden gleamed golden in the sunlight as I passed; the bed of the sun dial was red and blue with flowering hyacinths; the ferns in every ditch and every stone wall were puting forth their brown and green fronds; the air was full of the sounds of Spring. Tiger was basking in the sunshine by the gate. "Tiger!" I cried, struck with a new idea, "find her, good dog. Seek Dolores!" He seemed to understand at once when I fetched a scarf of hers and held it up to him. Without more ado he set off down the lane and took a short cut across a field to a neighboring wood. Every now and then he stopped and licked my hand as I followed close behind him. It was warm and sheltered in the pine wood; the ground was slippery with fir needles. The dog went on steadily toward a pile of fagots that were stacked against a low stone wall. On the other side ran the high road to Plymouth. Here the earth was carpeted with green moss. I stepped noiselessly across the open space, thinking to climb the wall and make my way home by the road. Tiger had pricked up his ears—there was a sound of horses' hoofs; perhaps it was Ambrose. For the moment I forgot that I was seeking Dolores, but as I neared the wood stack I saw her. Her head was turned away from me, and she was leaning over the wall with clasped hands, straining her eyes in the direction of the riders. The clatter of the hoofs drew nearer. "Dolores!" I cried, running forward, "why did you leave me? I have been so unhappy about you. Come home with me now."

She turned and I saw her dark eyes were flashing with a staange light; she grasped my arm and pointed down the road. "So alike," she murmured; "child, forgive me! So alike, and I saw my ring on his finger. Look, look! who is it?"

I looked. Ambrose had seen me already; he was waving his hand; by his side rode a man whose face I seemed to know—a man who looked weary and dusty. Younger, yes, handsomer than my husband, but careworn and ill. He wore a slouched hat. I could not distinguish his features, and yet, as he sat there in the sunlight I knew that they were familiar to me.

"Who is it?" asked Dolores, more eagerly than before.

"My husband."

"Which is your husband? For the love of heaven!"

"Ambrose Lyncombe," I answered, fairly bewildered; "the man who is waving his hand—the one nearest to the wall."

"Thank God! thank God!"

Her beautiful face was radiant with joy. Then I saw my husband speak a few low words to his companion, who drew rein and dismounted from his horse. He was very lame; he could hardly walk, but there was no need for him to take many steps. Dolores had swung herself over the low wall and was running to meet him with outstretched hands. "Carlos, my beloved, welcome!" she cried, "querido marido mio!"

"Forgive me, Dolores, forgive me," was all he said, and her loving arms were round his neck, her head resting on his shoulder. Then, as he looked down upon her, his face glowing with emotion—then I saw the likeness again, stronger than before, and I knew that Charles Walters was the same man as Charlford Lyncombe, my husband's younger brother.

We feared a return of fever for Dolores, but she recovered speedily from her fatigue. Charlford, indeed, has always been an invalid since, partly in consequence of an accident that he met with abroad. The illness that followed first led him to remember his deserted wife, and make an effort to—however, he is Ambrose's brother, and through all her trouble Dolores still clings to him.—Belgravia.

Two Kinds of Lobbyists.

From the Washington Star.

"The occupation of the lobbyist is about played out, for this season anyhow," remarked a member of the Third House to a Star reporter. "The boys," he continued, "still hang 'round, but most of 'em ain't making enough to pay their cigar bills. There's some talk of money comin' here to beat the Nicaraguan treaty. I don't know how true it is, but I do know that some fellers are bankin' on makin' their winter' expenses out of it. They say that Duke Gwin, ex-Secretary Thompson and one or two others are comin' after the holidays with a boodle supplied by De Lesseps to knock out the Nicaragua Canal. But if they do come none but high-toned ducks can get into the snap. They'll want ex-Senators and ex-Cabinet officers who can explain constitutional law and set up terrapin stews at Chamberlain's. That's to high up for me.

"To tell the truth, people are getting afraid of any man that's called a lobbyist. The newspapers have said so much about the business that people are down on it, and a member of Congress is actually afraid to talk to any man who's been spotted as belongin' to the lobby. And, to be honest about it, some of 'em ain't no better than confidence men, after all. They lie round the Capitol watching for anything and everything that has money in it. Soon as they discover somebody who has a bill or claim they go for him and tell him if he don't let 'em in they'll jump on him. It's divy or fight with them. No honest lobbyist has any use for that crowd. It's them that hurts the business and make people scared at the name lobby.

"There's many a queer racket worked about these Capitol corridors, I can tell you, and if the reporters could just get on to some of 'em they'd have something worth writing about. One man got $10,000 out of a certain crowd when the tariff bill was hanging in conference, just by cheek and smart work. The crowd I speak of had a certain interest to take care of, and they were afraid 'twas going to be hurt. That man found out how the committee stood and then made a bargain to protect that interest. He never went near the committee—never spoke a word to any of the members; but when the report was made and the thing was all right he got his $10,000. The votes of members have been sold over and over again without the members themselves ever knowing anything about it. How is it done? Well, the racket is about this: You want to secure the vote of a certain member. I know him, and pretend that I can control him. You begin to believe I can work him. I just wait till the bill comes up. Then if my man votes for it I claim to have made him do it; if he don't, I tell you he fooled me, and that's all there is of it. But there ain't as much of this as there used to be. The lawyers have almost spoiled the trade of the professional lobbyist."

Army and Naval Officers.

The present ranking officer of the army is Lieut. Gen. P. H. Sheridan; headquarters, Washington; pay, $11,000 a year. The major generals are limited by law to three, and the offices are filled by W. S. Hancock, commanding military division of the Atlantic, headquarters at New York; John M. Schofield, military division of the Pacific, headquarters, San Francisco; and John Pope, military division of the Missouri, headquarters Chicago. The pay of a major general is $7,500 a year. The brigadier generals are limited by law to six. They are: O. O. Howard, department of the Platte, headquarters at Omaha; A. H. Terry, department of Dakota; C. C. Auger, department of Missouri; George Crook, department of Arizona; Nelson A Miles, department of the Columbia; David S. Stanley, department of Texas. The pay of a brigadier general is $5,500 a year. The higher officers of the navy are: Admiral, David D. Porter, Washington; vice-admiral, Stephen C. Rowan, chairman of the lighthouse board, and seven rear admirals on the active list, assigned, according to a recent Navy Register, as follows: John L. Worden, president of the retiring board; Edward T. Nichols, chief of the bureau of yards and docks; George H. Cooper, commanding North Atlantic station; Earl English, commanding European station; J. H. Upshur (acting rear admiral), commanding Pacific station; Robert W. Shufeldt, superintendent of naval observatory, and John L. Davis (acting), Asiatic station. Following these are twenty-one commodores on the active list, whose commands or assignments are subject to so frequent changes that we will not attempt to give them. The pay of an admiral is $13,000; of a vice admiral, $9,000 at sea and $8,000 on shore duty; of a rear admiral, $6,000 at sea, $5,000 on shore and $4,000 on waiting orders; and of a commodore, $5,000 at sea, $4,000 on shore and $3,000 on waiting orders.

FROWNS OR SMILES?

Where do they go, I wonder,
  The clouds on a cloudy day,
When the shining sun comes peeping out
And scatters them all away?
I know!—They keep them and cut them down
For cross little girls who want a frown,
Frowns and wrinkles and pouts—oh, my!
How many 'twould make—one cloudy sky!

I think I should like it better
  A sunshiny day to take
And cut it down for dimples and smiles—
  What beautiful ones 'twould make!
Enough for all the dear little girls
With pretty bright eyes and waving curls,
To drive the scowls and frowns away,
Just like the sun on a cloudy day.

"GOOD-NIGHT AND GOOD-BY."

From the Companion.

"She is a good friend to you, Janet," Gertie Armstrong said to her friend indignantly, "and you ought not to turn her into ridicule. If a person was as kind and generous to me as old Miss Harding is to you, I would bite my tongue off before I'd laugh at her."

"That's because you don't know her as I do," laughed pretty Janet Gordon. "She is so full of queer, old-fashioned notions and ways, that she might as well have come down from her grandmother's portrait. Why, if I didn't laugh sometimes, people would think I admired her, or was like her."

"They may think worse things. They may think you malicious or ungrateful."

"Well, I can't help it if they do. I don't deny that I'm glad to get away from this wretched hole where ma is always grumbling, and the babies are always crying; for Miss Harding's house is beautiful, as you know, and she takes me out into society and all that. But why don't she keep me with her altogether? That's one of her ridiculous notions. She says no child ought to be taken from a parent, particularly from a widowed mother. Nonsense? As if my widowed mother wouldn't be to happy to part with me."

Gertie was disgusted and remained silent.

"Oh, I can see what you think, Miss Prim," cried Janet. "You know I don't set up for being good and sensible as you do. I only care for being amused and having pretty dresses."

"Yes, you certainly have plenty of those."

"Pretty dresses? Yes, of course, or I couldn't go out with her. Do you know I believe she's glad of an excuse to go out, and to have company at home. And when the excuse happens to be so good-looking and attractive"—she said with a little laugh—"well, it's a kind of reflected glory, don't you see? Like a handsome piece of furniture!"

"You do her injustice." Gertie answered gravely. "When Miss Harding lost her twin sister—her only near relative—I've heard my mother say she didn't go into society at all, and it's a painful effort for her to do so now."

Janet fairly screamed with laughter.

"Why, she lost her sister long before I was born, at least nineteen years ago. To be sure she whimpers whenever she speaks of her, but as for pain, just look at her dress, will you! Blazing red poppies, or small sunflowers, in a green velvet bonnet, and poppies in her bouquet, or wherever she can stick them. And then, that green velvet dress, and her yellow weazen face—it makes her look like an old witch. But I suppose next, you'll try and persuade me she dresses in perfect taste."

"No, I did not speak of her dress. But hers is a harmless eccentricity which should not weigh with any one who knows what a good, benevolent woman she is."

"Oh, you can preach!" cried Janet pettishly. "But you don't go out with her and see people giggling and punching each other, as she passes."

"I am very sure they don't laugh to her face," Gertie said sarcastically. "She's too rich for people to insult her. She loves you, and besides you are a kind of relative, and it wouldn't be out of place for you to give her a hint about her dress. Why don't you tell her kindly that it is not becoming?"

"Catch me doing anything so stupid! She'd never forgive me. When she does ask my opinion, it's to have me admire her things, not find fault with them. She's as vain and credulous as she can be."

"Is it possible you don't feel any gratitude?" Gertie asked, gazing curiously at the pretty, mocking face.

"Gratitude? Well, of course, I'm overwhelmed by her favors. If I don't, she'd stop giving them quickly enough, I'm sure of that. But I don't mind telling you, that playing grateful is awfully tiresome work. Besides there isn't so very much obligation, after all. We are distantly related, and she's as rich as Crœsus, while my folks are poor enough, goodness knows. Why shouldn't some of her money be spent on me? Besides she's fond of young people, and if she hadn't taken me up, she'd have taken some other girl. As for affection, that's not in the compact."

"No," thought Gerty, indignantly, "that is not likely to be in any compact you could make. You haven't changed a bit since we were at school together. Selfish, cold hearted, and treacherous, you must always be, and I'm ashamed of myself for liking you, and calling you my friend."

Ignorant of Gertie's thoughts, Janet kissed her as she rose as she rose to go, and said amicably, "I'm afraid I've shocked you dreadfully, but it's such a comfort to be able to talk freely to a safe friend about things that are unpleasant. You and Wilson Griswold are the only two people in the world in whom I really confide."

"Wilson Griswold!" exclaimed Gertie pausing, with her hand on the door. "Why, he is as treacherous and ill-natured as he can be. I advise you not to make a confident of him."

Janet laughed, and shook her head, and thought if Gertie only knew how much Wilson admired her, and how very sparkling his wit was when it was directed against Miss Harding, she would know he would never betray her confidences about "Cousin Peggy."

About four o'clock, Janet went to Miss Harding's house, with a light heart and a happy face. They were going to a dinner party, and Miss Harding was already dressed in her usual bright colors. The red poppies in her bonnet had given place to small, bright, yellow sunflowers.

"How do you like my new bonnet?" Miss Harding asked. "I sometime think yellow isn't as becoming to me as it used to be when I was young."

"Oh, how can you say so, Cousin Peggy?" looking at her in affected admiration. "Why the flowers are perfect. French flowers always are. Nothing could be more becoming. Those tints really make your complexion fairer."

"I'm glad to hear you say so, for I should be very sorry to part with my poppies and sunflowers. No doubt you think it strange I am found of them. But you see, my dear, when sister Becky and I were children, my mother was very poor, and we lived in a poor, mean cottage. In the narrow yard, we made a little strip of flower garden, which Becky and I tended. We had no money with which to buy flowers, but the neighbors gave us poppy and sunflower seeds, and our little plot of ground became gorgeous.

"Then mother died, and Uncle James left us his large fortune; but when Becky and I moved from the poor old home, that we loved on mother's account, we brought seed from our dear flowers. Becky loved them so much that she always wore them, and used to call them our memorial flowers. No exotic gave her half so much pleasure. She had a constant mind, Becky had, and never slighted old friends. When she was dying she said:

"'Peggy, bury with me some of the old sunflowers and poppies, and by them, perhaps, mother will know that I have never forgotten the dear old home.' I dare say graver colors would be more suitable for my age, but I think so little of such things, and the flowers are so precious to me. It is a pleasure to fancy that possibly even now, Becky may know by these flowers that I too have remembered."

Janet tried to look sympathetic, but it cost her an effort, so she exclaimed, "O Cousin Peggy, I wouldn't think of wearing grave, dowdy colors that would make you look as old as the hills!"

"But I am an old woman. You must reconcile yourself to that fact, my child."

"Oh, I don't like to think it," replied Janet, looking grieved. "I'd like you to be just twenty years old. But you don't look old. Indeed, indeed, you don't!"

"Don't I? Well, you know best, but my eyes are getting so dim, I can't see my own face in the mirror. You will have to be my mirror, dear, and I'm afraid you are a partial one. But it's nearly time to start. Run up stairs, and look on your dressing table. You'll find a little present there for you."

"Dear, warm-hearted girl!" Miss Harding murmured to herself as Janet left the room. "How grateful she is! Well, well, what better use can I make of my fortune than to benefit her? I am glad I am able to provide for her so that after my death she will not be forced to earn her own living or be dependent upon any one for support. Did the bracelets please you, dear?" she asked, as Janet with a radiant face rushed into the room.

"Oh, they're too lovely! You're too ood to me, darling Cousin Peggy!"

In her secret soul the girl was saying, "I'm so disappointed, for I wanted a diamond broach. I've been crazy for one, and she knows it. This pair of plain gold bracelets aren't worth having. What a mean old thing she is!"

Arrived at Mrs. Lorton's, where they were to dine, Janet's spirits rose. Pretty, well-dressed, supposed to be the sole heiress of her wealthy and eccentric relative, she received a great deal of attention. After dinner a dance was proposed, and Miss Harding gazed with pride and delight at the girl's grace and beauty. Towards midnight, however, the old lady began to get sleepy and tired.

"Janet is so fond of dancing I won't take her away just yet," she thought. "But it's so close here where all these people are, that I'll sit on the balcony awhile, and get a little fresh air."

The balcony was deserted, and as Miss Harding sat there her kindly thoughts turned to the girl she loved. "I don't like to see that worthless Wilson Griswold hanging about Janet," she thought. "I dare say he thinks she is going to be very wealthy, and it is to save her from being the prey of fortune-hunters like him that I shall be careful that the fortune I leave her shall be in the hands of trustees. Nevertheless, I shall speak to her about it."

The voice of the very man she was thinking of sounded almost in her ears. He and Janet had taken seats near the open door that led to the balcony. The balcony was dark, and they did not see the solitary figure sitting at the side of one of the pillars but a few feet away. Mr. Griswold was saying, with a sarcastic laugh,—

"Upon my word, Miss Janet, you ought to correct 'Cousin Peggy's taste! She's a big sunflower sure enough this evening; or rather she's a hoary old ruin, over which the sunflowers are nodding their yellow heads. Her costumes must drive you frantic."

A laugh answered him. That rippling, merry laugh which Miss Harding used to love, for she thought it made the music of an innocent, happy heart.

"What can I do, Mr. Griswold? It's simply a choice between poppies and sunflowers; for one of these flowers she must wear in memoriam, she says. If the glass doesn't show her that wrinkles and a yellow skin do not exactly harmonize with such ornaments how can I give her better taste?"

"Ah! but the ridiculous figure must annoy you," drawled the gentleman. "Your taste is so true that such an outrage must be exceedingly painful."

"Oh, you don't know all I have to endure. Why, she's as capricious and exacting as she can be, and as absurd in her notions and her ways as she is in her millinery. Often I can hardly keep from laughing in her face, but that would spoil everything, you know."

"No chance of being her heiress, then, eh?"

"Well, she's very old, and I can see that she is breaking every day. Of course I can't say that I want her to die, but I shan't be sorry when my slavery is over and I can enjoy myself."

Mr. Griswold laughed. "When that happy event comes off, you ought to erect an altar and decorate it with poppies and sunflowers, and do reverence to them every morning. A kind of memorial service to the manes of your benefactress."

"I hate them! I do believe you are laughing at me."

"Never. But she is very good to you. Of course you have some regard for her?"

"No, candidly I can't say that I have. She's old and ugly and has such queer ways, and everybody thinks her so absurd, that if she weren't so rich and I so poor, I wouldn't stay a day with her. A small fortune wouldn't tempt me. But I suppose she's looking for me now, that she may go home. I must go and hunt her up."

Stunned and almost breathless, Miss Harding remained on the balcony after they left, her hands clasped over her eyes, striving to realize that the cruel words she had heard were not a fearful dream. Her whole heart's love had gone out to this ungrateful, treacherous girl, and there more was grief than anger in this harsh awakening. It was a long time before she gained composure enough to enter the house and encounter the crowd within. But she succeeded in controlling her feelings, so that she met Janet without giving any sign of the storm which was raging within her. When they were seated in the carriage, she said to the coachman,—

"William, drive first to Mrs. Gordon's, as Miss Janet returns home to-night."

"I thought I was to stay with you," Janet said, in astonishment. "Neither this night, nor any future night", was the trembling reply. "I was on the the balcony and overheard your conversation with Wilson Griswold. I shall not need your memorial altar of poppies and sunflowers." Janet burst into tears. Nothing more was said, for Miss Harding felt that she could not control her own feelings. When the carriage stopped at Mrs. Gordon's, she simply said, "Here we are at your mother's. Good-night—and good-by!"

THE COST OF LIVING

Present Prices Compared With Those of Eighty or Ninety Years Ago.

From the Philadelphia Record.

In view of some curious efforts to increase the emoluments of goverment officers, on the ground that it costs two or three times as much to live now as it did when these offices were created, it may be well to recall sundry statistics given by Senator George, of Mississippi, in a recent speech. Having repeatedly found his objections to the modern increase of official salaries met by the broad assertion that it costs three times as much to live now as it did when the goverment was founded, he determined to be no longer put down by this statement without finding out exactly how far it was true. He delved among the books of the Congressional library, and the conclusion he reached was that "in all the substantials of life all the necessaries and the comforts of life, the prices were higher during Washington's and the elder Adam's administration than they are now. I allude especially to provisions, things consumed by men. Of course we all know as to clothing that the improvement in labor-saving machinery, the invention of the sewing-machine, have greatly reduced the prices of those necessary articles. As to fuel, I have looked into that, and the price of coal is now less than it was during the administration of Washington."

Rents, of course, are enormously greater now in the large cities than they were in the beginning of the century; but, while this fact must be kept in mind for those places, Mr. George insists that even rents, "in the rural districts in the non-manufacturing and commercial states are as low now as they ever were before in the south." Here are some of the statistical comparisons of Senator George:

"Beef per barrel was worth in 1795 $13, in 1796 it was worth $14, in 1834 it was worth $8.50, and the average price of beef for the forty years commencing in 1795 and ending in 1834 was $10.95 cents per barrel. In the last ten years the price of beef has not been less than $10.25 per barrel.

"Take the article of corn, a very necessary article. In 1795, 1796 and 1797 it was worth $1 per bushel and over. That was the lowest price. The average price for the forty years from 1794 to 1834 was 86 1-2 cents per bushel. In the last ten years it has never been as high as this average except in 1882, when there was a drouth and corn was exceptionally high.

"Take the article of coffee. In 1795, 1706, and 1797, it was worth respectively, 21, 25 and 26 cents per pound, and the average price for the forty years up to 1834 was 23 cents. For the last ten years it has not been up to that average.

"Take the article of sugar. In 1795 it was worth 14 cents per pound. It went as high as 17 cents in 1816, and never got as low as 10 cents till 1820. So there has been a fall in the price of sugar."

Mr. George at that point noted that it was shown a year ago in Congress that sugar was a leading item of expense in a boarding-house for factory operatives. He then added these figures:

"Take pork, sir. In 1795 it was $18 per barrel; in 1801 it was $26. In 1808 it fell to $15, and was never as low as $15 again until 1820, and then it was $14.50. The average price for the forty years from 1795 to 1834 was $16.99 per barrel. It is less than that now.

"Take flour, a very essential article of support. The average price of a barrel of flour from 1795 to 1834 was $8.51. In 1795 it was $12, in 1796 it was $16, in 1801 it was $13, in 1817 it was $14.75, the average being, as I have stated, $8.51. It is now, and has been for a long time, much lower than that.

"Take wheat. My statistics of wheat do not go beyond the year 1806. I cannot find them beyond that time. In that year the average price of wheat was $1.35; in 1807, 1808 and 1809 it was $1.25 per bushel; in 1810 it was $1.50 per bushel; in 1811 it was $1.75 per bushel, whereas the price to-day in Chicago is about 98 cents. Since that time wheat has fallen lower but the fluctuations through speculation do not affect the general comparison.

"Take rice, another article of consumption. In 1795 it was worth 7 cents per pound; in 1796 it was worth 8 cents per pound, and the average for the forty years from 1795 to 1834 was $4.61 per hundred, 4.61 cents per pound, and this was caused by the low price from 1820 down. Before that time it was higher. The average for the last ten years would be but very little more."

These figures may in some particulars be attacked, and there are other considerations that should be taken into account. It is no doubt true that the number of things classed as necessaries and comforts, or, in other words, the number of things deemed ordinary requsites for a given condition or calling in life, has been multiplied of late years. Doubtless food is not relatively so great an item of the total expense in many families as it was in former generations. Nevertheless, Mr. George's investigations are interesting, and perhaps may lead to some caution hereafter in accepting assertions hitherto so little challenged as to have almost become axioms.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

The Massachusetts legislature has again defeated a bill to repeal the law prohibiting atheists from testifying in courts.

Massachusetts has taken all the preliminary steps toward the adoption of the biennial system of legislative sessions. A special election to ratify the action of the Legislature on the subject will be held next summer, and the proposition will undoubtedly be ratified.

General Grant's article on the battle of Shiloh, in which he denied that there was a surprise at the beginning, brings out a host of authorities controverting Gen. Grant's statement. All admit the surprise and think the hard fighting and victory afterwards was all the more creditable to the army on that account.

While stocks and general merchandise have greatly depreciated in New York, real estate has increased in value and it is believed it will escape the downfall that has attended the period of stagnation, even though that period should be prolonged for a year. Mortgages have increased more than twenty per cent.

The abrogation by congress of the Texas Pacific Land grant was based on a clear case of entire default on the part of the railroad. The whole of the lands have been lands restored to the public domain and made subject to disposal, under the General Laws of the United States, as though said grant had never been made.

A writer in Blackwood's Magazine for February estimates the losses of investors in securities on the London Stock Exchange during the year 1884 at seventy millions sterling. Nearly everything the English investor touched has melted away. The shrinkage in U. S. railroad bonds and shares he puts at forty-seven millions alone. He well characterizes it as a "black year for investors."

An Illinois paper claims to have the facts and figures to prove that the months of January and February 1875 knock the present year's record cold. Here they are: Total mornings below zero in January and February, 1875, 32; in 1885, 22. Total mornings below to date in January and February, 1875, 31; in 1885, 22. Total mornings below in January, 1875, 17; in January 1885, 13. These figures are from Northern Illinois, but they probably correspond with those farther north.

Robert Collyer preached recently, in New York city, on the subject of "George Eliot." While he paid the highest tribute to her genius and to the elevated tone of her writings, he said: "I can not but believe that she has made one grave mistake, and that, say what we will, or love her for her beautiful genius as we do, she must answer for it." He added, however, that he felt under such obligations to her that he would as soon make accusation against his own mother or sister as to press the accusation against her.

The English have already lost many splendid soldiers in the Soudan campaign, but what has a still sharper sting to their national pride, they have also lost much of their military renown and prestige, and many more brave lives will have to be sacrificed to regain it. The object of General Wolseley's expedition was the rescue of General Gordon. Unfortunately that is now no longer among the possibilities, and if the war shall be prosecuted any longer it will simply be for the purpose of vindicating British supremacy and gratifying the English desire for revenge.

England has 65 square miles of colony to the square mile of her own area; Holland 54, Portugal 20, Denmark 6.80, France 1.90, Spain 0.86 square miles. The area of the British colonies is nearly 8,000,000 of square miles—rather less than the area of the Russian Empire, including Siberia and Central Asia; but if the area of the native foudatory States in India, amounting to 509,284 square miles, be added, over which England exercises as great control as Russia does over much of the territory under its sway, together with that of the United Kingdom itself, 120,727 miles, then the area of the British Empire exceeds that of the Russian Empire by about 200,000 square miles, and it covers within a fraction of one-sixth of the whole land area of the globe.

The people of Montana are rising in earnest and beginning to protest against the manner in which the public domain is squandered—first, among cattle syndicates, and second, by division into reservations for occupancy by Indians who are already self-supporting. The press of the Territory also devotes great space to the subject, and is bringing a very strong pressure to bear to have the public domain thrown open to actual settlers. "A Territory running 400 miles east and west and 100 miles north and south, covered with nutritious grass, well watered and timbered, an area larger than the State of Indiana, is held by 1,500 Piegan Indians. In view of such flagrant injustice as is shown in these instances the feeling of the people of Montana is that these large reservations ought to be cut down to the standard of actual necessities.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

HOUSE.—Bills passed for a $100,000 public building at La Crosse and $100,000 to pay citizens for supplies furnished Indians in Minnesota between 1860 and 1862. The river and harbor bill was considered. At 6 p. m. the opponents of the measure began to filibuster, and this was continued until adjournment at midnight.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 25.—The claim of Nathan Myrick of St. Paul and others for the loss of money for goods sold to Indians just before the outbreak in 1862, for which the Indians could not pay, because their annuities were cut off, passed the house to-day. The bill originated in the senate and there passed, allowing $120,000 for these claims. The house amended the bill by providing that the secretary of war should approve the amount of goods sold to the Indians and pay the claims, if they aggregated less than $100,000, and nothing should be paid in excess of that amount. The story of the claim is that in the summer of 1862 certain bands of the Sioux Indians assembled at the Yellow Medicine and Redwood agencies in Minnesota for the purpose of receiving their annuities, which they had been accustomed to receive about the last of June or the first of July. The money for the payments did not come at the usual time. The Indians waited until their supplies were exhausted, and also those of the government at that point. They became hungry, dissatisfied and restless. Certain licensed traders, among them Mr. Myrick, by the advice of the Indian agent, Maj. Galbraith, furnished supplies, as the only measure of preventing an outbreak, until their stores were exhausted, relying upon the money soon to arrive for the annuities for payment. Before the money arrived, the outbreak occurred. The Indians, goaded to desperation by hunger, committed atrocities for which they were punished in part by the confiscation of moneys due them from the United States amounting to $5,631,900. Payment of the annuities was stopped; the means from which they could have paid for the supplies furnished them on the credit of future annuities was wholly taken from them. Myrick has been pressing this claim for ten years.

SENATE.—A Pacific railroad funding bill was introduced. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill passed. The trade dollar retirement bill was debated at great length without action.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—The senate committee on appropriations increased the naval appropriation bill as sent from the house by $2,364,500. The principal items of increase are an appropriation of $200,000 for continuing the work on the double-turreted monitors; $500,000 for the armament of new cruisers and gun boats; $115,000 for the construction of steel cruisers and gun boats, and $50,000 for the general maintenance of the bureau, docks, etc.

Senator Sherman reported to the senate yesterday an amendment to the sundry civil bill to provide for the erection in the District of Columbia of a statue of Gen. Lafayette, to cost $50,000.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 26.—A lively contest occurred in the house over the bill to repeal the pre-emption, timber culture and desert lands acts. This bill is on the speaker's table with amendments made by the senate. There is a decided majority in the house favorable to concurrence in the senate amendments, but the Northwestern members are very generally hostile to the repeal, and have been diligently watching to prevent final action on the bill. It cannot be reached out of the regular order, except by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules. This latter motion was made to-day by Cobb of Indiana, his object being to have the bill referred to the committee on public lands. The effect of the passage of this motion would have been to give the committee the privilege of reporting back the bill at any time for concurrence in the senate amendments. The Northwestern members actively resisted this, and it was rejected by a vote of 166 to 93—not the required two-thirds. It is probable the bill will die on the speaker's table. Mr. Payson made a strong effort before the committee on rules this morning to amend the house rules so as to allow a majority vote to take a bill from the speaker's table for reference to committees. This proposed rule was intended to give opportunity to get at the pre-emption bill. The committee refused to report the desired amendment, and hence the desperate attempt to suspend the rules and pass the pre-emption bill.

SENATE.—Mr. Morrill, who has persisted in the effort to secure the passage of amendments to the trade dollar bill of the house providing for the suspension of silver coinage, attempted to call up that measure. He admitted that in view of the recent action there was no chance to secure the suspension of silver coinage, and appealed to the senate to strike out the proposed amendment and pass the house bill to retire the trade dollar. This was met by a motion to proceed with the bill limiting the time for the presentation of claims against the government, which was carried by a vote of 34 to 21. Subsequently the very bill which displaced the silver bill was laid aside for a pension bill; thus indicating that the senate has at last been brought to realize that it is a useless waste of time to further debate the silver question.

The house substitute for the river and harbor bill appropriating $5,000,000 was laid before the senate, and having been read once, Mr. Cameron (Wis) objected to its second reading; so the bill lies on the table, not having been referred to a committee.

The unanimous consent to take up the bill for the relief of Letitia Tyler Semple, daughter of the late President Tyler. The bill would give her a pension of $50 a month. The lady named was now blind and dependent on charity in the city of Washington.

Mr. Riddleberger objected. He saw no reason for pensioning president's daughters.

Mr. Cockrell also objected. He thought it a crime against the people to pass such bills. It was the beginning of a civil pension list.

A vote on the bill resulted, yeas 11, nays 17.

HOUSE.—Mr. Willis presented the river and harbor matter and succeeded in passing it under suspension of the rules.

The bill appropriates $5,000,000, to be expended under the direction and with the approval of the secretary of war for the continuation and completion of works designated in the last river and harbor law. The bill contains the following provisions: That the work at Galveston harbor shall be treated as if the sum of $250,000 had been appropriated by the bill last year. Any money which shall be allotted under this act for the improvement of the Mississippi river, below Cairo (except so much thereof as shall be necessary to prevent works in progress from waste and injury) shall be expended in continuation and completion of the works at the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, to the end that the plan of the commission for the improvement of the river may be fully tested; and money allotted to the Mississippi river shall be expended by the secretary of war and in accordance with plans approved by him.

There are thirty-six public buildings in the various parts of the Union that have been provided for in the sundry civil bill that went over to the senate.

The bill fixes the limit in four cases. The Dallas, Tex., building is not to cost over $100,000; Jefferson City, Mo., not over $132,000; St. Joseph, Mo., not over $300,000; and that of Minneapolis not over $500,000.

SENATE.—A substitute of the river and harbor bill was read a second time, and referred to the committee on commerce, which, on request of Mr. McMillian, got permission to sit during sessions of the senate.

Mr. Mitchell offered a resolution: That the committee on finance be and hereby is instructed forthwith to prepare and report to the senate a proper bill to provide for the immediate suspension of the coinage of standard silver dollars, and for the resumption of such coinage whenever the commercial value of the standard dollar aforesaid shall rise to within 5 per cent. of par with the standard gold dollar of the United States. The resolution was laid over. The senate then on motion of Mr. Wilson, took up the house bill to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the state of Iowa to aid the construction of the Sioux City & St. Paul railroad. The bill as passed by the house, declares such unearned lands forfeited; requires the attorney general to institute legal proceedings to ascertain and determine their quantity, and provides that actual bona fide settlers already on the lands shall have preference of entry at the land office, etc.

Mr. McMillan opposed it. It was a proposition, he said, which, in the name of popular prejudice, sought to do violence to public private rights. The grant had been not to a railroad company, but to the state of Iowa, and was an entire grant. Pending debate on this bill, house bills providing for the erection of public buildings at various places were taken up and passed.

The debate on the Sioux City & St. Paul forfeiture bill was resumed. Mr. Hoar said citizens of Massachusetts had invested $800,000 at 6 per cent in that enterprise. He thought such men were entitled to justice at the hands of the senate. The land was all those people would have for their money. They were entitled to lands coterminous with the completed portion of the road.

HOUSE.—A long debate took place on the late silver letter of President Cleveland, the fortification bill being under consideration. The debate was of a partisan character and of little account.

SUMMARY OF NEWS OF THE WEEK.

American Flour.

A correspondent of the Montreal Herald, in discussing this tax, corrects some statements of Mr. Howland to the minister of finance. He claims that the statement that competition came mostly from wheat grown in Dakota and Minnesota, which, by the new roller process of milling, yielded on an average about 66 per cent of high-grade, or what is known as patent flour, is absurd. The average of high-grade flour taken from good wheat is not greater than 40 per cent. Mr. Howland claimed that Americans sell their flour in Canada at slaughter rates. In contradiction of this statement the quotations of the Montreal markets show that American strong bakers' sells at $4.50@5, and Canadian strong bakers' at $4@4.25, on the same day. The truth is, the American miller does not slaughter this or any other grade of flour. He sells strong bakers' to his Canadian customers on precisely the same terms as he sells to his American customers. In the West—Winona, for instance, the place mentioned by Mr. Howland—flour of all grades is sold to customers at the same prices, no matter where they come from. If it is going East the custom is for the miller to pay the freight to Chicago, and if he pays the Canadian duty he adds that also to his invoice. American millers cannot afford to make their neighbors in Canada a present of part of the price of the flour they sell them. If they did so they would soon have to close their mills. In the matter of freights it was claimed that flour could be shipped from Winona, Minn., to Ottawa for 42 cents per barrel, while from Toronto to Ottawa the rate was 35 cents. Here was a difference of only seven cents per barrel as against one of the furthest points. From Minneapolis to Montreal the rate was 48 cents, and from Toronto 35 cents, a difference of only 13 cents. The facts are that the rate between Winona and Ottawa was not 42 cents per barrel, but 81 cents; and the rate between Minneapolis and Montreal is not 48 cents, but 81 cents also. The freight between the points mentioned is usually divided into two parts—one part from west of Chicago, and the other part from Chicago to the East. From Winona to Ottawa, for instance, the freight is 81 cents per barrel, divided this way: From Winona to Chicago, 25 cents, and from Chicago to Ottawa 46 cents. From Winona to Toronto, the freight to Chicago is 35 cents, from Chicago to Toronto 30 cents.

General Grant's Days are Numbered.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 27.—A special to the Times from New York, based on reliable medical authority, says:

Notwithstanding the rose-colored report of Gen. Grant's health recently given in a medical journal, the truth is Gen. Grant is a very sick man and his death is apparently not far distant. The public have no conception of the shattered condition of his physical system. It is hoped the affection of the tongue may not prove fatal, but there is as yet no appearance that it is not the development of a malignant and fatal disease. Although somewhat better now than some weeks ago, the enlarged and inflamed tongue continues to make it painful to speak or swallow fluids, the only nourishment he can take. In addition to this, distressing malady, Gen. Grant is a terrible sufferer from neuralgia, and it seems to have taken possession of his whole system. He has had most of his teeth drawn to lessen the neuralgic torture, and his injury in the hip caused by his fall a year ago is still a source of great suffering and forbids physical exercise. It is a fact that should no longer be concealed from the country that Gen. Grant is rapidly breaking down, and apparently without hope of reaction, and unless there should be some unexpected relief he will not be long among the living. He is wonderfully patient and uncomplaining, and he profoundly appreciates the expressions of sympathy which have been called forth by his recent appalling misfortunes. He works every day with bandaged head and in unremitting pain to finish his military autobiography or history of the war, and hopes to complete it this spring. The first volume is entirely finished, but not revised, and the second volume is more than half done. He has not taken time to revise the first volume because of his apprehension that he may not be able to finish his second volume.

LESS ALARMING.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, Feb. 27.—A gentleman who has recently had occasion to acquaint himself with Gen. Grant's condition, said this morning that Gen. Grant was probably no worse than he had been for some time; that the cancer trouble did baffle his physicians to an extent, and that his friends did not doubt that it would finally prove fatal. There is no cause for present uneasiness, however, as Gen. Grant would probably live a year yet, unless something turned up to hasten his death.

Trade with Mexico.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The report of Special Treasury Agent Evans on the operation of trade between the United States and Mexico, shows that the system is complicated, seventeen papers being required for on importation, and costs $14.56 where goods are valued at over $40; that everything seems to be done by customs officers to retard business. On the question of reciprocity, Agent Evans says:

It is urged that congress would relieve this country from the gloom and suffering caused by business depression by adopting reciprocity relations with Mexico, and thus open a new channel for the sale of American products. Disappointment, in my judgment, awaits such expectations. Of twenty-eight articles admitted free from Mexico under the treaty, fourteen are now free under the general tariff law. Of seventy three articles to be introduced into Mexico without duty, fifty are now free, except a charge for package or bulk duty, and twenty-three comprise articles for which there appears to be no market in Mexico.

Smashup on the Wabash.

KANKAKEE, Ill., Special Telegram, Feb. 27.—The Wabash east-bound passenger train had a passenger car ditched about four and a half miles east of Centerville, by a broken rail, this morning, and the car was completely wrecked and its occupants badly shaken up, and all of them sustained injuries. D. Gibson of this city, conductor, had a shoulder broken, and his wife sustained slight injuries. F. Burns, roadmaster, was badly hurt about the back and hips. F. M. Gregory of Springfield, claim agent in employ of the road, was badly bruised about the head. Mrs. Gilbert of Salt Lake City, who was traveling in company with Mrs. Gibson, was seriously hurt about the head and shoulders. The other occupants of the car, to the number of seven, have injuries of a slight nature.

The Luxurious Chief Law Officer.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 27.—Soon after Mr. Brewster was made attorney general he ordered a large quantity of high-priced furniture, bronze clocks, candelabra, Turkish rugs, etc., for his room in the department of justice. These cost about $800. When he tried to get congress to pay for them the house appropriation committee refused to make any appropriation for the purpose. Mr. Brewster sent word to the appropriation committee that he did not believe in any second-class kind of furniture, and consequently ordered the best, and that if congress did not pay for it he would pay the bill himself; but at the expiration of his official term he would take the same away with him. The committee decided the furniture should remain, and the deficiency bill which passed the house to-day contained an item appropriating the necessary sum.

Hendricks in a Railway Accident.

GRAFTON, W. V., Special Telegram, Feb. 27.—Two miles east of Parkersburg, at 4 o'clock this morning, Vice President-elect Hendricks had a narrow escape from death. His special train was running as Section No. 2 to the Washington express. By some mistake Train No. 188, which was sidetracked at Kanawha station, pulled out after the first section had passed. After running about a mile it struck a clear piece of track, at the other end of which Hendricks' train was seen approaching at lightning speed. The engineers of each train made every effort to stop the trains, but did not succeed in doing so until they met with force enough to knock off a cowcatcher on Train No. 188, and awaken Mr. Hendricks' party. Superintendent Clemens, of the Baltimore & Ohio, was on the special, and was so appalled at the narrow escape that he discharged the conductor and engineer of 188 on the spot.

Retaliating on Germany.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The house foreign affairs committee to-day authorized Eaton to submit to the house a favorable report upon Lefevre's resolution calling for retaliatory action for Germany's restrictions upon American products. Eaton takes the ground occupied by Lefevre's resolution, that under our treaties with Germany that country has been favored above all others; that discrimination against American products was in violation of the spirit of these treaties, and that the situation warrants the action suggested in the resolution.

The corner stone of the capitol of Texas will be laid at Austin on the 2d of March next, being the forty-ninth anniversary of the declaration of Texan independence.

Lieut. R. W. Raimey, executive officer of the United States ship Portsmouth, disappeared from Norfolk, Va., ten days ago, and no trace of him has been discovered.

Francis E. Warren of Wyoming was recently nominated governor of the Territory of Wyoming, and Theodore F. Singiser receiver of public moneys at Mitchell, Dak.

Much excitement has been created at Port Townsend, Wash., over the disappearance of Thomas Nevins, who has been living there under the alias of John B. Voorhees. He was formerly mayor of Adrian, Mich.

At Grayson, Ky., a difficulty took place in which Wesley Newman was killed and Charles Baker mortally wounded, with knives, by Samuel, Jesse and Richard Kizer. Jailer Tyree and a posse of men started in pursuit of the Kizers.

George Bancroft, the historian, who is a native of Worcester, Mass., has signalized his desire to present that city a fund of $10,000 to form an Aaron and Lucretia Bancroft scholarship fund; the income to be devoted to the liberal education of some one scholar from Worcester.

At Miles City, Mont., an indictment for murder in the first degree has been found against Maurice Sullivan, alias Bob Sullivan, charging him with killing Dr. Carlin during the holidays. The case has excited considerable comment heretofore, having grown out of the so-called "Dance of Death" shooting on Christmas morning.

Baron Wentworth, Liberal, moved an amendment to the vote of censure. The amendment declares her majesty's forces should not occupy the Soudan longer than necessary; and, in the interests of Egypt and the British empire, it is undesirable to prevent the Egyptian people from exercising the right to select their own government.

James McDaniels, an old and highly respected pioneer of Oregon, was assassinated near Ashland, Jackson county, on the night of the 20th of last November. He was returning home after dark, when he was fired upon by some one in ambush. McDaniels body was literally riddled with buckshot. A neighbor named O'Niel and Daniel's wife have been arrested.

The Duluth land office is again in jeopardy. At the interior department it is said that Senator Sabin has recomended the appointment of H. C. Kendall as register, to supercede Judge Carey, who, it will be remembered, received the office when R. C. Mitchell's appointment was upset by charges of fraudulent timber entries made by him and others.

The United Ireland of Dublin, in commenting on the proposed visit of the prince of Wales to Ireland, disclaims any gratuitous disrespect for the prince; "but," it says, "if castle flunkies organize mock demonstrations of enthusiasm, they may rest assured there will be organized counter displays which will overshadow any displays that Earl Spencer may inaugurate."

The Century company will not publish Gen. Grant's autobiography, as at first supposed. It is not that he objected to the Century company, but personal reasons led him to accept the proposition of Charles L. Webster, Mark Twain's agent and publisher, who has just taken one of Gen. Grant's sons in business with him. The Century company and Gen. Grant are the best of friends, but the claims of Mr. Webster are of a longer friendship.

A horrible tragedy has occurred in Union county. A farmer named Most Caton, living near Smith's mills, and his sons, hung Mrs. Caton, whom Caton married four years ago. She was a widow before she married Caton, and owned a small parcel of land, which Caton wished her to deed to him. She declined to do so, which enraged him. With the aid of his sons he took her out and hung her, after beating her terribly. The Catons were arrested after a stubborn fight.

Mandan Pioneer: It is stated, on what may be regarded as pretty good authority, that the grand jury will be called upon, at its forthcoming meeting, to investigate the charge against the Marquis de Mores of shooting the hunter Luffsey. It will be remembered that Luffsey met with his death about a year and nine months ago at Little Missouri. The case was brought before Justices Bateman and Collins at Mandan, both of whom acquitted the marquis. They did not think the marquis had committed any crime, but held that if he was the one who shot Luffsey he did it in self-defense.

The president invited President-elect Cleveland to be his guest at the executive mansion from the time of his arrival in this city until he is formally inaugurated. The invitation has been declined with thanks, as apartments had already been secured for Mr. Cleveland, and because of the present uncertainty as to the exact time of his arrival at the national capital. The retiring president will call upon the incoming president at the hotel and escort him to the capitol to be inaugurated. President Arthur has accepted an invitation to attend the inauguration ball, and has assured the general committee of his cordial support and co-operation in their endeavors to make the affair a brilliant success.

The house voted against the proposition to suspend silver coinage. This was a decided surprise. Those who advocated suspension were confident that a majority was on their side, and were almost certain that their strength would reach two-thirds of those present. On the other hand, the silver advocates did not even suspect that they could command a majority; although quite confident that they would be able to check their opponents by holding more than one-third of the strength of the house. Both sides, therefore, were decidedly surprised when the speaker announced that the result of the vote on Randall's motion to suspend the rules and pass the sundry civil bill was 118 yeas to 149 nays.

The house committee on foreign affairs, considered the paiticipation of this government in the Congo conference. The conclusion was reached that a resolution prepared by Representative Phelps would harmonize the views of the committee. The resolution provides "That no prospect of commercial advantage warrants a departure from the traditional policy of this government, which forbids all entangling alliances with nations of the old world; that the participation of delegates from the United States in the so-called Congo conference, while, as your committee believes, carefully guarded in purpose to confine their powers to the consideration of commercial interests exclusively, is unfortunate if it should be anywhere recognized as a departure from the policy which forbids this government to participate in any political combination or movement outside of the American continent."

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.—Nearly the whole day was absorbed in discussion over the high license bill, and a deadlock in the afternoon, which lasted three hours, and was caused by those in favor of the bill refusing to vote, was finally broken by the decision of Chairman Morrison that a quorum was reported present by the sergeant-at-arms, and the bill was defeated—21 to 2. Adjourned until 10 a. m.

The senators present and refusing to vote were as follows:

Billson, Clement, Comstock, Craig, Gilfillan J. B., Greenleaf, Hall, Hickman, Houlton, Johnson, Knudson, Pillsbury, Severance, Van Hoesen, Ward, Wells, Wilkins, Wilson—total, 18. The absentees were Clarke, Clement, Lawrence, Shaleen, Sergeant and Wheat.

With the eighteen refusers and the two ayes (Truax and Goodrich) a total of twenty left four of the absentees necessary to pass the bill. It is not likely that number could have been secured.

HOUSE.—The committee on public accounts reported the accounts of the state all correct. The contested election of Wyncoop vs. McKusick was indefinitely postponed. Bills were introduced: Relating to chattel mortgages; to provide a lien for mutual fire insurance companies; making Decoration day a legal holiday; to create a fourth judgeship in the Second judicial district; to provide for stenographers in all the state courts; to provide for the regulation of mutual building and savings associations; to provide a central weather observation and crop statistic bureau at Northfield. House bills passed: For a constitutional amendment repealing the present sixty-day limit to legislative sessions relating to the testimony of witnesses.

SENATE.—Bills were introduced amending the election laws in cities of more than 12,000 inhabitants; proposing amendments to the state constitution relating to eligibility for offices of governor and state treasurer, and as to increase of salary of judges; several bills amending the general tax laws. The general appropriation bills passed the senate by agreement, and were sent into the house. The senate bill regulating the practice of dentistry was passed. The bill transferring conditionally the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg to the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northern was recommended to pass in committee of the whole, and in the senate committee the grain inspection and warehouse bill was considered, and, after the adoption of numerous amendments, progress was reported. Late in the evening session Senator Wilson introduced a graduated liquor license bill, which was referred to the temperance committee. Adjourned until 10 a. m.

This new liquor bill provides for a graduated minimum license fee—the sums are left blank, but the intention is to fix them at from $100 in small towns to $250 in incorporated villages, and thence to $500 in cities of 2,000 or more inhabitants.

Senator Peck secured the indefinite postponement of the bill providing that townships could by vote secure high schools. He claimed that the law had been tried in Iowa for four years and found highly pernicious.

Senator C. D. Gilfillan has introduced two bills which propose the submission to the people at the next general election of amendments to the constitution. The first bill provides that the governor or state treasurer shall be eligible to election but once during a period of four years, and that no deputy to the state treasurer shall be eligible as a successor to his chief. The second bill provides for an amendment forbidding the increase of salary of any judge (supreme, district, probate or municipal) during the term of office of such judge.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced relating to interest on tax judgments; requiring the sale of property taken on chattel mortgages at public auction; relating to town plats; for a board for the inspection of steam boilers; amending the military code; to provide for the extension of the term of corporations. House bills were passed amending the charter of the Knife Falls Boom company; making minimum banking capital $10,000; for the levy of a state tax; the grain inspection bill; for another judge in Sixth judicial district; to legalize foreclosures made in firm names and mortgages foreclosed by administrators; for the taxation of telegraph companies, etc.; exempting parsonages from taxation; amending statutes relating to the cultivation of timber. Senate bills were passed: For an additional judge in the Seventh district; amending statutes relating to accounts of administrators; amending statutes relating to guardians; to punish offenses on railroad cars; to legalize religious corporations heretofore organized; amending election law; to prohibit the killing of game birds by artificial light; relating to the times of holding court in the Ninth district; relating to the plats of towns and cities. House bills lost: For an additional clerk in the public examiner's office.

SENATE.—The morning was taken up in routine proceedings. A number of local bills were introduced, and three from the judiciary committee, amending the statutes relative to terms of county auditors and treasurers, filing of complaints in civil actions and repayment of taxes paid erroneously by mortgagees. In the afternoon, on the call of the calendar, the following senate bills were passed: Transferring grant of Duluth & Winnipeg to St. Paul, Brainerd & Northwestern (30 to 15); extending the limits of St. Paul (as amended); appropriation bills for the state normal school (special and general). House bills were passed, providing for the location of a third hospital for the insane (Sadley's bill); establishing a municipal court in Mankato. Adjourned until 10 a. m.

Late yesterday afternoon the judiciary committee of the senate introduced a bill providing that all elections for supreme, district, or probate judges shall be on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, and in case a judge's term expires between elections, his successor shall be elected at the biennial election next preceding the time of such expiration. The bill was regarded as so fair and necessary that it was passed under suspension of the rules, and goes direct to the house.

HOUSE.—Bills were indefinitely postponed: Providing that no property shall be exempt from a lien for labor; amending tax laws; relating to terms of town officers. Bills were introduced: To make election days legal holidays; amending the election laws in cities of more than 12,000; to abolish the office of public examiner; to permit the depositing of state funds in banks in St. Paul or Minneapolis; to provide for the care of prisoners who may be related to the sheriff; to legalize certain boards of trade; amending act relating to township insurance companies; to legalize certain sheriff's certificates from execution sales. House bills passed: For a commission to locate a second state prison; regulating the practice of pharmacy; making railroads liable for the negligence of company employes. House bills lost: For the teaching of hygiene and physiology in the public schools. Senate bills passed: The new penal code. Adjourned to 9:30 a. m.

The committee on public accounts introduced a bill yesterday which proposes that the funds of the state may be deposited in any bank which shall be approved by the usual state officers and shall give a sufficient bond for the safe custody of the funds. It is now obligatory that the funds shall be deposited in the banks of St. Paul, and the interest on deposits was recently reduced from 3 to 2 per cent. The bill provides that the interest shall not be less than 3 per cent.

SENATE.—The senate passed to a third reading what is known as the graduated high license bill. The graduation is from $500 in cities over 9,000 inhabitants, to $50 in rural towns.

The senate concurred—by a vote of 35 to 2—in the house resolution calling upon congress to restore U. S. Grant to the retired list, and the result, by a clause in the resolution, will be telegraphed to congress. The two voting no were Hall and Christianson, (democrats.) Castle, Doran and Peck did not vote. Sackett, Vollmar, Welch, and Wilson voted aye.

Senator Clarke's bill reimbursing counties for extra tax out of the tax on railroad gross earnings was indefinitely postponed in senate committee of the whole.

The Senate passed joint resolution relating to lands claimed by Minnesota Southern railroad. Authorizing the lease for fifteen years of certain school lands.

Upon the report of the committee on taxes and tax laws, the senate indefinitely postponed the house bill exempting parsonages from taxation. There is still an opportunity for friends of the bill to move a reconsideration, but it is generally believed the bill has met its death blow.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: To amend laws relating to town insurance; relating to assignments for the benefit of creditors; to authorize towns, villages, etc., to establish voting places; fixing time of holding court in Freeborn county; amending laws relating to the adoption of children. The senate railroad bill was amended by inserting several sections from the house bill, and sent to the senate. Senate bills passed: To provide for service upon municipal corporations; to provide for the collection of judgments against municipal corporations. House bills passed: Providing for sale of lands forfeited to state; relating to service on domestic corporations; fixing annual school meeting; for taxation of certain timbered railroad lands; amending statutes relating to guardian and wards; to punish fraud in trademarks; relating to husband's agency in mechanics' liens; for support of state library; relating to duties of register of deeds; relating to filing school district bonds; for a monument at Gettysburg; appropriation for state horticultural society; providing for taking inventory of state property; amending statutes relating to drainage of lands; amending laws relating to corporations; relating to commitments to reform schools; for the reorganization of the state agricultural society; amending law to prevent debtors giving preferences; relating to service of domestic animals. Adjourned to 9:30 a. m.

The house judiciary committee has reported back Mr. Spaulding's bill for a reduction in the fees of the inspector of oils making the reduction apply only to inspections made in the city of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

SENATE.—Senator Wilson's bill for a graduated high license law, passed by a vote of 30 yeas to 13 nays. The nays were senators Ackerman, Blake, Buckman, Christiansen, Doran, Gilfillan, C. D., Griggs, Langdon, Morrison, O'Brien, Peterson, Sackett and Waite. Not voting—Goodrich, Peck, Van Hoosen and Vollmar.

When "messages from the house" was reached in the order of business, the secretary reported that the house had amended the senate railroad bill and requested concurrence in the amendments. Senator C. D. Gilfillan moved that the senate do not concur. Senator Hall moved to amend that the senate do concur. The ayes and noes were called on Senator Hall's motion which was lost. Yeas 11; nays 34. The nays were Senators Clarke, Knudson, Van Hoesen, Craig, O'Brien, Vollmar, Hall, Severance, Wells, Hickman, Steenerson.

Absent Pillsbury and Ward.

Senator Blake, chairman of the senate road and bridge committee, introduced in the senate the omnibus bridge and road appropriation bill which passed the house under suspension of the rules, and in the afternoon passed the senate in the same way. The bill consolidates 145 bills into one and appropriates to roads and bridges the amounts by counties mostly in the newer portions of the State.

After many delays the grain and warehouse bills of both house and senate came up for discussion again in the senate committee of the whole. Senators Van Hoesen and Houlton explained that the main points of difference between the bills was that the house bill made bonded warehouses of those only at terminal points (St. Paul Minneapolis and Duluth) while the senate bill made all houses wherein grain was stored or handled for pay public warehouses and to be bonded, but the senate finally agreed to stick to their own bill as the better of the two.

The house bill allowing women to vote for county superintendents of schools passed the senate by a vote of 27 to 11. A call of the senate was necessary to secure a full expression of opinion.

The bill appropriating $100,000 for permanent buildings for the state agricultural society's new buildings, on the new state fair grounds, was passed by the senate by a vote of yeas 30, nays 11, every senator voting. Senator Rice opposed the bill on the ground that it would increase the taxes, but his speech was void of effect. Those voting no was Senators Clark, Compton, Hall, Johnson, Rice, Severance, Shaleen, Steenorson, Vollmar, Wilkins and Willson.

HOUSE.—Mr. Turrill's high license bill, fixing the license at the uniform rate of $500, was reached in committee of the whole in the house and Mr. Daniels of Olmsted moved the bill be recommended to pass which motion was adopted after a long debate.

The bill proposing to abolish the contract system of convict labor was reached on its third reading; and Dr. Pratt of Washington county presented a series of facts concerning the management of the Minnesota prison, and some other state prisons. The question recurring on the passage of the bill, and the roll being called, there were 64 yeas and 26 nays.

The action of the senate in refusing concurrence was hurried into the house by message, and all day there was expectation that a request for a committee of conference would come back as a reply. None such appeared, however, and the senators freely expressed the opinion, "Don't believe the house wants to pass any railroad bill this session." At 10 p. m. the house took up the senate's message, refused to recede from its amendments, and asked for a committee on conference. The chair appointed as the house committee Stordock, Pattee, Brown, of Hennepin Myers and Snider.

Mr. Evans had made the state park project his pet measure, and much to the surprise of even the members of the Hennepin county delegation succeeded in securing the passage of the bill for the appointment of a commission to select two hundred acres surrounding Minnehaha falls for a state park. The bill was amended so that the sum appropriated for the expenses of the commission is but $1,000 instead of $5,000, as the bill was originally drawn.

Mr. D. Downs of Henderson introduced a bill providing for the application of a license ranging from $25 to $33, and a second section makes it a felony punishable by a fine of from $25 to $100 for the owner of any roller rink to permit a male and female to skate together.

SENATE.—Senate bills were passed amending the charter of the Mississippi & Rum River Boom Company. The senate appointed Senators C. D. Gilfillan, Compton, Wilson, Comstock and Crosby as a conference committee on the railroad bill. In the afternoon the senate bill lengthening the term of county auditors and treasurers to four years was lost. Senate bills were passed providing for refunding taxes wrongfully paid by mortgagees; granting railroad companies additional right of way to hold snow removed from track.

Senator Pillsbury urged the passage of both the house and senate bills, as amended by the senate, at once, in order that both bills might be before the house and the members there given a chance to take their choice. Senator Castle said to pass the house bill by the senate would be equivalent to sending it to the governor and making it a law. To this Senator Pillsbury replied that he believed a majority of the house really favored the senate bill, and he had been assured that both should receive careful attention. The senate bill was then passed, the following senators voting aye, and no one voting no:

Ackerman, Blake, Christiansen, Clement, Compton, Crosby, Doran, Fletcher, Gilfillan, C. D., Gilfillan, J. B., Greenleaf, Hall, Hickman, Houlton, Johnson, Knudson, Langdon, Morrison, Peterson, Pillsbury, Sackett, Sergeant, Severance, Steenerson, Truax, Van Hoesen, Vollmar, Ward, Welch, Wells, Wheat, Wilkins, Wilson. Total, 33.

The house bill was then read a third time and passed by a vote of 41 ayes and nayes none. The votes are not indicative of preference as to the two bills.

Senator Doran's anti-corner bill was amended by the insertion of the clause, "or who shall buy or sell for himself or others options on wheat, corn or other grain, pork lard, or keep what is commonly known as a bucket shop," shall be deemed guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $10,000, or imprisonment in the state prison not to exceed two years.

The senate refused to pass the judiciary committee's bill by which the terms of county auditors and treasurers would be lengthened to four years.

HOUSE.—Resolutions were adopted for an investigation of the capitol building as to safety and ventilation. Bills were passed amending the state prison building appropriation; for the regulation of practice of architects.

The governor sent in a veto to the amendment to sec. 2, chap. 18, General Statutes 1878, relating to division fences, his objection being as follows: That the reference to the section to be amended is erroneous; that it is special legislation under the form of amendment to a general law; that the application of the general law binds it to Houston county only.

Both houses, with State officers, adjourned early to attend a great banquet at Minneapolis tendered to the legislature by the citizens of that place.

During the five months ended Nov. 30, 1884, the value of the Canadian exports of the products of the forest fell off $3,727,983, or over 17 per cent. as compared with the corresponding months of 1883. It is estimated that 50,000,000 feet of deals will be wintered over in the province and 30,000,000 feet of logs. Lumber operations during the present winter will be cut down at least one-third as compared with 1883.

The superiority of American dredging machines, which has been shown in the work on the Panama Canal, has led to orders for them by foreign Governments. The last of these is from Spain. A drag boat, with a screw propeller of a hundred horse power, five iron barges, and two towboats have been called for to be used at the port of San Juan, Porto Rico. Three months are allowed for sending in proposals, and eight months thereafter for building the apparatus.

MINNESOTA NEWS CONDENSED.

Mr. Bleichner's store and the saloon of his sons, at Chaska, were burned, with their contents. Loss partially covered by insurance.

The North Star Barrel company's shops at Minneapolis were burned. The shops are the largest in the city and are opperated by a co-operative company consisting of fifteen coopers. The section distroyed was a two story frame building and cost $35,000.

The announcement is made that J. G. H. Johnson, county treasurer of Clay county is a defaulter to the county to the sum of $30,000 at least, and how much more is not known. Clay county has been very unfortunate in her treasurers, Thorsgard, who held that office, being a defaulter of a large amount.

Washington special:—A protest has been received at the attorney general's office from H. P. Upham, president; C. D. Gilfillan, vice president, and E. H. Bailey, Cashier of the First National bank of St. Paul, against the pardoning of D. W. Vanderhoof, former bookkeeper of the bank, and embezzler to the amount of $40,000. The prospect of a pardon being granted is about even, for and against. Senator McMillan does not say that a refusal can be expected, and expresses some hope.

Civil service examinations will be held in St. Paul, March 24; Minneapolis, March 25, and Madison, Wis., March 27. At these examinations applicants for department service in Washington will be examined.

Senator McMillan asks for an appropriation of $100,000 for a public building at Winona.

At the lumber camp of Malloy Brothers & McCluer, on upper Snake river, Minn., Wednesday the 25th inst., Frank Trapenier of Stillwater was crippled for life by the falling of a limb of a tree.

Johnson & Child of Waseca have made an assignment to Warren Smith. Liabilities and assets not given.

Mrs. Gov. Hubbard has received a telegram announcing the death of her father, Charles Thomas, at San Jose, Cal., whither he went several years ago for the benefit of his health. Mr. Thomas was in his eighty-fourth year, and for some time has been in poor health.

The Northwestern Bank of Minneapolis has brought action against Augustus L. Crocker, Harry S. Pell and Albert J. Boardman for the sum of $17,130 alleged to be due on promissory notes. The defendants constitute the partnership known as Crocker, Pell & Boardman, the Minneapolis engine and machine works.

At Minneapolis, Mrs. A. E. Reed has commenced action against George Reed, for divorce, charging him with adultery. The deposition of C. W. Babcock of Kasota, was also filed stating that Reed had passed the night at his house with a woman whom he introduced as his wife. Reed is a Minneapolis stone contractor.

Stephen H. Danforth, a well known and popular lumberman of Stillwater died recently. He was a member of the Minnesota 8th regiment.

The adjutant general has received an application from J. H. Stenerson of Zumbrota for authority to muster a reserve military company at that point. The company has been formed, and consists of thirty-seven members. The officers have not been chosen yet.

Mrs. S. S. Gardner, formerly of Wadena, who shot and killed her husband and child in Chicago last year, has been acquitted on the ground of insanity.

Rock county voters defeated a proposition to issue bonds for the purpose of building a court house.

Charles Nelson, employed in Lander's camp, near Duluth, was dangerously hurt by a falling tree.

The headquarters of the Cedar Rapids, Iowa Falls & Northwestern are to be located at Worthington.

Retail merchants of Northern Minnesota met at St. Paul and took steps toward forming a permanent association.

Minneapolis insurance men are agitated over the retirement of Manager Howlett, of the underwriters' union, and the appointment of David Beveridge of Chicago to the position.

Treasurer Johnson of Clay county was allowed to resign on payment of $3,000.

The Lake City tax duplicates are said to have been tampered with by some unknown person, who changed an assessment from $50 to $150.

Jennie O'Neil, who is in Canada, is said have written a letter declaring that she was hired to make the affidavit declaring her testimony in the Bronson arson case to be untrue. The crime was committed at Henderson, Minn., and for it Mrs. Bronson is now serving a ten years' term at Stillwater.

Sheriff Bogart's horse was stolen from in front of his residence in Winona. The sheriff tracked the rig out Pleasant valley and overtook the theives at Centerville. They proved to be Harry Russell, aged about twenty, and Tom Toohey, aged twenty-nine, both under arrest recently for a theft at the skating rink.

J. W. Gray's summer hotel at Red Sand lake, four miles west of Brainerd, has been burned. Loss, $3,000; insurance, $2,000. A part of the furniture was saved, the remainder is a total loss.

Moorhead Special:—G. H. Johnson appeared before the county commissioners this afternoon, accompanied by counsel and his brother, who is a wealthy farmer and keeps a general store at Kindred, Dak. After considerable argument it was decided to accept $3,000 from Johnson and allow him to tender his resignation to the board, which body accepted the same, the understanding being that all suits against Johnson would be thereupon withdrawn. The commissioners then selected H. P. Strait of Moorhead to fill the position. Mr. Strait will enter the office and a thorough overhauling of the books will be made. It is feared by some that the amount will prove to be much more than $3,000.

Ex-Gov. Magoffin of Kentuckey, lately deceased, had the utmost confidence in the future of Minnesota, and proved it by sending his two sons, Beriah and S. M., here, purchasing for the former a fine farm in Reserve, Ramsey county. The younger son entered George Otis' office to study law, and is now with W. D. Cornish.

Senator and Mrs. Sabin gave a dancing reception last Saturday evening at their residence on Thirteenth street, Washington to the Misses Stickney of St. Paul. There were present from Mount Vernon seminary the following young ladies: Miss McNair of Minneapolis, Miss Haton, Miss Stevens, Miss Wilson of Winona, Miss Tiffany, Misses Bosler and Miss Gaswell. Mrs. Sabin's guests were Miss Murphy of St. Paul, Miss Williams and Miss Hutchins of Connecticut, and Mrs. J. H. Sabin of Aurora, Ill., Mrs Senator Dolph and Miss Odencal, Mr. and Mrs. Demaray, Mr. and Mrs. Norrish of Minnesota. The gentlemen were Dr. Welch, Capt. Isley, J. A. Logan, Jr., Messrs. Lagare, Brainard, Gould, Kohl and Joyce, Lieut. Knox, and several others from this city. A programme of dances was carried through, and refreshments were served in great variety and abundance.

Sadie Robinson, a fifteen-year old girl living with her uncle at Anoka, set the house on fire three times, but the flames were discovered in time to prevent destruction. On being asked why she set the fire, she replied that the house belonged to her and she had a right to burn it if she liked. The house was left to herself and brother when her mother died, and Mr. Robinson is their guardian.

A little twelve-year-old daughter of Hans Hansen, of Ætna township, Pipe Stone county, was sent to a neighbor's, some distance off, on an errand, and when some way from home a couple of hungry wolves spied her and started for a meal. The child ran away as fast as she could, but the varmints gained upon her, until, on finding she was becoming exhausted and could go no further, the child, with commendable courage, turned and faced her pursuers. This rather disconcerted the brutes, and they, too, stopped and glared at the child, who also had her eyes upon them, and finally slunk away and the girl reached home safely.

Darlon, arrested for the robbery and attempted murder of Strauss, had a hearing before Judge Grotam, at Red Wing, and was held in $5,000, in default of which he went to jail.

Minneapolis had thirty-six fire alarms in February, the total loss being $18,965 and the insurance $65,750.

THE BOND FRAUD.

Some of our friends found fault with for putting the total cost of the B. N. W. R. R. to the county at $800,000. ell we admit that we only computed at simple interest which at ten per nt makes an even $800,000. We' ad- it that it ought to have been com- ited at compound interest as the $20,- 0 interest has to be paid annually but e total in that case would be simply palling. It is enough to know that e lightest estimate would make be- veen $30 and $50 increased tax on a aluation of $5,000. It is claimed by ome that the amount of interest asked only 6 per cent that a "typographical rror" is responsible for the call at ten er cent. A "typographical error" is a ery good error to crawl out of some imes but if Polk County votes in favor f these bonds she will make a worse han a "typographical error" and ne that can not be so easily reme- lied. Farmers in from the Thirteen Towns say that in all the country papers he proposition is made to call for only per cent but when they arrive at Crookston they find it published at ten per cent. This may well set them to considering the proposition in earnest. If they consider the interest to be only 6 per cent and will sit down and figure upon the proposition at compound interest they will find that the amount asked for is simply appalling. And for what? No more than we now have. The dwellers in the Thirteen Towns need a railroad and need it badly but the road they need is the one having a direct Duluth terminus. This they will get in due time if they do not allow this scheme to build Brainerd up to interfere with the Duluth & Winnipeg road. The D. & W. have bright prospects and bright hopes of being able to push work all along their line next summer but if the B. & N. W. project carries this will have a tendency to check the D. & W. work and perhaps prevent building a road to Duluth at all. The experience of every farmer in this country must teach him that what he wants is a chance to reach his market with his wheat as cheaply as he can and of what earthly benefit to him is a new road that does not give him the assurance that he can do so? We all know that Duluth is our proper market and we know that a line going direct to that point is more liable to give us what we want than is one that goes in a roundabout way. The B. & N. W. road does not offer any better facilities for carrying our freights than we now have, and being backed by the N. P. road would doubtless pool with the Manitoba to keep rates as they are if indeed it was not found necessary to raise them a notch or so. If this B. and N. W. road intended to benefit this county the projectors could easily manifest that disposition by saying to Polk County: "If you will give us a lift now we will reciprocate by carrying out and bringing in your freights at less than you now pay!" They not only do not say this but they don't mean to do it. Practically they do say "If Polk County is fool enough to give us this magnificent sum of money we will build a road and make all the money out of it and them forever after as we possibly can?" Last year one objection to building the G. F. C. & D. road that people made was that there was nobody behind it who was responsible! If that was so how much better is this case? Who is behind this scheme? Where is the capital needed to come from? We claim that the projectors of the former road were far better able to build than are these and that road also contemplated going to Duluth direct, while this does not. It is calculated to kill our Duluth road dead. We trust that the voters will all be out on this question as it is a very important one and every vote against the bonds should be recorded. It will be a day well spent.

The Minneapolis Tribune Company has just been reorganized with a capital of $500,00. Their newspaper property alone is valued at $200,000, and their new building is paying ten per cent. on $215,000, which was the actual cost of property when completed. There is not a better equipped newswaper in the west than the Tribune.

UNCLE JOSH WANTS TO BUILD A HOTEL.

EDITOR JOURNAL: Knowing your ever present desire to help along any worthy object, I hasten to lay before you and solicit your assistance in the consummation of a plan I have lately evolved out of my massive brain, which will ultimately prove of the greatest advantage and benefit to this county. For the especial good of the public I desire to build a first-class hotel at St. Hilaire. All I ask of the county is to issue bonds to the amount of $20,000 to purchase the materials and pay the workmen, and I will furnish the ozone that will surround the structure; and as for the ground on which to place the hotel, I will have that condemned as provided by statute for such great public improvements. You can but regard with admiration the great public-spiritedness of myself in proposing to give the county the opportunity to benefit itself to such an extent as is here proposed, when I could just as well go to some other county and confer these hard to be computed advantages if I should choose to do so. Of course, it is understood that the hotel when completed and in running order will be mine; and in view of the fact that it is intended to be a rival of and competing hotel with the rest of the hotels in the county, and therefore of lasting benefit to the traveling public, the county will not think of taxing the property. I don't think you had better say anything publicly about the matter until you have got the proper officers fixed all right, and if it will assist you in bringing about the end sought for, you may assure the most influential of them that there will be free bar tickets issued to those who favor the measure. I think that will be all the inducement you need to offer. Of course you understand that I don't pledge myself to any particular rates per day for accommodation at my hotel, (which will be called the St. Paul and Northwestern) as that would destroy one of the greatest advantages to be derived by me for proposing and carrying out the enterprise; for, as I said before, this is to be a competing hotel, and with the house built and furnished by the county I shall be in a position to enter into the competing business of seeing who can charge the most and give the least for the money. Being subsidized by the county I can safely say that I can stand more competing than any other house built, or to be built, in the Northwest.

And another thing (but tell it not in Gath) if we succeed in getting this appropriation there will be small chance of any other house getting a similar bonus for years to come, and I will have the slickest kind of a monopoly.

As I said before, I don't think it best to say much outside about the matter, as there are a few people in the county who don't view this bond business with a favorable eye, and they might try to defeat us in our HONEST endeavors to benefit the county.

Trusting that I can depend upon you in the future as in the past, I remain, yours truly,
UNCLE JOSH.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

PIG KEEPING AT A PROFIT.

At a recent meeting of the Coventry, (Conn.) Farmers' club, the subject of swine was under discussion. Among some of the more practical conclusions reached were these: We want a breed of swine that will dress 250 to 300 pounds, at six or seven months. Never allow a pig to go hungry or get poor The most profit is in keeping the hog growing rapidly and turning him off at eight months or earlier. Green sweet corn is a good early feed to start fattening, and may be followed with meal and milk. Where swine are kept confined, as is usual in the Eastern States, the small-boned breeds are best, as Berkshires, Poland Chinas, small Yorkshires, or Suffolks—as they mature much earlier than the large breeds. But the latter, if kept till matured (twelve to eighteen months) will doubtless make quite as good returns. When the pigs come in winter they can be kept at small expense; in summer they they thrive on grass and milk; in fall, apples suffice until grain is fed, when they fatten readily and make good solid porkers. Swine are the best of orchard cultivators.

POTATOES FOR STOCK.

A Corning, N. Y., correspondent of the Prairie Farmer gives it as his opinion that when judiciously fed, potatoes are a valuable feed for stock. They are excellent for milch cows, and calves eat them with avidity and thrive on them remarkably. Potatoes will not cause scours, and possess rare qualities as a regulator, when fed to horses in messes of a few quarts once or twice a week. In spring, for ewes and lambs, they are especially valuable, as they promote the flow of milk. It is best in feeding potatoes to sheep, to cut and feed raw ones every day; if a little ground feed sprinkled over them, so much the better. In feeding our poultry, we boil and mash potatoes, stir in meal, or ground feed of some kind, and give them every morning, the largest part of the year. The potato crops were very good last season, in this section. If we could always have as good success, it would be one of the cheapest root crops we could raise for feeding stock.

NOTICE.

As I have established a Nursery in Crookston and propose to continue the business, I will annouce to our former customers and all that are desirous of obtaining trees and Plants the coming spring that I will sell said stock at prices below any competition. Call and see me before making purchase elsewhere. Residence on second block north o. Court House, or address P. O. Box 754.

Most Respectfully,

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

[This column is placed at the disposal of the Crookston W. C. T. U., who are cordially invited to fill it each week. ED. JOURNAL.]

Pledge.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

It is Written.

The late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, was strongly opposed to temperance, and his sideboard was loaded with brandy, wine, etc. On one occasion, Rev. Mr. Perkins, of the Sons of Temperance, dined with the Bishop, who, pouring out a glass of wine, desired him to drink with him.

"Can't do it bishop. 'Wine is a mocker.'"

"Take a glass of brandy, then."

"Can't do it bishop. 'Strong drink is raging.'"

By this time the bishop, becoming somewhat excited, remarked to Mr. Perkins, "You'll pass the decanter to the gentleman next to you!"

"No, bishop, I can't do that. 'Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'"

Reform Club.

The usual meeting of the Eighth ward reform club was called to order by the president yesterday afternoon.

After the usual opening exercises Mr. D. C. Bell was introduced. He spoke of an account in the Temperance Review of a meeting where high license was under discussion, and purely economic view. To another audience there might be a good deal said on the other side, "There were present with me figures of broken wrecks, of blasted hearts and ruined homes. I noticed that the legislature of Michigan was considering the question of increasing the meshes of the nets for the great lakes, lest white fish be all that is left. Some time ago our legislature was laboring to increase the size of the meshes of the net to toll in the young men of Minnesota. So they increased the size of the meshes in the devil's net. Do you suppose that law is in force? I tell you, no. I asked a saloon keeper, what proportion of his customers were young men. He said 'About three-quarters of them.' And how many of those are boys?' 'About half of them; we don't take in those who will give us away.' I don't answer for these, but what do we think of this? If I see any place where I can in any way hinder this traffic, I shall feel myself accountable to God if I don't. If I see any chance to save a boy from temptation, I shall do it. If I see any chance to dry up a single saloon by legitimate means, I shall do it. Brethren, I believe in this great temperance work. Like the Israelites, we have reached a point where our road is looking toward those Egyptian hosts and we see that their wheels drag heavily. I believe now that gospel temperance is what we are more in need of than anything else. I won't criticise what some say in that line, but I will tell you what I have seen. The speaker then related an incident of a temperance meeting in Chicago, in which the experience of men delivered from drink goes to show that without something beside mere human will to stand on, a pledge is useless. I like to see a man sign the pledge, but I say to him, "unless you go right from that pledge and give yourself to Christ for time and eternity, I don't, somehow, feel sure of you. If there is anyone here this afternoon that will not accept Christ as your saviour, you are not on solid ground."

Mr. Wyman was next introduced, and took for his subject fidelity—adherence to the right, integrity, faithfulness, honesty.

"What we need," said he, "in the present age, more than anything else, is men and women. To be a man is a grand thing; to be a woman is just as grand a thing. A drunkard is quite another thing from a man or woman. We want men who won't brag and then run; who will stand up to, the largest, grandest duty they can perform in this life, or the lightest or hardest service they are called upon to do; who can do little as well as great things. None can be left out if we do our duty."

Mr. Wyman then spoke of the difference between the present times and a few years ago. Speaking of gospel temperance, he said: "I want the whole loaf. If I can't have the whole loaf then I will take a slice. My motto is "Take all you can and hold all you get."

A Beautiful Thought.

The following earnest words were contributed by a lady of Grand Forks to the Winnebago Weekly, Forest City, Ia.:

"Do not laugh at the drunken man reeling through the streets, however ludicrous the sight may be; just stop to think. He is going home to some tender heart that will throb with intense agony; some doting mother, perhaps, who will grieve at the downfall of her once sinless boy; or it may be a fond wife, whose heart will always burst with grief as she views the destruction of her idol, or it may be a loving sister who will shed bitter tears over the degradation of her brother, shorn of his manliness and self-respect. Rather drop a tear in silent sympathy with those hearts so keenly sensitive and tender, yet so proud and loyal that they cannot accept sympathy tendered them in either words, looks or acts, although it might fall upon their crushed and wounded hearts as refreshing as the summer dew upon the withering plant."

THE BOND FRAUD.

Some of our friends found fault with for putting the total cost of the B. N. W. R. R. to the county at $800,000. Well we admit that we only computed at simple interest, which at ten per cent makes an even $800,000. We admit that it ought to have been computed at compound interest as the $20,000 interest has to be paid annually but the total in that case would be simply appalling. It is enough to know that the lightest estimate would make between $30 and $50 increased tax on a valuation of $5,000. It is claimed by some that the amount of interest asked is only 6 per cent that a "typographical error" is responsible for the call at ten per cent. A "typographical error" is a very good error to crawl out of sometimes but if Polk County votes in favor of these bonds she will make a worse than a "typographical error" and one that can not be so easily remedied. Farmers in from the Thirteen Towns say that in all the country papers the proposition is made to call for only 6 per cent but when they arrive at Crookston they find it published at ten per cent. This may well set them to considering the proposition in earnest. If they consider the interest to be only 6 per cent and will sit down and figure upon the proposition at compound interest they will find that the amount asked for is simply appalling. And for what? No more than we now have. The dwellers in the Thirteen Towns need a railroad and need it badly but the road they need is the one having a direct Duluth terminus. This they will get in due time if they do not allow this scheme to build Brainerd up to interfere with the Duluth & Winnipeg road. The D. & W. have bright prospects and bright hopes of being able to push work all along their line next summer but if the B. & N. W. project carries this will have a tendency to check the D. & W. work and perhaps prevent building a road to Duluth at all. The experience of every farmer in this country must teach him that what he wants is a chance to reach his market with his wheat as cheaply as he can and of what earthly benefit to him is a new road that does not give him the assurance that he can do so? We all know that Duluth is our proper market and we know that a line going direct to that point is more liable to give us what we want than is one that goes in a roundabout way. The B. & N. W. road does not offer any better facilities for carrying our freights than we now have, and being backed by the N. P. road would doubtless pool with the Manitoba to keep rates as they are if indeed it was not found necessary to raise them a notch or so. If this B. and N. W. road intended to benefit this county the projectors could easily manifest that disposition by saying to Polk County: "If you will give us a lift now we will reciprocate by carrying out and bringing in your freights at less than you now pay!" They not only do not say this but they don't mean to do it. Practically they do say "If Polk County is fool enough to give us this magnificent sum of money we will build a road and make all the money out of it and them forever after as we possibly can!" Last year one objection to building the G. F. C. & D. road that people made was that there was nobody behind it who was responsible! If that was so how much better is this case? Who is behind this scheme? Where is the capital needed to come from? We claim that the projectors of the former road were far better able to build, than are these and that road also contemplated going to Duluth direct, while this does not. It is calculated to kill our Duluth road dead. We trust that the voters will all be out on this question as it is a very important one and every vote against the bonds should be recorded. It will be a day well spent.

The Minneapolis Tribune Company has just been reorganized with a capital of $500,00. Their newspaper property alone is valued at $200,000, and their new building is paying ten per cent, on $215,000, which was the actual cost of property when completed. There is not a better equipped newswaper in the west than the Tribune.

UNCLE JOSH WANTS TO BUILD A HOTEL.

EDITOR JOURNAL: Knowing your ever present desire to help along any worthy object, I hasten to lay before you and solicit your assistance in the consummation of a plan I have lately evolved out of my massive brain, which will ultimately prove of the greatest advantage and benefit to this county. For the especial good of the public I desire to build a first-class hotel at St. Hilaire. All I ask of the county is to issue bonds to the amount of $20,000 to purchase the materials and pay the workmen, and I will furnish the ozone that will surround the structure, and as for the ground on which to place the hotel, I will have that condemned as provided by statute for such great public improvements. You can but regard with admiration the great public-spiritedness of myself in proposing to give the county the opportunity to benefit itself to such an extent as is here proposed when I could just as well go to some other county and confer these hard to be computed advantages if I should choose to do so. Of course it is understood that the hotel when completed and in running order will be mine, and in view of the fact that it is intended to be a rival of and competing hotel with the rest of the hotels in the county and therefore of being benefit to the traveling public, the county will not think of taxing the property. I don't think you had better say anything publicly about the matter until you have got the proper officers fixed all right, and if it will assist you in bringing about the end sought for, you may assure the most influential of them that there will be free bar tickets issued to those who favor the measure. I think that will be all the inducement you need to offer. Of course you understand that I don't pledge myself to any particular rates per day for accommodation at my hotel, (which will be called the St. Paul and Northwestern), as that would destroy one of the greatest advantages to be derived by me for proposing and carrying out the enterprise, for, as I said before, this is to be a competing hotel, and with the house built and furnished by the county I shall be in a position to enter into the competing business of seeing who can charge the most and give the least for the money. Being subsidized by the county I can safely say that I can stand more competing than any other house built, or to be built, in the Northwest.

And another thing, (but tell it not in Gath) if we succeed in getting this appropriation there will be small chance of any other house getting a similar bonus for years to come, and I will have the slickest kind of a monopoly.

As I said before, I don't think it best to say much outside about the matter, as there are a few people in the county who don't view this bond business with a favorable eye, and they might try to defeat us in our HONEST endeavors to benefit the county.

Trusting that I can depend upon you in the future as in the past, I remain, yours truly, UNCLE JOSH.

Of course, only one lady at each post office can take advantage of it, and the one who writes first for the circular which makes the offer, will have the first chance. The object of the liberal offer is to secure at least one subscriber at every post office in the United States. Trial trip three months 10 cents. Write for the circular by first mail and ask for a specimen copy of The Housekeeper which is sent free to any address, by Buckeye Publishing Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

PIG KEEPING AT A PROFIT.

At a recent meeting of the Coventry (Conn.) Farmers' club, the subject of swine was under discussion. Among some of the more practical conclusions reached were these: We want a breed of swine that will dress 250 to 300 pounds, at six or seven months. Never allow a pig to go hungry or get poor. The most profit is in keeping the hog growing rapidly and turning him off at eight months or earlier. Green sweet corn is a good early feed to start fattening, and may be followed with meal and milk. Where swine are kept confined, as is usual in the Eastern States, the small-boned breeds are best, as Berkshires, Poland Chinas, small Yorkshires, or Suffolks—as they mature much earlier than the large breeds. But the latter, if kept till matured (twelve to eighteen months) will doubtless make quite as good returns. When the pigs come in winter they can be kept at small expense; in summer they they thrive on grass and milk, in fall, apples suffice until grain is fed, when they fatten readily and make good solid porkers. Swine are the best of orchard cultivators.

POTATOES FOR STOCK.

A Corning, N. Y., correspondent of the Prairie Farmer gives it as his opinion that when judiciously fed, potatoes are a valuable feed for stock. They are excellent for milch cows, and calves eat them with avidity and thrive on them remarkably. Potatoes will not cause scours and posses rare qualities as a regulator when fed to horses in messes of a few quarts once or twice a week. In spring, for ewes and lambs they are especially valuable, as they promote the flow of milk. It is best, in feeding potatoes to sheep, to cut and feed raw ones every day, if a little ground feed sprinkled over them, so much the better. In feeding our poultry, we boil and mash potatoes, stir in meal, or ground feed of some kind, and give them every morning, the largest part of the year. The potato crops were very good last season in this section. If we could always have as good success, it would be one of the cheapest root crops we could raise for feeding stock.

Pledge.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

It Is Written.

The late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, was strongly opposed to temperance, and his sideboard was loaded with brandy, wine, etc. On one occasion, Rev. Mr. Perkins, of the Sons of Temperance, dined with the Bishop, who, pouring out a glass of wine, desired him to drink with him.

"Can't do it bishop. 'Wine is a mocker.'"

"Take a glass of brandy, then."

"Can't do it bishop. 'Strong drink is raging.'"

By this time the bishop, becoming somewhat excited, remarked to Mr. Perkins, "You'll pass the decanter to the gentleman next to you!"

"No, bishop, I can't do that. 'Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'"

Reform Club.

The usual meeting of the Eighth ward reform club was called to order by the president yesterday afternoon.

After the usual opening exercises Mr. D. C. Bell was introduced. He spoke of an account in the Temperance Review of a meeting where high license was under discussion, and purely economic view. To another audience there might be a good deal said on the other side. "There were present with me figures of broken wrecks, of blasted hearts and ruined homes. I noticed that the legislature of Michigan was considering the question of increasing the meshes of the nets for the great lakes, lest white fish be all that is left. Some time ago our legislature was laboring to increase the size of the meshes of the net to toll in the young men of Minnesota. So they increased the size of the meshes in the devil's net. Do you suppose that law is in force? I tell you, no. I asked a saloon keeper, what proportion of his customers were young men. He said 'About three-quarters of them.' And how many of those are boys? 'About half of them; we don't take in those who will give us away.' I don't answer for these, but what do we think of this? If I see any place where I can in any way hinder this traffic, I shall feel myself accountable to God if I don't. If I see any chance to save a boy from temptation, I shall do it. If I see any chance to dry up a single saloon by legitimate means, I shall do it. Brethren, I believe in this great temperance work. Like the Israelites, we have reached a point where our road is looking toward those Egyptian hosts and we see that their wheels drag heavily. I believe now that gospel temperance is what we are more in need of than anything else. I won't criticise what some say in that line, but I will tell you what I have seen." The speaker then related an incident of a temperance meeting in Chicago, in which the experience of men delivered from drink goes to show that without something beside mere human will to stand on, a pledge is useless. ACQUITTED OF MURDER.

Mrs. Gardner, a Former Resident of Wadena, Acquitted of the Murder of her Husband and Child.

Wadena Farmer.

Mrs. S. S. Gardner a former resident of Wadena, but who has resided in Chicago for the past three years, and who it will be remembered shot and killed her husband and child in that city several months ago and attempted her own life, has been tried for murder and acquitted on the grounds of emotional insanity. The Chicago papers contain long accounts of the trial, and we make the following extract from a column-and-a-half report of the trial in the Chicago Daily Times of the 18th inst:

"Mrs. Della Gardner was tried yesterday before a jury, in Judge Rodgers' branch of the criminal court, for the murder of her husband and babe at their residence, No. 17 Laflin Street, on the afternoon of Nov. 6, 1884. Financial reverses had soured the temper of her husband, and, after frequently charging her with having violated her marriage vows, he was packing up his trunk preparatory to leaving her without means to support herself and 15-months-old babe, when the woman, crazed by jealousy and frantic because of the cheerless and hopeless future before her, seized a revolver and shot him. She then sent a bullet crashing through the infant's brain, and also shot herself with almost fatal effect. The husband and child died almost instantly, and the poor distracted wife and mother, after lying at the point of death for nearly two weeks, recovered to realize her awful situation and to stand before the bar of justice to answer to her terrible act. It seems from the evidence that Dr. Schuyler S. Gardner, her husband, had given his wife just grounds for suspecting his fidelity to and love for her. She was defended by Mr. George F. Westover, who set up the plea of insanity at the time the shooting occurred.

The defendant, who is a refined, lady like appearing woman of 30 years of age, came into court attended by a large number of well dressed and handsome lady friends, who sat beside her during the trial and offered her such consolation and advice as the occasion seemed to demand. She was dressed in a neat-fitting black dress and dark cloak. Her handsome features bore traces of suffering, and a red scar on her scalp above the right ear showed where the bullet had entered her skull. She was apparently composed and self-possessed, except when the name of her husband or babe was mentioned by the counsel or witnesses. Then she would bow her head and weep bitterly. It is not often that court habitues are called upon to witness a scene like that presented by the trial of the woman who, by her own hand had rendered herself husbandless.

At the conclusion of the testimony the case was submitted to the jury without argument. Judge Roberts delivered a brief oral charge in which he instructed the members of that body as to the different forms of verdict they might bring in. The jury then retired to their room. After about ten minutes' deliberation they came into the court and presented their verdict, which read:

We the jury, find the defendant not guilty by reason of insanity at the time the crime was committed, and that she has recovered from that insanity.

Judge Roberts remarked, after ordering the discharge of the defendant: "There is no doubt about its being right. It is a just verdict."

Mrs. Gardner was immediately surrounded by her lady friends, who testified their approval of the justness of the finding of the jury by embracing and kissing her repeatedly. Her feelings overpowered her and she was led from the court room sobbing and weeping."

The Best and Cheapest Dairy Paper.

Every well posted dairyman has heard of the Jefferson County Union, published at Fort Atkinson, Wis., the leading dairy paper of the Northwest, edited and owned by W. D. Hoard, who for a number of years has filled the position of President of the Northwestern Dairyman's Association. For the sake of placing sound dairy reading within the reach of all, Mr. Hoard has commenced the publication of a compact edition of all dairy, market and agricultural matter contained in the Union, which will be issued weekly under the name of "Hoard's Dairyman." This paper will be issued for a time in a six column folio form, and is truly a very valuable compendium of dairy knowledge. The Dairyman will contain each week the finest and most extensive dairy market reports from all important markets besides a letter from Elgin, the great butter market of the Northwest. In addition will be given letters from the most practical dairymen of the country on all that pertains to first-class dairy farming, breeding dairy stock, &c. Reports in summary of all the leading Dairy Conventions, will be published. Each number contains a record of the sales of butter by the leading dairymen around Fort Atkinson and elsewhere. This is a valuable feature. Every farmer who keeps a half dozen cows ought to read "Hoard's Dairyman." It will pay him a hundred fold on the investment. We will send the Dairyman with THE JOURNAL for one year for $2. Call and see sample copies. [43-46]

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS Ismel Dion, as mortgagor, did on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 25th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18,) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 92, 93, 94 and 95; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 25-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable; and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider and declare, and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 55-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The southeast quarter of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1881, at 4:20 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 196, 197 and 198; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of two hundred and fifty-six and 85-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of March, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did, on the fifth day of September, 1883 pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of eighteen and 30-100 dollars, for which sum so paid, the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lein on said premises for the amount so paid, with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid, the sum of two hundred and ninety-nine and 15-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof, and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated February 13th, A. D. 1885.

THOMAS A. HAMMOND, CHARLES E. BUSH, THAD M. CHAPMAN, Administrators of the estate of John L. Hammond, deceased.
CHARLES E. BUSH,
Surviving Mortgagee.
C. E. CHAPMAN, Attorney,

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss. In Probate Court,
County of Polk. }
Special term, held Feb. 25th, 1885.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Anderson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of E. E. Lommen the administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come to his hands, and the disposition thereof; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, and a description of all the real estate of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions thereof; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of said real estate or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the debts of said deceased. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, and that it is necessary in order to pay the same, to sell a part of the whole of said real estate; and that it will be for the best interests of said estate that said real estate shall be sold at private sale.

It is therefore ordered, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before the Judge of this Court, on Saturday the eleventh day of April A. D. 1885, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the office of the Probate Judge, in the City of Crookston, in said County, then and there to show cause, if any there be, why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell said real estate according to the prayer of said petition.

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order shall be published for four successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, the last of which publication shall be at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County, and personally served on all persons interested in said estate residing in said County, at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, and upon all other persons interested according to law.

Dated at Crookston this 25th day of February A. D. 1885.

By the Court

ACQUITTED OF MURDER.

[illegible]

Wadena Tribune:

Mrs. Della Gardner, former resident of Wadena, but who has resided in Chicago for the past three years, and who is well remembered, shot and killed her husband and child in that city several months ago and attempted her own life, has been tried for murder and acquitted on the grounds of emotional insanity. The Chicago papers contain long accounts of the trial, and we make the following extract from a column-and-a-half report of the trial in the Chicago Daily Times of the 18th inst.:

"Mrs. Della Gardner was tried yesterday before a jury in Judge Rodgers' branch of the criminal court, for the murder of her husband and babe at their residence, No. 17 Lallin Street, on the afternoon of Nov. 0, 1884. Financial reverses had soured the temper of her husband, and after frequently charging her with having violated her marriage vows, he was packing up his trunk preparatory to leaving her without means to support herself and 15 months-old babe, when the woman, crazed by jealousy and frantic because of the cheerless and hopeless future before her, seized a revolver and shot him. She then sent a bullet crashing through the infant's brain, and also shot herself with almost fatal effect. The husband and child died almost instantly, and the poor distracted wife and mother, after lying at the point of death for nearly two weeks, recovered slowly to realize her awful situation, and to stand before the bar of justice to answer for her terrible act. It seems from the evidence that Dr. Schuyler S. Gardner, her husband, had given his wife just grounds for suspecting his fidelity to and love for her. She was defended by Mr. George F. Westover, who set up the plea of insanity at the time the shooting occurred.

The defendant, who is a refined, lady-like appearing woman of 30 years of age, came into court attended by a large number of well dressed and handsome lady friends, who sat beside her during the trial and offered her such consolation and advice as the occasion seemed to demand. She was dressed in a neat-fitting black dress and dark cloak. Her handsome features bore traces of suffering, and a red scar on her scalp above the right ear showed where the bullet had entered her skull. She was apparently composed and self-possessed, except when the name of her husband or babe was mentioned by the counsel or witnesses. Then she would bow her head and weep bitterly. It is not often that court habitues are called upon to witness a scene like that presented by the trial of the woman who by her own hand had rendered herself husbandless.

At the conclusion of the testimony the case was submitted to the jury without argument. Judge Roberts delivered a brief oral charge in which he instructed the members of that body as to the different forms of verdict they might bring in. The jury then retired to their room. After about ten minutes deliberation they came into the court and presented their verdict, which read:

"We the jury find the defendant not guilty by reason of insanity at the time the crime was committed, and that she has recovered from that insanity."

Judge Roberts remarked, after ordering the discharge of the defendant: "There is no doubt about its being right. It is a just verdict."

Mrs. Gardner was immediately surrounded by her lady friends, who testified their approval of the justness of the finding of the jury by embracing and kissing her repeatedly. Her feeling [illegible]

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen hundred and eighty-seven and 00-100 dollars (1887.00) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, upon two certain promissory notes secured by a mortgage duly executed and delivered by Polina Angelina McIntyre and H. D. McIntyre, to Morris S. Brown, bearing date the eleventh day of November, A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the [illegible] day of November, A. D. 1882, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 4[illegible], which mortgage was for a good and valuable consideration on the 23d day of February, A. D. 1883, duly assigned to Joseph Kelso, and said assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for said County on the 27th day of February A. D. 1883, in book "K" of mortgages on pages 250 and 251; and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nineteen (19) Block number sixteen (16) in the original Townsite of Crookston according to a plat of said Townsite, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars ($50) attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State on the 13th day of March A. D. 1885, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., of said day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred forty-five and 50-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. Anderson Foord, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Fredrick Peterson and John Peterson, mortgagees bearing date the 21st day of May A. D. 1883, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of May A. D. 1883, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on page 22, and whereas the undivided one-half interest in the said mortgage and the debt secured thereby was by the said Fredrick Peterson, one of said mortgagees, duly assigned in writing under his hand and seal to Harold Swenson and Peter Broberg "copartners" by assignment, dated July 31st, 1884, which assignment was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of August, 1884, at 1:20 o'clock p. m., in book "L" of mortgages on page 330, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north one half (n½) of the southeast one-fourth (se¼) and the east one-half (e½) of the southwest one-fourth (sw¼) of Section twenty-eight (28) of Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), Range forty-three (43) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to government survey, said lot, piece or parcel of land being situated in Polk County, and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the fourteenth day of March A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, [illegible], mortgagor, did on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 5th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 92, 93, 94 and 95, and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid, and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 23-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor, to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable, and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider, and declare, and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice, including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 55-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage, together with the taxes on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated Feb. 13th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS, Arthur Coto, as mortgagor, did on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of March 1st, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The southeast quarter of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1881, at 4:20 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 196, 197 and 198, and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of two hundred and fifty-six and 85-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of March, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did, on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of eighteen and 80-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lein on said premises for the amount so paid, with interest from the date of such payment, and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice, including taxes paid as aforesaid, the sum of two hundred and ninety-nine and 15-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof, and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont, and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

[By James M. Cussons, Chatfield, Minn.]

Last summer farmers coming to Elmira Mills put the question, "What is that boy doing on that wheat?" The answer was, "harrowing it." "By whose orders?" "Mine." A look of compassion would pass over their faces, but out of respect for their half century and gray hair they refrained from expressing their thoughts in my presence, for which I must give them credit, but were heard to mutter "cranky," "must be looney," etc. On one occasion, while crossing the bridge, leaving the mill, might have been seen a couple of farmers, one tapping his forehead with the butt of his whip and significantly pointing over his shoulder with his thumb towards the mill, which was answered by his companion with a solemn shake of the head, accompanied by the remark, "Too bad, too bad." They had just seen the destroying process. Still the wheat grew and continued to thrive. At intervals of ten days or two weeks between each time the harrow crossed the field. The third time my boy, who has never yet refused to obey orders, showed more in actions than words a spirit of rebellion. The wheat ought to have dwindled away and died, but somehow it seemed to be in sympathy with me and grew more luxuriantly than ever, stooling wonderfully. The land has been under cultivation twenty-three years, and was at this point entirely free from weeds, for which I complimented the harrow. When the wheat headed it was a sight to cheer a farmer's heart in a country where for seven long years few farms produced ten bushels of wheat per acre. Its five feet in height, with heads from four to six inches in length, attracted the attention of every observing man who came within sight of the field. It was examined by scores of men, and when threshed came out of the machine in such volume that to hold sacks and tie them was as much as I could attend to. Then came the result—178 bushels from six bushels of Saskatchewan Fife wheat seed, on six and one-third acres of land. Ah! but that was extra wheat. Granted. It pays, though. But look at the extra labor. Yes, here it is: Rolling just after seeding, harrowing at one inch high, cross harrowing at four inches, and again just before stooling, and farmers would be glad to do the work for $1 per acre. I have no doubt but that I got ten bushels more per acre than I could have done with any other wheat. Does it pay to sow the best seed wheat? is a question each man must answer for himself. I am personally acquainted with more than eighty farmers who are going to sow this wheat, nearly all of whom raised some of it last year, and I must acknowledge more than one beat me in yields. I intend trying the harrow again on eighteen acres, all the arable land on the place, and shall sow Saskatchewan. Try the harrow on a strip and make comparisons.

PROFITS OF SHEEP HUSBANDRY.

Bismarck Tribune: The Boyd Bros., two miles south of Menoken, have 540 head of sheep, mostly merinos. These gentlemen came from Ohio, the great wool State, two years ago, and they state that sheep husbandry will be fully as profitable in this region as in Ohio. Their flock has wintered well both winters, the percentage of loss being less than in Ohio, because of the dryness of the atmosphere. Comfortable sheds have been provided, and Mr. Boyd says he fed his sheep a less number of days in this country during winter than in Ohio. In that State feeding usually begins about the middle of November, while here he began the 16th of December, and quit the 26th of March. The sheep gained rapidly from the time they began feeding in the spring, which is not always the case east. Boyd's sheep sheared on an average nine pounds of wool to the head, which netted 10 cents per pound. The percentage of increase is above that of the east, which is seldom over 75 per cent. Boyd had 147 lambs from 116 ewes. Certainly money cannot be made faster in any country than in Dakota by those who go into stock raising on a moderate scale. It will pay 100 per cent more than grain, and it is only a question of time when the farmers will see this.

CONCENTRATED FERTILIZERS.

American Cultivator: Most farmers measure stable or barnyard manure by the load; but the phrase, "a load of manure" is as indefinite as regards value as is the size of a "piece of chalk." Not only do loads vary in bulk, but there is a great difference in the plant food contained in each. The character of a man's farming is very largely determined by the kind of a manure he aplies to his soil. If he feeds stock mainly on straw, the manure will be so poor as not to be worth drawing to the fields, except when men and teams have nothing else to do. There is a really more reason than is commonly supposed in the practice of some poor farmers, who leave their straw manure to rot down and buy fertilizers which give equal fertility in much smaller doses. But there is no reason why barnyard manure should be of poor quality. Good stock properly fed will pay for feeding enough grain, oil-cake or mill feed to make the manure valuable for all crops.

STRAW AS FOOD FOR CATTLE.

A few years ago the general opinion among farmers, and especially English farmers, was that straw was of little or no value as food, and only useful as bedding and to increase the manure pile. This arose from a misunderstanding of food elements and the valuable elements of manure. A late number of the National Live Stock Journal says that straw contains so little albuminoid matter to grow the muscles, and phosphate of lime to build the bones, that it was properly considered poor food in the light of a complete ration, but, when considered as a partial food to be supplemented by other food which balances its deficiencies, it is found to have an important value as cattle food. Its principal value as a food is in its digestible carbohydrates (that is, composed of carbon and the elements of water), which furnish the food to produce animal heat, a very important part of food.

Now, in the hands of a skillful feeder, who knows what food to give with straw to make up its deficiencies, it is worth more than half as much as good hay. A ton of oat-straw mixed with the best clover hay, would make mixture equal in value to ordinary meadow hay. And 400 pounds of linseed or cotton seed meal mixed with a ton of straw, would give 2,400 pounds of fodder, equal in value to 2,400 pounds of meadow or timothy hay. This gives an important food value to straw, and the points to be well considered is, that nearly all that is digested in straw has no value as manure. Nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash are the only valuable manure when fed as when not fed. Straw should be used as food and all its value saved.

PRESERVING EGGS.

At the Birmingham poultry show, England, prizes were offered for the best dozen preserved eggs that had been kept two months. The eggs were tested by breaking one of each set competing for the prize into a clean saucer; also by boiling one of each lot. The eggs that had been preserved in lime water, it was found on breaking them, presented cloudy whites. Eggs preserved by rubbing over with beeswax and oil showed thin, watery whites. Eggs that stood best the test of boiling, and which gained the first prize, had been simply packed in common salt. These had lost little, if any, by evaporation, had good, consistent albumen, and were pleasant to the taste. The exhibit which took the second prize was scarcely inferior in quality. They were preserved as follows: Melt one part of white wax to two parts of spermaceti. Take new, laid eggs, rub with antiseptic salt or fine rice starch. Wrap each egg in fine tissue paper putting the broad edge downward; screw the paper tightly at the top, leaving an inch to hold it by. Dip each egg rapidly in the fat heated to 1,008 degrees. Withdraw and leave to cool. Pack, broad end downward, in dry sand or sawdust. The judges were inclined to believe that had the trial been for a longer period than two months, this latter method would, perhaps, have proven the better of the two. The eggs were excellent, and on stripping off the waxed paper, the shells presented the clean, fresh appearance of newly-laid eggs.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Oak branches will outlast body timber for fence posts two to one.

Wool is always in demand and our country has never yet produced sufficient for home demands.

Rusty iron kept in their drinking water is said to be an excellent remedy for looseness of feathers in fowls.

Finely cut straw will answer instead of sawdust in filling icehouse, and is handier to be had on the farm.

In their desire for saline food, animals will drink the most impure fluids, and will even eat earth. The writer thinks it both injudicious and cruel to deprive cattle of salt, and thus compel them to seek it in refuse.

Professor Henry, of the Wisconsin experiment station, is satisfied that 100 pounds of skimmed milk is worth a half bushel of corn meal for feeding hogs, provided that meal is fed with the milk in proper proportions, which he estimates at two pounds of meal for three and one-half pounds of milk.

PERPLEXED HOUSEKEEPERS.

There are very few ladies who are good housekeepers who do not get puzzled and perplexed sometimes in their daily round of duties. At such a time, it is a wonderful help to have at hand such a practical and helpful aid as The Housekeeper, a beautiful and useful magazine published on purpose to help housekeepers with suggestions, recipes, and replies to inquiries. It is admirably conducted. Send for specimen copy, (sent free to any address). Trial trip three months 15 cents. Ladies are making good salaries introducing it. One lady cleared $500, besides expenses, from September 1st to December 31st, 1884. Others are doing nearly as well. Buckeye Publishing Co., Minneapolis, Minn., are the publishers.

The Best and Cheapest Dairy Paper.

Every well posted dairyman has heard of the Jefferson County Union, published at Fort Atkinson, Wis., the leading dairy paper of the Northwest, edited and owned by W. D. Hoard, who for a number of years has filled the position of President of the Northwestern Dairyman's Association. For the sake of placing sound dairy reading within the reach of all, Mr. Hoard has commenced the publication of a compact edition of all dairy, market and agricultural matter contained in the Union, which will be issued weekly under the name of "Hoard's Dairyman." This paper will be issued for a time in a six column folio form, and is truly a very valuable compendium of dairy knowledge. The Dairyman will contain each week the finest and most extensive dairy market reports from all important markets besides a letter from Elgin, the great butter market of the Northwest. In addition will be given letters from the most practical dairymen of the country, on all that pertains to first-class dairy farming, breeding dairy stock, &c. Reports in summary of all the leading Dairy Conventions, will be published. Each number contains a record of the sales of butter by the leading dairymen around Fort Atkinson, and elsewhere. This is a valuable feature. Every farmer who keeps a half dozen cows ought to read "Hoard's Dairyman." It will pay him a hundred fold on the investment. We will send the Dairyman with THE JOURNAL for one year for $2. Call and see sample copies. [43-46]

GIVEN AWAY FOR ONE YEAR.

We want 200,000 subscribers before May 1st, 1885, to our large illustrated publication, The Sunshine Magazine. In order to get the above number of subscribers we must give away subscriptions the first year, and the second year we will make up the loss as most of them will subscribe again, paying our regular price. Send twelve two-cent stamps to pay postage and you will have the above Magazing to read every week for one whole year. If you accept the above offer, we expect you will be kind enough to distribute among your friends, a few small books containing our advertisements and 167 of the best household receipts, for which we will make you a present of a handsome, silver plated, five-bottle CASTER, or a pair of ROLLER SKATES. State how many books you can give away for us, and we will send the books and Caster (or Skates) prepaid. Order for your friends also, and you will receive both presents. Address

We recommend the Minneapalis Tribune to all our reders.

"YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO MISS IT."

"An eight-page, forty-column weekly a whole year for only 50 cents." This is the offer made by the publishers of the American Rural Home, of Rochester, N. Y., to all persons who send in their year's subscription before April 1st, 1885. This is an opportunity to secure one of the best farm journals in the world at a bargain. The Rural is the brightest, cheapest and most popular weekly published for the farmer and his family. It is not a paper of mushroom growth, like many so-called farm journals that are at present being extensively advertised, but has been published regularly for fifteen years. Many of the ablest Agriculturists and Horticulturists write for it. It is, in short, the model journal for those who dwell in village and country homes, and should be the first one subscribed for after your local paper. We are acquainted with both paper and publishers and cheerfully recommend it to our readers as a first-class agricultural journal, worth twice the money asked for it. The regular price is ONE DOLLAR A YEAR, IN ADVANCE, but the special offer of FIFTY CENTS will be accepted if sent in before April 1st, 1885. Remember, this is no humbug, but a genuine bona fide proposition to furnish for FIFTY CENTS A YEAR the only eight-page, forty-column agricultural WEEKLY ever offered at that price. Address,

RURAL HOME CO., LIMITED,
[46-50] Rochester, N. Y.

The Housekeeper, notices of which have frequently appeared in the JOURNAL, has been greatly enlarged and improved and is now become indispensable in every well regulated household. It is published by the Buckeye Publishing Co. of Minneapolis and will be sent to all who wish to try it for six months for 25 cents. We can recommend it highly to our lady friends.

Berthiaume Bros. have secured the services of Tom Morris, who is well known as one of the best workmen in his line in the business, and thus doubly fortified, are ready to meet anything and everything that comes along. If you want an A No. 1 job, 'pon honor, try the well known house of Berthiaume Bros.

If you want an A No. 1 agricultural paper you can't afford to miss the chance to get Farm, Stock and Home for 25 cents. You can have it one year for two bits if you are a paid up subscriber to the JOURNAL, and you can have it any way by becoming so and depositing a quarter of a dollar. We don't know how long this chance will last, but the sooner you close in with the terms the sooner you are all right, any how. Call and see a sample.

The Messenger went into sack-cloth and ashes on our account last week—and all to no account. You can't expect the whole county is going to incur a larger debt of taxation just to build you up, individually, Mr. Messenger man. You would do better by advocating something that would benefit taxpayers rather than a scheme to add to their burdens without a cent's worth of benefits—but the subject is not worthy of further notice.

Most of the boys do be studying French in those days and it is great fun to hear them jabber—sounds very like the musical jabber of the famous Red River carts of yore when they were half greased. A. P. Bond has got as far as "Polly view frog's eggs," or thereabouts, and is waiting for those who don't know so much to catch up. Ed. Charbanean has passed by and is serenely roosting on a "sacre" stump. Ira says he don't know the blarsted stuff very easy yet but he's going to "git thar!" Some of them are getting along famously, more of them don't.

It is said that work on the Duluth & Winnipeg will be resumed in the spring.

The Minneapolis Tribune costs 75 cents per month, and $8.00 per annum for the Daily; or 90 cents a month, and $10 per annum for the Daily and Sunday, while the weekly is only $1.00 per annum.

"AUNT BECKY," tired of waiting for some of the sterner sex to act as special reporter from Beltrami, seizes the quill and rushes to the rescue this week in a nice little chatty news-letter. We welcome "Aunt Becky" to the circle and trust that she will come often.

The place to buy remnants is at the New York store.

Some of the boys claim that Tom Stahl (in that picture) resembles Col. Vilas, (the new Postmaster General) who is said to be the handsomest man in America. More of them did not recognize him as the Postmaster General because he didn't have his Hatton.

If you want a No. 1 agricultural paper, a home institution drop in and subscribe for Farm, Stock and Home, published at Minneapolis, Minn. All paid up subscribers to the JOURNAL can get it for 25 cents a year. We have sent in one large list and are making up another to send in on or about April 1st.

The doctors disagree as to the probable effects of the railroad bill, some claiming it is no good, some that it is all right, and others that it is "jes tol'able, thankee." The best reason we have seen why it is all right and will cause an open market is because the Pioneer Press says it is "no good—worse than nothing."

Hack & Gallasch are selling at cost to make room for spring stock. For bargains call on them. 38tf

The bond election in the city was a very tame, quiet affair and a very light vote polled. So it will be found throughout the county, though the majority will be large against the bonds. Our citizens do not lack in public-spirit by any means but any measure demanding their support must be shown to be of value received before it is endorsed.

The Commercial, under the present management, is doing a good business and amply deserves to rank among our leading hotels. S. P. Norton never stops at any expense or trouble to render his guests comfortable, and if there is a better man in his place than Ira DeCamp we don't know where he takes his French lessons. Ira is bound to get there every time.

The Fay Templeton Opera Company has written to Mr. Filiatrault to secure dates on April 20th, and Mr. F. has returned a favorable answer. This is an excellent company and "I like it, I like it, I do," is the verdict of every body who hears it. The Jolly Pathfinders are booked for April 23, so it would seem we are to have some amusements this winter, after all.

It is said that the Brainerd & Northwestern railroad will be built anyhow, bonds or no bonds. Well, that is all right, and far better for the farmers of Polk County than as though they had incurred a heavy debt of taxes therefor. If there is a legitimate demand for a road the capital to build it will be found and if it proves a blessing to the country, well and good—if it don't the farmers will flatter themselves that they are not burdened to pay for it.

Wm. Marin has been enjoying himself at New Orleans all winter and was too selfish to write his friends anything about it. He says New Orleans is a splendid place—to leave. He thinks the big show an immense success in every particular except a financial point of view. He was proud of Minnesota's grand display. He kept himself posted on home news every week by reading the JOURNAL there on file but forgot to return the compliment by writing his friends through the JOURNAL.

Superintendants Guthrie and Jenks were surprised on Tuesday morning by a few of the railroad boys who corralled them at the depot long enough to present each with his own picture in a large frame, surrounded by the pictures of the passenger conductors in smaller pictures. Conductor J. B. Copeland made the presentation speech, which is said to have been an eloquent effort. The pictures are framed in large gilt frames and must have cost as high as $50 each. It was a graceful little tribute paid to worthy officials and will doubtless be highly prized by the recipients.

The County Board meets on Tuesday next March 17th.

Sands leads off the group and looks as dignified as General Grant.

Van Dyke & Co., are cleaning house this week and will be ready to say something by next week.

S. E. Chapin drove J. W. Howes famous trotter over from Grand Forks on Wednesday in four hours. Not bad for these roads.

One more week passed under the new administration and nobody taken away suddenly! What does it all mean? We begin to feel almost safe!

Mrs. John Weeks, of Lakota, D. T., is visiting with friends in the city. Mr. W., it will be remembered was formerly a resident of Crookston, in the mercantile business.

Mr. Dahl is building a new house on Sands' vacant lot, adjoining Conductor J. B. Copeland's residence on Main St. Its a paradox. It will be a Dahl-house and it won't be a doll-house.

Dr. Just is building on Broadway, nearly opposite Loring Avenue. He will occupy the building for office purposes as soon as completed which he expects will be as soon as April 1st.

It is said that it was Uncle Josh's hotel letter what killed the bonds. People would not vote aid to a railroad with Uncle Josh's hotel plan staring them in the face. How could they?

Inquiring at the court house yesterday as to news about the bond vote Auditor McGuire said that but 8 or 10 towns had reported as yet but that the bonds were buried more than four to to one.

Terry & Collins expect a thoroughbred Norman stallion from the stables of the great breeder, Dunham, of Illinois. His arrival will be duly noted. They will also receive a carload of horses for sale at the same time.

Occasionally a carload of stock is seen going north and many carloads of wagons are arriving showing that the time of year is coming, my dear, for the busy immigrant and home-hunter. Let 'em come. Uncle Sam is rich enough to give 'em all a farm.

On Friday last, a young Norwegian lady, who has been working at the Scandinavian hotel, was at the Opera house skating rink and in some way managed to fall and break her arm. She will have her arm in the dry docks for repairs for a month when she will again be able to skate as good as new.

Our attention has been called to some work recently turned out by photographer Kortson, which shows that it is no longer necessary to go to St. Paul for nice work in that line. The pictures are nicely taken and finished and will compare favorably with any artist's work whoever he is. We like it; we do.

At the present rate farmers will soon be seeding. The prospects for an early spring are many and encouraging, but with wheat at only 60 cents per bushel to start on the prospects for a large area sown are not bright. We have got the impression that prices will be better next fall than for two years, yet we don't know as we can prove it.

Immigration begins to waken up. Reports say that immigrants for the Northwest are beginning to arrive in St. Paul in detachments and platoons and the prospects are good for a considerable number of new settlers this year. Let 'em come. Polk County can provide homes for a goodly number of them on her broad and fertile acres yet unoccupied.

While unloading ice last Friday Mr. A. N. Hopkins got the thumb of his right hand between a 400 pound chunk and the door jamb and before he could say Jack Robinson his right thumb was shorter than the other by a half inch or so. He came to the city on Saturday and found that beyond the loss of the nail and a pound or so of meat, he was all right. He is doing nicely but could not strike very hard with that hand.

The office of the Bismarck Tribune was destroyed by fire last week together with other buildings including the post-office. The Tribune's loss is estimated at $15,000 while C. A. Lounsbery, formerly its owner, but now of the Herald lost $8,000. The Tribune was an excellent paper and its loss would be a public calamity equal to the loss of the capital—but the Tribune will rise again and the capital will not be moved.

The following is the winning ticket in Andover:

Supervisors—J. O. Milne, Chairman.
E. B. Scribner.

Will sell for cash or will trade for heifer calves. Address A. N. Hopkins, on the farm near Crookston, or the JOURNAL office for further particulars.

Beltrami Items.

Rev. Wells, of Ada, delivered a temperance lecture here last evening, March 8th. It was splendid. He was assisted by Dr. E. A. Lyman, of Ada, who led in singing.

Mr. Daniel Aught, who has been very ill, is now convalescent.

Mr. Webb Murphy and wife have gone to Lockhart.

Mrs. Fokes, who has been visiting in Crookston, has returned.

Squire Budd and family expect to locate in Beltrami.

A. W. Wroth's nobby counter jumper spent Sunday in the country.

M. Rodecker, of Sharon, Pa., is here. He reports the weather colder out there than here and times very dull.

Arthur Jackson intends to import a pair of Holsteins.

Go to C. M. Orl, the grocer, for your baking powder.

Beltrami has no roller rink but the boys who have roller skates monopolize the side walk.

There is rumor of a wedding in the near future. AUNT BECKY.

OBITUARY.

Died at Beltrami, Minn., March 1st, Robin Webb, aged 22 months, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Webb.

Weep not for your little Robin,
Mourn not your angel flown,
Think what a lovely flower
You gave in heaven to bloom.

Then shed no tears of sorrow,
Fond parents, on his tomb,
With kindred spirits now he dwells
And stands before God's throne.

Dear Robin's face we see no more,
But a still voice seems to say
He is not dead but gone before
To meet us on our way. M.

MARRIED.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 21 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 70 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

ROUND HOME.

Business is waking up as the time for robins approaches.

The Minneapolis Tribune is the brightest Daily newspaper in the Northwest.

Fred Almy has been down from Medicine Hat for a week past.

Call at Berthiaume Bro's jewelry palace for everything in their line.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

The Legislature has adjourned and now many a schemer breathes easier.

The work of piling for the new bridge goes rapidly on and will soon be completed at this rate.

Red flannels, plain and twilled guaranteed all wool, from 22 cents to 50 cents, at the New York store.

Pete Cornelius brought his two year old Clyde colt to be weighed. She tips the beam at 1,455.

H. C. Misner was in from Euclid on Monday and reported that whole country solid against the bonds.

You can buy gents' wool underwear at less than wholesale cost, at the New York store.

Charlie Chiniquy has reported. He is in Chicago yet and did not say when he expected to start for New Orleans.

Have you seen Cahoon's famous lamp burner? He has also some elegant little lamp mats which always sell on sight.

"Gath's" letters, Wilkie Collins' and Miss Braddon's serial stories, can be found ONLY in the Minneapolis Tribune.

The Olive Leaf contained some very excellent articles against the bonds last week, but reached us too late to be of avail.

J. L. Bailey is on the lookout for some fine stock for his farm. He fully believes that man cannot live by wheat alone.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

See Cahoon's ad about those Burpee Welcome oats. They are the boss oat and will be in general use when better known.

Ira D. Blanchard struck a flowing well for E. O. Flanders on Friday last. Mr. Blanchard is coming to the front in good shape.

Conductor Copeland is taking a bit of a lay-off. He is somewhat under the weather and intends to take a thorough rest and recruit up before he takes his train.

On Friday last the fire department went out on drill when it was ascertained that the hydrants were frozen up entirely. The defect was soon remedied.

Don't be alarmed at that whistle what you hear at early dawn, at noon and dewy eve, 'tis only the new steam whistle at Lee & Herrick's roller mill, and indicates that the boys are ready for anything that happens.

Pete Nolan stopped off on Tuesday to see how he looks in a group. They all say "he's a darling," and we are inclined to the opinion that Pete does look fully as well in a picture—but when you come down to solid worth the picture does not show up.

Mr. A. E. Sawyer is up from Faribault attending to his business while George Catlin is sick. George was doing nicely but had a relapse from which he does not rally so quickly. His physician says, however, that he is improving hopefully.

Berthiaume Bros. have secured the services of Tom Morris, who is well known as one of the best workmen in his line in the business, and thus doubly fortified, are ready to meet anything and everything that comes along. If you want an A No. 1 job, 'pon honor, try the well known house of Berthiaume Bros.

If you want an A No. 1 agricultural paper you can't afford to miss the chance to get Farm, Stock and Home for 25 cents. You can have it one year for two bits if you are a paid up subscriber to the JOURNAL, and you can have it any way by becoming so and depositing a quarter of a dollar. We don't know how long this chance will last, but the sooner you close in with the terms the sooner you are all right any how. Call and see a sample.

The Messenger went into sack cloth and ashes on our account last week—and all to no account. You can't expect the whole county is going to incur a larger debt of taxation just to build you up individually, Mr. Messenger man. You would do better by advocating something that would benefit taxpayers rather than a scheme to add to their burdens without a cent's worth of benefit—but the subject is not worthy of further notice.

Most of the boys do be studying French in these days and it is great fun to hear them jabber—sounds very like the musical jabber of the famous Red River carts of yore when they were half greased. A. P. Bond [illegible]

It is said that work on the Duluth & Winnipeg will be resumed in the spring.

J. E. Dahler, ye collector for the Reliance Machine Co., registered at the Commercial on Tuesday.

The boys are beginning to return from the lumbering camps. Mike LeGuee returned on Wednesday.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

Ira D. Blanchard has contracted to get a flowing well for Terry & Collins we are told and will begin operations at once.

A grand masquerade is on the carpet for April 6th. Mr. Mignault will engineer the concern which is a guarantee of a good time.

The McCormick Manufacturing Co. have issued a handsome circular showing their goods. Every farmer should have one and can secure a copy on application to Stone & Pinkerton.

The Minneapolis Tribune costs 75 cents per month, and $8.00 per annum for the Daily; or 90 cents a month, and $10 per annum for the Daily and Sunday, while the weekly is only $1.00 per annum.

"AUNT BECKY," tired of waiting for some of the sterner sex to act as special reporter from Beltrami, seizes the quill and rushes to the rescue this week in a nice little chatty news-letter. We welcome "Aunt Becky" to the circle and trust that she will come often.

OBITUARY.

Died at Beltrami, Minn., March 1st, Robin Webb, aged 22 months, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Webb.

Weep not for your little Robin,
Mourn not your angel flown;
Think what a lovely flower
You gave in heaven to bloom.

Then shed no tears of sorrow,
Fond parents, on his tomb,
With kindred spirits now he dwells
And stands before God's throne.

Dear Robin's face we see no more,
But a still voice seems to say
He is not dead but gone before
To meet us on our way. M.

Crookston, March 12th, 1885

ROUND HOME.

Business is waking up as the time for robins approaches.

The Minneapolis Tribune is the brightest Daily newspaper in the Northwest.

Fred Almy has been down from Medicine Hat for a week past.

Call at Berthiaume Bro's jewelry palace for everything in their line.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

The Legislature has adjourned and now many a schemer breathes easier.

The work of piling for the new bridge goes rapidly on and will soon be completed at this rate.

Red flannels, plain and twilled guaranteed all wool, from 22 cents to 50 cents, at the New York store.

Pete Cornelius brought his two year old Clyde colt to be weighed. She tips the beam at 1,455.

H. C. Misner was in from Euclid on Monday and reported that whole country solid against the bonds.

You can buy gents' wool underwear at less than wholesale cost, at the New York store.

Charlie Chiniquy has reported. He is in Chicago yet and did not say when he expected to start for New Orleans.

Have you seen Cahoon's famous lamp burner? He has also some elegant little lamp mats which always sell on sight.

"Gath's" letters, Wilkie Collins' and Miss Braddon's serial stories, can be found ONLY in the Minneapolis Tribune

The Olive Leaf contained some very excellent articles against the bonds last week, but reached us too late to be of avail.

J. L. Bailey is on the lookout for some fine stock for his farm. He fully believes that man cannot live by wheat alone.

You can buy a large surge white bed spread for 85 cents, at the New York store.

See Cahoon's ad about those Burpee Welcome oats. They are the boss oat and will be in general use when better known.

Ira D. Blanchard struck a flowing well for E. O. Flanders on Friday last. Mr. Blanchard is coming to the front in good shape.

Conductor Copeland is taking a bit of a lay-off. He is somewhat under the weather and intends to take a thorough rest and recruit up before he takes his train.

On Friday last the fire department went out on drill when it was ascertained that the hydrants were frozen up entirely. The defect was soon remedied.

Don't be alarmed at that whistle what you hear at early dawn, at noon and dewy eve, 'tis only the new steam whistle at Lee & Herrick's roller mill, and indicates that the boys are ready for anything that happens.

Pete Nolan stopped off on Tuesday to see how he looks in a group. They all say "he's a darling," and we are inclined to the opinion that Pete does look fully as well in a picture—but when you come down to solid worth the picture does not show up.

Mr. A. E. Sawyer is up from Faribault attending to his business while George Catlin is sick. George was doing nicely but had a relapse from which he does not rally so quickly. His physician says, however, that he is improving hopefully.

Berthiaume Bros. have secured the services of Tom Morris, who is well known as one of the best workmen in his line in the business, and thus doubly fortified, are ready to meet anything and everything that comes along. If you want an A No. 1 job, 'pon honor, try the well known house of Berthiaume Bros.

If you want an A No. 1 agricultural paper you can't afford to miss the chance to get Farm, Stock and Home for 25 cents. You can have it one year for two bits if you are a paid up subscriber to the JOURNAL, and you can have it any way by becoming so and depositing a quarter of a dollar. We don't know how long this chance will last, but the sooner you close in with the terms the sooner you are all right, any how. Call and see a sample.

The Messenger went into sack-cloth and ashes on our account last week—and all to no account. You can't expect the whole county is going to incur a larger debt of taxation just to build you up, individually, Mr. Messenger man. You would do better by advocating something that would benefit taxpayers rather than a scheme to add to their burdens without a cent's worth of benefits—but the subject is not worthy of further notice.

Most of the boys do be studying French in those days and it is great fun to hear them jabber—sounds very like the musical jabber of the famous Red River carts of yore when they were half greased. A. P. Bond has got as far as "Polly view frog's eggs," or thereabouts, and is waiting for those who don't know so much to catch up. Ed. Charbaneau has passed by and is serenely roosting on a "sacre" stump. Ira says he don't know the blarsted stuff very easy yet but he's going to "git thar!" Some of them are getting along famously, more of them don't [illegible]

It is said that work on the Duluth & Winnipeg will be resumed in the spring.

J. E. Dabler, ye collector for the Reliance Machine Co., registered at the Commercial on Tuesday.

The boys are beginning to return from the lumbering camps. Mike LeGuee returned on Wednesday.

At the New York store they are bound to do business even in dull times if prices can do any.

Ira D. Blanchard has contracted to get a flowing well for Terry & Collins we are told and will begin operations at once.

A grand masquerade is on the carpet for April 6th. Mr. Mignault will engineer the concern which is a guarantee of a good time.

The McCormick Manufacturing Co. have issued a handsome circular showing their goods. Every farmer should have one and can secure a copy on application to Stone & Pinkerton.

The Minneapolis Tribune costs 75 cents per month, and $8.00 per annum for the Daily; or 90 cents a month, and $10 per annum for the Daily and Sunday, while the weekly is only $1.00 per annum.

"AUNT BECKY," tired of waiting for some of the sterner sex to act as special reporter from Beltrami, seizes the quill and rushes to the rescue this week in a nice little chatty news-letter. We welcome "Aunt Becky" to the circle and trust that she will come often.

The place to buy remnants is at the New York store.

Some of the boys claim that Tom Stahl (in that picture) resembles Col. Vilas, (the new Postmaster General) who is said to be the handsomest man in America. More of them did not recognize him as the Postmaster General because he didn't have his Hatton.

If you want a No. 1 agricultural paper, a home institution drop in and subscribe for Farm, Stock and Home, published at Minneapolis, Minn. All paid up subscribers to the JOURNAL can get it for 25 cents a year. We have sent in one large list and are making up another to send in on or about April 1st.

The doctors disagree as to the probable effects of the railroad bill, some claiming it is no good, some that it is all right, and others that it is "jes tol'able, thankee." The best reason we have seen why it is all right and will cause an open market is because the Pioneer Press says it is "no good—worse than nothing."

Hack & Gallasch are selling at cost to make room for spring stock. For bargains call on them. 38tf

The bond election in the city was a very tame, quiet affair and a very light vote polled. So it will be found throughout the county, though the majority will be large against the bonds. Our citizens do not lack in public-spirit by any means but any measure demanding their support must be shown to be of value received before it is endorsed.

The Commercial, under the present management, is doing a good business and amply deserves to rank among our leading hotels. S. P. Norton never stops at any expense or trouble to render his guests comfortable, and if there is a better man in this place than Ira DeCamp we don't know where he takes his French lessons. Ira is bound to get there every time.

The Fay Templeton Opera Company has written to Mr. Filiatrault to secure dates on April 20th, and Mr. F. has returned a favorable answer. This is an excellent company and "I like it, I like it, I do," is the verdict of every body who hears it. The Jolly Pathfinders are booked for April 23, so it would seem we are to have some amusements this winter, after all.

It is said that the Brainerd & Northwestern railroad will be built anyhow, bonds or no bonds. Well, that is all right, and far better for the farmers of Polk County than as though they had incurred a heavy debt of taxes therefor. If there is a legitimate demand for a road the capital to build it will be found and if it proves a blessing to the country, well and good—if it don't the farmers will flatter themselves that they are not burdened to pay for it.

Wm. Marin has been enjoying himself at New Orleans all winter and was too selfish to write his friends anything about it. He says New Orleans is a splendid place—to leave. He thinks the big show an immense success in every particular except a financial point of view. He was proud of Minnesota's grand display. He kept himself posted on home news every week by reading the JOURNAL there on file but forgot to return the compliment by writing his friends through the JOURNAL.

Superintendants Guthrie and Jenks were surprised on Tuesday morning by a few of the railroad boys who corralled them at the depot long enough to present each with his own picture in a large frame, surrounded by the pictures of the passenger conductors in smaller pictures. Conductor J. B. Copeland made the presentation speech, which is said to have been an eloquent effort. The pictures are framed in large gilt frames and must have cost as high as $50 each. It was a graceful little tribute paid to worthy officials and will doubtless be highly prized by the recipients.

The County Board meets on Tuesday next March 17th.

Sands leads off the group and looks as dignified as General Grant.

Van Dyke & Co., are cleaning house this week and will be ready to say something by next week.

S. E. Chapin drove J. W. Howes famous trotter over from Grand Forks on Wednesday in four hours. Not bad for these roads.

One more week passed under the new administration and nobody taken away suddenly! What does it all mean? We begin to feel almost safe!

Mrs. John Weeks, of Lakota, D. T., is visiting with friends in the city. Mr. W., it will be remembered was formerly a resident of Crookston, in the merchantile business.

Mr. Dahl is building a new house on Sands' vacant lot, adjoining Conductor J. B. Copeland's residence on Main St. Its a paradox. It will be a Dahl-house and it won't be a doll-house.

Dr. Just is building on Broadway, nearly opposite Loring Avenue. He will occupy the building for office purposes as soon as completed which he expects will be as soon as April 1st.

It is said that it was Uncle Josh's hotel letter what killed the bonds. People would not vote aid to a railroad with Uncle Josh's hotel plan staring them in the face. How could they?

Inquiring at the court house yesterday as to news about the bond vote Auditor McGuire said that but 8 or 10 towns had reported as yet but that the bonds were buried more than four to to one.

Terry & Collins expect a thoroughbred Norman stallion from the stables of the great breeder, Dunham, of Illinois. His arrival will be duly noted. They will also receive a carload of horses for sale at the same time.

Occasionally a carload of stock is seen going north and many carloads of wagons are arriving showing that the time of year is coming, my dear, for the busy immigant and home-hunter. Let 'em come. Uncle Sam is rich enough to give 'em all a farm.

On Friday last, a young Norwegian lady, who has been working at the Scandinavian hotel, was at the Opera house skating rink and in some way managed to fall and break her arm. She will have her arm in the dry docks for repairs for a month when she will again be able to skate as good as new.

Our attention has been called to some work recently turned but by photographer Korison, which shows that it is no longer necessary to go to St. Paul for nice work in that line. The pictures are nicely taken and finished and will compare favorably with any artist's work whoever he is. We like it; we do.

At the present rate farmers will soon be seeding. The prospects for an early spring are many and encouraging, but with wheat at only 60 cents per bushel to start on the prospects for a large area sown are not bright. We have got the impression that prices will be better next fall than for two years, yet we don't know as we can prove it.

Immigration begins to waken up. Reports say that immigrants for the Northwest are beginning to arrive in St. Paul in detachments and platoons and the prospects are good for a considerable number of new settlers this year. Let 'em come. Polk County can provide homes for a goodly number of them on her broad and fertile acres yet unoccupied.

While unloading ice last Friday Mr. A. N. Hopkins got the thumb of his right hand between a 400 pound chunk and the door jamb and before he could say Jack Robinson his right thumb was shorter then the other by a half inch or so. He came to the city on Saturday and found that beyond the loss of the nail and a pound or so of meat, he was all right. He is doing nicely but could not strike very hard with that hand.

The office of the Bismarck Tribune was destroyed by fire last week together with other buildings including the post-office. The Tribune's loss is estimated at $15,000 while C. A. Lounsbery, formerly its owner, but now of the Herald lost $8,000. The Tribune was an excellent paper and its loss would be a public calamity equal to the loss of the capital—but the Tribune will rise again and the capital will not be moved.

The following is the winning ticket in Andover:

Supervisors—J. O. Milne, Chairman.
E. B. Scribner.
August Peterson.
Town Clerk—M. O. Perrin.
Treasurer—G. W. Fisk.
Assessor—L. Davis.
Constables—A. Lytle.
Z. Daoust.
Against the Railroad proposition, 88.

For Sale.

A high grade Shorthorn bull calf, one year old, a high grade Jersey bull calf, eight months old, and a high grade Holstein bull calf, four months old. Will sell for cash or will trade for heifer calves. Address A. N. Hopkins on the farm near Crookston, or the JOURNAL office for further particulars. [illegible]

Beltrami Items.

Rev. Wells, of Ada, delivered a temperance lecture here last evening, March 8th. It was splendid. He was assisted by Dr. E. A. Lyman, of Ada, who led in singing.

Mr. Daniel Aught, who has been very ill, is now convalescent.

Mr. Webb Murphy and wife have gone to Lockhart.

Mrs. Fokes, who has been visiting in Crookston, has returned.

Squire Budd and family expect to locate in Beltrami.

A. W. Wroth's nobby counter jumper spent Sunday in the country.

M. Rodecker, of Sharon, Pa., is here. He reports the weather colder out there than here and times very dull.

Arthur Jackson intends to import a pair of Holsteins.

Go to C. M. Ohl, the grocer, for your baking powder.

Beltrami has no roller rink but the boys who have roller skates monopolize the side walk.

There is rumor of a wedding in the near future. AUNT BECKY.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 18 to 23 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 70 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1881, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

SUMMARY OF NEWS OF THE WEEK.

General Hazen to be Court Martialed.

The president has ordered a general court martial to convene in this city on the 11th inst., for the trial of Brig. Gen. W. B. Hazen chief signal officer of the army, on the charges of conduct prejudical to good order and military discipline, in having officially and publicly criticised the action of the secretary of war for not following his recommendation to send an expedition to the relief of Lieut. Greely, in September, 1883. Following is the detail for the court:

Maj. Gen. Hancock, Maj. Gen. Schofield, Brig. Gen. Howard, Brig. Gen. Terry, Brig. Gen. Augur, Brig. Gen. MacFeely, Brig. Gen. Holabird, Brig. Gen. Murray, Brig. Gen. Newton, Col. Andrews, Twenty-fifth infantry; Col. Merritt, Fifth cavalry; Col. Block, Twenty-third infantry, with Capt. J. W. Claus, Twenty-fourth infantry, judge advocate.

Orders were also issued for the suspension of Gen. Hazen and for him to consider himself in arrest until further orders. Capt. Mills, of the signal service, has been ordered to duty as acting chief signal officer pending the result of the trial of Gen. Hazen. It is understood that the action of the president in this case was precipitated by an interview with Gen. Hazen, published recently, in which Gen. Hazen is represented as placing on the secretary of war the responsibility for the loss of so many members of the Greely party.

Serious Fire at Bismack, Dak.

Friday morning the 5th inst., the Daily Tribune office at Bismarck, Dak., and two adjoining buildings were burned. The second story of the postoffice building was occupied by Col. C. A. Lounsberry and family and several other persons, all of whom were aroused barely in time to escape.

The front portion of the postoffice building was occupied by Mason & Conover, newsdealers, who saved most of their stock, Col. Lounsberry lost all his household goods and personal effects, Mrs. Lounsberry saving only the clothes she put on. M. H. Jewell, proprietor of the Tribune, lost everything, including building, presses, engine, type, complete files of paper, and several hundred dollars worth of work just completed and ready to ship. The total loss is estimated at $34,000 insured for $15,700.

President Arthur orders a court martial to try Gen Hazen for publicly criticising the secretary of war anent the Greely expedition.

John Beard, a farmer, fell into a sugar kettle, near Hazelton, Ind., March 1, and was boiled to death in the sweet liquid.

Ex-Gov. Patten died at his home near Florence, North Alabama. He was governor from 1865 until removed by the Federal restriction laws of 1868.

Gov. Sherman of Iowa removes State Auditor Brown from office, and appoints J. W. Cattell in his stead. Brown, however, refuses to budge.

An examination of the reports of the bureau of statistics on foreign immigration reveals the fact that the number of Irish immigrants arriving this year is significantly small compared with previous years.

John Q. A. Bean, general eastern passenger agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, died suddenly in Boston of peritonitis. He was one of the oldest and best known railroad men in the country.

The increase in the price of pork in France has caused great pressure to be brought upon the government, through the chamber of deputies, to remove the embargo upon the importation of pork from America.

A meeting of the cabinet held Tuesday March 3d, lasted two hours. All the members were present. The senate was devoted to clearing up all official business requiring action during the last present administration.

Laura Niles, eighteen years old, of Alliance, Ohio, entered a suit for breech of promise against Richard Smilie, a rich farmer. She asks $10,000 damages. Smilie has been courting the girl for five years. He is forty years old.

Mrs. Eliza Blaine Walker, only sister of James G. Blaine, died at Baltimore. Her brothers, husband and daughters were with her until she died. Archbishop Gibbons afficiated at the funeral assisted by Rev. Father Curtis.

Gen. Grant joyfully reviewed the news of the passage of the bill for his benefit, rode out and was cheerful, but Dr. Douglas says: The condition of his throat is no better however and the progress of the disease has not been checked.

The only living sister of Stonewall Jackson is Mrs. Laura J. Arnold, now an inmate of Dr. Shepard's sanitarium at Columbus, Ohio, where she has been for years. She is well cared for by her sons, and has never been the recipient of charity.

Commissioner Butterworth, of the patent office, rendered his decision in the great telephone interference case of Bell vs. Gray vs. McDonough vs. Volker, and others. He awarded priority of invention to Alexander Graham Bell in all claims of importance.

The report that Dr. Frank Powell (White Beaver) was about to locate in St. Paul was a mistake, on the contrary the doctor has discontinued his visits to Minnesota—having demonstrated by a six months' practice in that state that he is fully qualified to practice there. White Beaver has made La Crosse his permanent home.

George A. Vincent, alias Charles J. Williamson, also having several other aliases, one of the most notorious of forgers and well known on both sides of the Atlantic, who was convicted in St. Louis for attempting to cash a forged check for a large amount on one of the national banks of that city, was sent to the penitentiary at Jefferson City for ten years.

A general court-martial was ordered for the trial of Medical Director Philip S. Wales, on charges preferred by Secretary Chandler, of neglect of duty in the administration of the office as surgeon general of the navy and chief of the bureau of medicine and surgery, formerly held by him, by which neglect it is alleged, the voucher frauds of that bureau were made possible.

The senate struck out the clause in the legislative, executive and judicial bill allowing the territory of Dakota to increase her council and assembly districts to twenty-four and forty-eight respectively. A conference and committee is now considering the measure, and it is said will recede and allow the claim to remain. The deficiency bill gives $4,400 for a deficiency in the legislative expenses for Dakota.

The garrison of Kassala, which has been defending the place a year, recently made a sortie, but was repulsed by the rebels with a loss of 28 officers and 630 privates. According to advices from Massowah, the garrison at Kassala is reduced to an effective force of 600 men. The town is closely besieged and the garrison short of ammunition. The Egyptian troops are discontented. The government at Cairo has abandoned all hope of relieving the town.

In accordance with the usual custom, the members of the cabinet on Thursday placed their resignations in the hands of President Arthur. Benjamin Butterworth, commissioner of patents, handed his resignation to Secretary Teller, who accepted it and complimented him upon his energetic administration of the office. At the close of business hours, the principal officers of the postoffice department assembled in the postmaster general's room to take leave of Mr. Hatton, the retiring head of the department. He thanked them for their faithful discharge of duty, and received from them in return expressions of their good will.

The president-elect arrived here about 7 o'clock Tuesday morning by a special train consisting of two Pullman cars, and was accompanied by his two sisters, Mrs. Hoyt and Miss Cleveland; his neice, Miss Hastings; his brother, Rev. L. Cleveland; Hon. Dan Manning and Mrs. Manning, and Col. and Mrs. Lamont. President Cleveland and family went to the Arlington House and during the day he received a large number of callers. Lieut. Gen. Sheridan called, and although the corridors below were filled with statesmen he has admitted up stairs, accompanied by M. V. Sheridan, James F. Gregory, Capt. William J. Volkman and Stanhope E. Blunt, his staff. Soon after Gen. Sheridan, Gov. Hendricks came, and, upon admission, retired to an extended consultation in the dining room, which lasted about twenty minutes. President Cleveland made a call on President Arthur at the White House.

COOKING A GIRL.

The Horrible Feast Prepared by a New Zealand Chieftain.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

Earle, who wrote a very readable, intelligent and but little known account of the Maoris very early in the present century, speaks of the gentle manners and kindly ways of a New Zealand chief, whom he afterward discovered to be an inveterate cannibal. He relates that he visited the place where was cooking a young slave girl that his friend had killed for the purpose. The head was severed from the body, the four quarters, with the principal bones removed, were compressed and packed into a small oven in the ground, and coverd with earth. It was a case of unjustifiable cannibalism. No revenge was gratified by the deed, and no excuse could be made that the body was eaten to perfect their triumph. Earle says that he learned that the flesh takes many hours to cook, that it is very tough if not throughly cooked, but that it pulls in pieces like a bit of blotting-paper if well done. He continues that the victim was a handsome, pleasant-looking girl of sixteen, and one that he used frequently to see about the pah. To quote his own words:

"While listening to this frightful detail we felt sick almost to fainting. We left Atoi (the chief who had killed the girl) and again strolled towards the spot where this disgusting feast was cooking. Not a native was now near it, a hot steam kept occasionally bursting from the smothered mass, and the same dog that we had seen take the head of the girl now crept from beneath the bushes and sneaked toward the village; to add to the gloominess of the whole a large hawk rose from the very spot where the poor victim had been cut in pieces. My friend and I sat gazing in this melancholy place; it was a lowering, gusty day, and the moaning of the wind through the bushes as it swept round the hill on which we were, seemed in unison with our feelings."

Earle goes on to relate how he and three other compatriots whom he summoned from the beach for the purpose, with the Englishman's usual impertinent interference and intolerance of customs differing from his own, determined to frustrate Atoi's intention. They together visited the hill where the flesh was cooking, and destroying the oven, buried the remains in the earth. They found the heart put on one side for the special delectation of their constant friend and companion, Atoi. Earle was afterward good-humoredly told by the chief that their interference had been of no avail, as they had found the grave where the flesh had been buried and opened it soon after he and his friends had left, and finished cooking it and ate it all.

Things in General.

California is enjoying spring weather. Acacia in full bloom attracts the bees; roses are beautiful; violets, mignonet, and heliotrope are in early spring flower. About one-half of the rain expected in the wet season has fallen, and the farmers are contemplating speedy planting.

The population of the western half of Kansas has increased so rapidly through emigration, that the strength in the eastern half in the legislature has been seriously diminished. The latest apportionment of members caused a considerable shifting in the representation of the two neighborhoods.

The most extravagantly dressed women of Paris are the actresses, many of whom do not hesitate to expend from $600 to $800 for a single dress to be worn in some society drama. To such a pitch has this extravagance been carried, that the Manager of the Comedie Francaise has repealed the rule compelling the lady members of the company to furnish all their own dresses for pieces the scene of which is laid at the present day. These are now supplied by the theatre, as well as the historical costumes.

The new statistics taken from advance sheets of the "Congregational Year Book" for 1885 are: Whole number of churches, 4,092; with pastors, 937; not supplied, 1,012; new churches, 117; whole number of ministers, 3,889; whole number of church members, 401,549; net increase, 5,300; added on profession, 17,923; adult baptism, 8,290; infant, 5,801; Sunday school members, 478,857; increase, 11,220; benevolent contributions, as reported by 3,000 churches, $1,523,924.22; home expenditures, as reported by 3,000 churches, $3,884,105.91.

It appears that after all there is no danger in keeping growing plants in bedrooms. At a medical conference recently held in France it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of all the wise men present that plants, so long as they are plants only, are a positive benefit to the air of the sleeping-room an account of the amount of ozone and vapor which they exhale. They are also destructive to the microbes which promote consumption. Flowers, either growing or cut, were condemned as injurious to health.

A variation of the Enoch Arden story has just come to an end in Berlin. In 1838 a man married the elder of two sisters. After fourteen years' marriage during which she had borne him several children, she left him and them, and went to America. In 1855 he procured a divorce, and married the younger sister. In 1859 the first wife returned, and was received back into the family. For twenty-five years the three lived together in perfect harmony, until last December when the husband died. What would the English, who do not allow a man to marry his wife's sister even after the first wife is dead, say to this?

One of the curiosities of the New Orleans Exposition is an air flower from the City of Mexico. It is two inches long, and resembles a beetle with wings and horns. The wings are of light sea green color, dotted with specks. The horns are snow white, and at the points very short. The body of the flower is pale yellow and deep orange, and gives a slight hyacinth perfume.

DOCTORS FURIOUS.

Shall a Physician Tell the Truth or Not? A Nice Point in Ethics.

A SENSIBLE HEALTH OFFICIAL.

Baltimore, Md.—A decided stir has been caused here over the question as to the right of a physician to certify to the merits of a remedy not in the modern pharmacopoeia. Dr. James A. Steuart, one of the most eminent physicians in the South and Health Commissioner of this city, had analyzed a newly discovered article, and certified officially not only to its efficiency but to the fact that it replaced old time preparations of a similar character which, analyses had proved, were adulterated and poisonous. The Medical and Chirurgical Faculty, of which he is a member, held that he had violated the code of medical ethics, and much public interest was aroused because of the confidence felt both in his professional standing and official integrity.

It was argued that to thus place a limitation on the acts of a physician, and especialy of a health officer, was opposed to the spirit of the age; that such reasoning might have been logical enough when it was to the interest of rulers or societies to invest themselves with a supernatural halo, but now when thought should be free and untrammeled such things savored of barbarism. It was the duty of a physician, especially of a health officer, to condemn publicly any remedy which he knew to be injurious, but it was not right to say that he should be debarred from testifying to the merits of anything which he knew to be good. If this were so, the world would not receive the benefit of half the discoveries made in art or science. Thus the people argued, while the faculty threatened expulsion and talked of time-honored customs, ethics, professional courtesy and traditions.

But the matter soon assumed a new and surprising phase. A few days afterwards a certificate appeared in the daily papers bearing the autograph signatures of Governor McLane, Attorney-General Roberts, Major Latrobe, City Postmaster Adreon, chiefs of State and municipal departments, Judges and Clerks of Courts, Federal officials and Congressmen, emphatically endorsing the action of the Health Commissioner, and concurring in his opinion as to the afficacy of the remedy, asserting that they did so from personal experience with it and practical tests and observations.

There could be no gainsaying such evidence as this, but, as if to cap the climax, shortly afterwards there appeared another certificate with autograph signatures of leading practicing physicians from all parts of the State, including the physicians of all the leading hospitals, the physician to the City Fire department, the Port physician, vaccine physician and resident physicians of infirmaries, all endorsing the discovery and stating that it had been tested by them in hospitals and private practice for weeks with wonderful curative effect, and that analysis had shown no trace of opiates or poisons, prevalent in other cough mixtures. They further stated that they had been induced to take this step in view of the many hurtful preparations which contained narcotics and poisons and of the dangers consequent on their use. The remedy in question is Red Star Cough cure. Such a conclusive answer as this to the narrow arguments of the few, arrayed public sentiment on the side of the Health Commissioner, and it is significant that Dr. Steuart has since been appointed to office by the Mayor for a third term, and has had his appointment unanimously confirmed by the City Council.

Owing to the high professional reputation of the gentlemen who endorsed his action, as well as to the enviable standing of the owners of the remedy, The Charles A. Vogeler Company, of this city, wide-spread interest has already been created in the subject, not only here, but in Philadelphia, Washington and other neighboring cities. The feeling is generally expressed by professionel men that Red Star Cough Cure, on account of its freedom from narcotics and poisons, inaugurates a most desirable new departure in medicine. This is the pronounced opinion of authorities like Dr. Fawcett, who has been for thirty-three years resident physician of the Union Protestant Infirmary, in this city, and Prof. John J. Caldwell, M. D., member of medical societies of Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn, and with a long experience in civil and military hospitals. Both of these gentlemen together with no less than fifty other practicing physicians of Maryland, have publicly put themselves on record as to the evil of narcotic medicines, and the consequent value and importance of the new discovery referred to. It is conceded that public opinion has completely vindicated Dr. Steuart in his action, and that in his whole course he was actuated simply by an earnest desire to benefit the community at large.

Violin Making.

From the New York Sun.

An instructive discussion has arisen in some of the musical journals in regard to the making of violins. Mr. Schradieck of the Cincinnati College of Music, an excellent performer upon the violin, thinks that the secret of the old Cremona makers has been discovered, and that it consists in using for their instruments the wood of a tree containing balsam. This tree, he says, used to be planted in the neighborhood of Cremona, but it is no longer to be found in Italy. But at last the marvellous tree was found in this country, and one was felled and sent to Cincinnati. Mr. Schradieck does not tell whether it was a pine, a spruce, or a fir, all of which yield a balsam, but the wood, he says, is brittle like glass and flies into shivers. Even when cut the way of the fibre, it breaks off, and is so hard that the tools used to cut become blunted very rapidly. Yet violins made of it are, he thinks, equal to the best Cremonas 200 years old.

The other side of the discussion is taken up by Mr. George Gemunder, of Astoria. He avers that none of the great Cremona makers made violins of any sort of balsam wood, and that the real secret of the quality possessed by their instruments does not lie so much in the kind of material employed in their construction, as in the proper forms and proportions of the different parts of the instrument. It is, of course, important that the right kind of material should be used, but the secret is not in the wood.

The Day of His Greatness O'er.

Washington Letter to Chicago Times.

I heard a member the other day bitterly reproaching some of the lackeys about the hall of the House for their neglect of him. "They all know I haven't been re-elected," he explained to me, "and it is all that I can do to get any service out of them. The member who sits next to me has been returned, and if he makes the slightest signal half a dozen pages will fly towards him with the utmost alacrity. I frequently beat my hands together until they are almost blistered without attracting their attention, and when I do succeed they move toward me as leisurely as you please and execute my orders with a display of condescension that would be amusing if it were not so annoying. It is so with all the members who have failed at re-election. They are all making complaints, and I guess they have reason to. I tell you that these fellows who hang about the capitol picking up the crumbs that fall from the congressional table have a keen eye for the main chance, and no use whatever for a statesman whose days of official life are numbered."

Another Electric Freak.

A lively young man with a red mustache entered a New York eating-house the other day and took a seat. He wore a black neck-scarf in which was thrust an odd-looking pin. A pretty waiter-girl came up, and while brushing away the crumbs from behind the guest asked for his order. "You may bring me some Boston baked"——The young woman did not hear the conclusion of the sentence, for a brilliant light flashed from the odd scarf-pin and frightened her so much that she nearly fainted. The young man glanced up with a look of mild surprise, and said: "Are you faint?" The waiter hurried off to the kitchen. The head of the house next approached. He put the pepper bottle back in the castor, picked up a doughnut from the floor, and was about to make an observation upon the superiority of his squash pies when fire again flashed from the young man's scarf-pin. "What—what—what is the matter with your necktie?" he stuttered, looking at the young man in a startled manner; "it was on fire just now." "Oh, I guess that's all right," muttered the latter with a smile; "any trouble with it now?" "No, I can't see that there is, but"——The fire again became luminous and shone with a brilliancy never equaled by any diamond. It's an electric light on a small scale," said the young man; "I have a little battery in my pocket. By pressing a button a current of electricity is conducted to the pin, which contains a small piece of carbonized bamboo, and the light is produced. Big thing, isn't it?"

Beautiful and Fascinating.

A Washington letter to the Boston Journal says: "Senator M. C. Butler of South Carolina is the handsomest man who has been here this winter. The women enthuse over him and court him, but he has been used to that sort of thing since he wore curls and said his prayers at his mother's knee, and accepts their homage with such grace and dignity that it disarms criticism. He married a woman seven years older than himself, who was at the time a beauty, and with whom he was much in love. She has Titian-red hair, lovely features, a perfect figure, and exquisite hands and feet, and is the daughter of a house whose race has been distinguished for generations in politics as in the social world—blue-blooded, rich, and talented. He has two daughters, one of them a debutante, and three sons, the second a graduate of Princeton College, and now Vice-Consul at Liverpool, Eng., who inherits his father's exceeding beauty and fascination, and who also has brilliant talent. Senator Butler's mother was a sister of Commodore Perry of Lake Erie fame, and he bears a striking resemblance to his famous uncle as he is painted on the wall of the Capitol at the head of the Senate staircase, where the naval engagement is illustrated in high colors."

Agreeable to Everybody.

Col. Robert G. King, for ten years Deputy Collector Internal Revenue, Baltimore, Maryland, writes: I endorse the Red Star Cough Cure. I have used it in my family for a violent cough and found it excellent. Its use was entirely free from the depressing effects of other cough remedies. It can be readily taken, and agrees with and benefits everybody suffering from throat and lung troubles. The relief is permanent, and there is no reaction.

Iron Rule in Cuba.

Globe-Democrat.

The Spanish masters of Cuba maintain an iron rule. Every man, it is said, who expresses sentiment not strictly loyal to the Spanish authority is arrested and imprisoned. Conspiracy is punished by dungeon confinement or death, and this practice has gone very far to encourage people not to talk politics. Of frequent notice in cafes and other public places is a conspicuous placard bearing the significant legend: "Please do not talk politics here;" and wherever you meet him, whether at home or abroad, the prudent Cuban, if he values his life or liberty, or is possessed of confiscatable property, keeps his political opinons to himself. The newspapers are all subjected to censorship, the telegraph offices are under surveillance of the police, and it is even said that the mails are often examined for reasonable documents.

Davenport, Iowa, Special:—Intelligence has reached here of the death at St. Augusta, Fla., of George L. Davenport of this city, who was the first white child born in all this region. He was taken with heart affliction at the agency at Tama a year ago, and went to Florida in hopes of benefiting himself, upon the advice of his physician. His death, however, was sudden and unexpected so soon. He leaves a wife and two daughters. His remains will be buried either here or on Rock Island.

Low Prices for Butter.

The New York Tribune in its market report, explained why some butter is sold for such low prices. In speaking of butter it said: "Light colored goods are very hard to dispose of and several lots were thought well sold at 8 to 10 cents." If butter makers would get the top price, they should use the Improved Butter Color, made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. It gives a pure dandelion color, and never turns red, or rancid, but tends to improve and preserve the butter.

"Yes, and she'd be the belle of the town if it wasn't for one thing."

"What's that?"

"She has catarrh so bad that it is unpleasant to be near her. She has tried a dozen things and nothing helps her. I am sorry, for I like her, but that doesn't make it any less disagreeable, for one to be around her."

Now if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure catarrh every time.

OH, HAD I KNOWN.

If I had thought so soon she would have died,
He said, I had been tenderer in my speech,
I had a moment lingered at her side,
And held her ere she passed beyond my reach;
If I had thought so soon she would have died.

That day she looked up with her startled eyes,
Like some hurt creature where the woods are deep;
With kisses I had stilled those breaking sighs,
With kisses closed those eyelids into sleep,
That day she looked up with her startled eyes.

Oh, had I known she would have died so soon,
Love had not wasted on a barren land,
Love like those rivers under torrid noon
Lost on the desert, poured out on the sand—
Oh, had I known she would have died so soon!

MISS PENELOPE, SENIOR.

BY BARBARA YECHTON.

Dr. Hardy was Miss Penelope's father, and Miss Penelope was aunt to Penelope Hardy, Jr. They had lived nearly all their lives in the same old-fashioned house, and Miss Penelope had never been away from it for one night even. There had been a large family of them, but only Miss Penelope and the doctor remained—he peculiar and somewhat of a martinet; she, with a simple, self sacrificing nature and a strict New England conscience.

At last the doctor grew too feeble to practice any longer, and, after some demur, sold out to Dr. Joel Sherburne, a shrewd, energetic Maine man, who set up his shingle a little way off, and soon extended the business. He was cheerful as well as skillful, and people were quick to find it out. Still, he could not afford to despise Dr. Hardy's many years of experience, and was very glad sometimes to ask the older man's advice, which gratified him and consequently pleased Miss Penelope. It was such a break in the monotony of their lives to have this big cheery man to come in and sit an hour with them, bringing a breath of the outer world with him, for his talk was not always of medicine; busy as he was he found time to read the magazines, and many a new idea and pleasant thought found its way to Miss Penelope's more than half-starved brain.

They made a cozy group around the open hearth. The doctors talked and argued to their hearts' content, while Miss Penelope sat on the opposite side of the hearth and knitted and darned and listened. She was full of kindly impulses, and observing that Dr. Sherburne's driving gloves were out at the fingers, she timidly offered one evening to mend them for him, and did so while he sat there; another time, in some mysterious way she discovered that there were great holes in his overcoat pockets, which also received attention, and gradually the new doctor began to have a quiet, friendly feeling for the unobtrusive little woman.

Affairs were at this stage when Penelope, Jr., came home. In a fit of gratitude for having been nursed through a severe illness, her mother had named her after Miss Penelope; but, as the gratitude wore away, it was corrupted to Pansy, "a silly, furbishy name," said her grandfather, who never called her by it, though every one else did, even Dr. Sherburne, although he liked the old fashihned name best and always thought of her by it. Her mother had died years before, and her father was in California making money, so the girl spent her summers with her mother's people and her winters in the old homestead.

She was a happy, winsome young thing, and brightened up the old house wonderfully. She and Dr. Sherburne made friends at once. Dr. Joel dropped in quite often now, and a close observer would have noticed that he wore his Sunday clothes almost every evening, was much more particular in his general appearance, and always had something to show or tell Penelope, Jr., in which that wily little maiden appeared to be deeply interested. These days Penelope, Sr., did not feel as cheerful as usual. It did not occur to her to blame either of them; in fact, she knew of a little episode in Pansy's life which had resulted in the pretty ring on her finger, and she thought the doctor knew it, and it seemed quite natural that he would prefer the younger woman's company.

As time wore on the doctor's visits grew very frequent, and he began to realize, for the first time in his busy life, that bachelor quarters were bare and dismal places. Visions of a pleasant hearth of his own and a pleasant face beside the hearth began to haunt his waking moments, and, after much cogitation and weighing of pros and cons, Dr. Sherburne wrote a letter. It was a work of some time and meditation, and cost many a sheet of paper before it was completed; then a patient unexpectedly stepping into the office, it was hurriedly addressed to "Miss Penelope Hardy," and despatched.

During the day it was received. Pansy took it in, and reading the superscription, ran up stairs lightly to Miss Penelope's room with it. "Here, Miss Penelope Hardy," she cried gaily holding the letter over her head, "is a love letter for you. Oh! you sly auntie to be receiving letters from unknown (to me) writers. Here, read it, and then confess to me, or I'll never forgive you." She ran laughingly away, and Miss Penelope was left alone with her letter. After looking it over on all sides she cut off the end of the envelope with her scissors and drew out the letter, and this was what she read:

DEAR MISS PENELOPE—Perhaps you will be surprised when you read this letter. I hope that you have guessed long ago how dear you are to me, and that you may be willing to give the guidance of your dear life into my hands. I know there is a difference in our ages, but not so great, I hope, that love can not bridge it over; and I will try my best to shield you from every trial and care, and to deserve your affection.

I have prospered in business during the past year, and can offer you a very comfortable home, and you will still be near enough to the homestead to be able to look after them. I know you must have had other suitors before me, and I am plain and old-fashioned, not gifted with flowers of speech, but I shall consider myself a most happy and fortunate man if you will consent to be my wife.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN SHERBURNE.

P. S.—Please let me hear from you as soon as possible.

Miss Penelope gasped and laid down the letter. Her mind was in chaotic confusion. She walked over to the small blurred lookingglass which hung over her chest of drawers, and stood there looking intently at herself.

"Ah, if he had come twenty years ago!" she whispered, shaking her head sadly at the reflection before her; "then I might have been worth the having; now, I am an old woman. And yet he loves me, and will consider himself fortunate if I will be his wife. What have I done to deserve this great happiness!" Falling on her knees by her bedside, poor Miss Penelope sobbed and cried a wail of sorrow for her lost youth and more than one tear of joy. Here Penelope, Jr., appeared upon the scene, and hearing the wonderful news told by Miss Penelope with as many blushes as a girl of sixteen, clapped her hands, and embraced her relative on the spot, declaring it was no more than she had expected.

On Dr. Sherburne's table lay two letters, which he was quick to spy when he came in. One was postmarked "Boston," and was from his sister; the other was directed in a small, cramped hand, the capitals carefully elaborated as if by one not given to much writing. Neither of them seemed to be what he expected, so he read his sister's letter first. The end of it ran thus:

Do you know any body in that very far away village of yours by the name of Pansy Harding? I happened to know (in confidence, of course) that she is engaged to my particular pet, Archie Johnston. He raves over her to me, and report says her paternal relative has no end of money. I am dying to know all about her. Do make her acquaintance, and give me your candid opinion of her.

Her pretty ring "a friend" to whom she constantly spoke of writing, and numberless incidents unnoticed at the time, rushed to his memory, and a slow sickening conviction grew upon the lonely man that "youth attracts youth," and that Archie Johnston's Pansy would never be his wife. Slowly, aimlessly, he opened the other letter, but, after the first line or two, read rapidly to the end. Miss Penelope wrote:

I have read your letter, and must say it was a great surprise to me. I never imagined that you cared so much, or at all, for me. First of all, I want to tell you some things that you may not know. You speak of the difference in our ages as if it were a great deal. I may look younger than I am, but I did not think so. I am forty-four, and I heard you tell father you were forty-nine, so you see there is very little difference. I promised mother when she died, ten years ago, that as long as father lived I would take care of him, so if you took me you would have to take father too, and not many men would want an old maid for a wife, and her old father besides. You are also mistaken about my having had suitors. I have never had one in my life; you are the only man who has ever cared enough for me to ask me to marry him, so I know nothing about love affairs, but I do know that your letter has made me very happy, and that if it should be the will of Providence, I will try to make you a good wife. But I would like you to consider all the obstacles, and do nothing that you might regret one of these days.

PENELOPE HARDY.

"Whew!" whistled the doctor, sitting upright in his chair. "Here's a duce of a mess! I asked Penelope, Jr., and Penelope, Sr., has accepted me!"

I would not like to say how many pipes the doctor smoked that night, or how many times that letter was read. Enough that quite early next morning a small boy brought a note to Miss Penelope containing these words:

The obstacles are not insurmountable. I shall call to see you this afternoon. J. S.

This note threw Miss Penelope into a state of nervousness very trying to Penelope, Jr., though it must be confessed that energetic young person did a great deal in a short time—certainly Penelope Hardy, with her hair rolled loosely at the nape of her neck, instead of in a tight knot on the top of her head, with a soft bow of pretty blue fastening the simple linen collar, and relieving the severely made black dress, with a pink flush, (born of intense excitement) on her cheeks, and a new light in her timid eyes, was a much pleasanter person to look at than the Penelope who had sat by the hearth and darned.

Penelope, Jr., opened the door for him. "I am very glad," she whispered, heartily pressing his hand in her eager, girlish fashion, "I always thought you would suit each other." And before he could find words to respond (that last remark being rather hard upon him, considering the circumstances) led him quickly to the parlor, and shutting the door softly, went away.

"Behold your Ulysses!" he said, with a forced gayety, very foreign to his usual self-possessed manner. But as he saw the small shrinking figure, the thin face flushed, the hands roughened and stained with many years of willing labor for others, twisting each other nervously, and thought of the constant self-sacrifice and repression she had endured so long and so patiently, a great wave of pity, very nigh akin to love, swept over his heart, and he put out both hands with a protecting gesture to meet hers, saying earnestly: "Let us cast our lots together, Penelope, and try to be good to one another."

This all happened some time ago, and one would scarcely recognize the staid, prim, Miss Penelope in the sweet-faced, placid little lady who rules Dr. Sherburne's house.

Travelling Incognito.

When sovereigns pay private visits to other States they are said to travel incognito [so as not to be known]. They do this in order to avoid the pompous receptions and the firing of guns, to which they would have to submit, if they journeyed under their proper titles. Chambers's Journal says: When Queen Victoria goes to the continent, she is called Duchess of Lancaster, and foreign dignitaries who approach her are expected not to address her as Your Majesty.

This rule of etiquette is not always observed; but those who think that they are doing honor to the Queen by transgressing it are quite mistaken; for to ignore a soverign's incognito is to be guilty of a piece of rudeness which would be promptly resented if committed by any person who was supposed to be in a position to know better.

It makes an enormous difference to equerries, ladies-in-waiting, and maids of honor, whether they are travelling with a duchess or a queen.

A queen must not be spoken to unless she first speaks, and persons ought not to speak to one another in her presence. Nobody can sit down in a room where the queen is without being requested to do so; in the open air men must remain bareheaded when addressed by her majesty, and must not come nearer than three paces to her person.

All these rules are relaxed when the queen travels in some less than august capacity, and then the ladies and gentlemen of her escort behave in her presence as they would in that of any other lady.

The man who would be perfect in the knowledge of court ways has a great deal to learn about the times and circumstances when he may or may not do this and that.

There are 16,000,000 school children in the United States, 10,000,000 of whom are enrolled in the public schools.

WASN'T IT FUNNY?

Slender and shining, prophetic bone,
We pulled it the future to divine;
Her bare pink palm, the bit in my own,
Told that wish and wish-bone both were mine.

"What did you ask for?" whispered my Rose,
Looking up shyly with eyes so true.
"I wished," I answered, drawing her close,
"The woman I win might look like you.

"Her eyes as brown as a forest brook,
Her cheeks as pink as a sea shell's tint,
A tender mouth and a saucy look,
And pale brown hair with a golden glint.

"In short, that my future wife might be
You, dear little Rose, and only you."
Hiding her face in my breast, said she,
"Isn't it funny?—I wished that, too."

—RUTH HALL.

MISS OLNEY'S VALENTINE.

"A beautiful morning," Miss Olney thought, as she carried her bird cage to the window, and threw open the shutters to let in the full flood of light. Across the way a fresh young voice was singing. Little Miss Olney paused to listen, and a dreamy smile curved her lips, and as she tended her flowers, pausing now and then to inhale their fragrance, a sigh escaped her lips. Old memories were stirring her heart as she went about her work to-day, for this sunshiny 14th day of February seemed so like another in the long ago.

Long? Yes, the time was long counted by years; and yet, as memory went back, it seemed but as yesterday. She was only sixteen then—"sweet sixteen" Jack Brown called her—and they often called her a "little flirt" in those days. "Did she deserve the name?" she wondered; and then she fell to criticising her own conduct and thinking over those old days. Ah, memory was "bitter sweet," as it often is, and as she thought of her conduct to Jack on that never-to-be-forgotten night, a sort of self-pity stirred her heart—pity for the young self that was no more. No, it was not the same "Lida" that, loving Jack with all her heart, was yet bound to torment and tease, just to show her power over him and see how well he loved her. She had never meant to jilt him—never—and when on that night, at the valentine party, she had allowed Alfy Brimmer to take her home, leaving Jack, who had escorted her there, to find out at his leisure that she was gone, and she fully expected he would come over the next day and make it all up. To he sure, she expected to be very penitent, and of course it was real mean, but then he ought to know it was just a joke.

But Jack did not come the next day, nor the next day after that. And then she heard that he had gone away. Gone away without seeing her! It was dreadful; but, alas it was true, and Lida Olney actually cried herself sick. Then she resolved she would learn his address and would write to him; but before she could carry her plans into execution a terrible shock came to her. Jack was married! And, following close upon the news, Jack sent her a letter telling her of the fact she had already heard, and inclosing her letters, requesting her to send back his own.

Grieving was useless, but Miss Olney could not help grieving, and as she sent back his letters and all the dear little souvenirs of their broken compact she felt as if life was hardly worth the having.

But though her own folly and Jack's rash haste had marred the lives of both, Miss Olney grew into a nobler, better woman for the sorrow she had endured. Doing "with all her might" every duty her hands found to do, living a life of quiet usefulness, she found herself at thirty if not positively happy, at least content. An old maid they called her now, but little she cared as she went her quiet way. She lived in rented rooms, where she had lived now for years, for the spirit of change did not often visit the quiet little village of Loraine, and the quiet old couple who owned and occupied part of the dwelling were her dearest friends. The modest sign over her door proclaimed her a dressmaker, but it was hardly needed, for every one miles around knew "little Miss Olney" well.

To day her landlord and his wife were away, and her assistants off on their holiday. She, too, was keeping holiday all alone, sitting with idle hands for this one day, and letting memory bring the "face of her Douglas, tender and true." "Poor Jack!" Only dust and ashes now; and yet he never seemed dead to her. How the tears would steal down as she thought of his blighted life; his early death. Ah, if she only knew how he died, this "young hero of ours." He had proposed to and married his wife all in one day—married in mad haste and "repented at leisure," though no human soul ever heard from his manly lips either complaint or regret. He bore the consequences of his mad folly with a heroism which was part of his nature. Mattie Barnes the the girl he married, had literally "jumped at the chance" when he offered marriage, and consented without much hesitation to an immediate marriage. Not because she loved him—oh, no; that never entered into her calculations. Their acquaintance was slight, but she was sure he could give her a home, and she was a dependent on relatives, and twenty-five years old. She had been taught to believe that to be an "old maid" was the worst and last disgrace a woman could endure. She was not very attractive, and Jack was not hindered in his plan of punishing Lida. Alas! though the punishment was hard for her, yet Jack's punishment was tenfold the harder to bear. A marriage without love, even without esteem, and he had brought it on himself. Mrs. Brown was not disposed to make the burden any lighter, and her constant repining because some of their neighbors had things so much "nicer" than they could afford added the last drop to his cup of misery. The breaking out of the civil war brought to him a gleam of hope. Naturally patriotic, he was among the first to enlist. For two years he served his country well, and in a regiment known for its bravery he stood among the first. So far he had escaped with slight wounds; but he was not always thus to escape—he was wounded and taken prisoner. Then after long dreary months, ah! such months to the prisoners at Andersonville and Libby, such months of anguish to the loving hearts at home, he was reported "dead." Dead, and then the wail of an unbroken silence. Lida mourned with a bitterness of anguish that found no relief save in hard work and caring for other stricken hearts. Alas! there were plenty to care for in those sad days. Mrs. Brown mourned loudly and wore the deepest mourning—for six months. Then she was married again—widowhood was so "lonely." But her last choice was a very bad one. Whether she had married him for fancied love, or what had influenced her, no one could tell; but he, the new husband, was a drunkard, and, after some years of misery, the woman who was Jack Brown's wife was laid to rest—and few mourned for her.

That was all of the past that Miss Olney received to-day, as she sat in her lonely room; but oh, how it filled her heart till her eyes overflowed in tears. The day that had been so bright in the morning grew overcast as the afternoon wore on, and ere night snow and sleet filled the air. Miss Olney lighted her lamp, but she did not close the shutters. Better let her light shine out, she thought; it might cheer some lonely passer-by, and guide them on their way.

So she set out her supper with "snowy damask," and dainty china, and the silver that had been in the family for more than a generation. It was her choicest treasure, her only inherited wealth, and as she laid the solid knife and fork beside her plate and placed the other pieces to her satisfaction, she stood back to note the effect, as she often did, and then she sighed to think no one was with her to sympathize with her in any of her feelings.

Just then she was rather startled by a heavy rap at the door. "Only some neighbor," she thought as she stepped to admit the applicant.

The wind blew in with its attendant sleet and snow, and the stranger at the threshold stepped in with it, neither waiting for an invitation. A gentleman by his dress, but Miss Olney, though not given to fear, felt a sudden chill as she saw that he was a stranger. He might be a robber despite his gentlemanly guise—and her silver, her precious silver. How imprudent to set it out before her unshuttered windows.

The stranger did not wait for her to speak; he was shaking as if with an ague chill.

"Excuse me, madam," he said, in a voice tremulous and hoarse, "I believe I am chilled through. If you'll allow me—"

But before the words were fairly spoken Miss Olney had drawn her own easy chair to the fire, and the stranger had dropped into it, evidently exhausted. Lida forgot her fears in compassion for the stranger, and when his trembling fingers tried in vain to unloosen his muffler, she offered her assistance in tones she found trembled, too.

The next moment she fairly blushed at her act, as the face, clear of its wrappings, looked up at her. The pale face with the mustache and hair tinged with gray, and the eyes! He looked but said no word; his lips worked as if he fain would speak, but no sound came. Only the tears welled up and fell over the pallid cheek. Lida stood mute, transfixed by that look. "What does it mean!" she said at last, in an awe-struck whisper.

Then the stranger stretched forth his hand. He had no strength for further jesture, his agitation was so extreme.

"Lida," he whispered, "Lida, don't you know me? Don't you know Jack?"

Was the world receding from her? Had the grave given up its dead? She felt no fear even in that first moment. Spirit or mortal, it was Jack. But for a few moments her senses seemed to fail her, and then with a whisper "Jack" she clasped him close—only for a moment though, for she must look at him.

"Is it really you, Jack?" she said at last. "Are you sure its you?"

"Yes, quite sure," he answered with a laugh that if he had been a woman, would have been hysterical.

"But I thought you were dead, Jack."

"And were you sorry?"

Such a look as she gave him. "How can you ask? But tell me how it was."

And then he told her of the long oblivion, from which he woke to find himself reported as dead. The terrible prison life had driven him mad. He was taken and cared for by good Samaritans for three long years, and then when he was himself again, he found that every one supposed him dead. "And," he said, "knowing my wife had remarried and my other friends given me up, I thought it best not to break the silence. But hearing, long ago, that she was dead, I could no longer resist the longing to find out if I was entirely forgotten. I arrived here but a little while ago, and found on inquiry that your were still Miss Olney, and lived alone, or at least had an establishment of your own."

"Ah, Jack, do you know what day it is? You are my 'valentine' sir."

Audacious, wasn't it for little Miss Olney to so forget the proprieties? The old people in the other part of the house came home, but whether it was hours or minutes after Jack came neither of the "young" people could have told.

And so the wonderful news of Jack's return became an old story in Lorraine, and Mrs. Brown, once little Miss Olney, tells her children the story of her "valentine."

Gold in Nova Scotia.

Novia Scotia is not generally regarded as a gold producing country, yet since the discovery of gold in 1860, it is said, its mines have produced over $8,000,000 worth of bullion. The mines are leased for twenty-one years with privilege of renewal, on royalty of two per cent. on the gross yield. Strict account is kept by the mines office with every mine in operation and every person holding a prospecting license. And from these records it appears that since 1860 for every day's work expended in gold fields, both for mining and prospecting, an amount of bullion has been produced equal to $2 50 per day per man, counting wages at an average of $1 80 per day. The gold is a very fine quality, being worth on an average over $19 85 per ounce, and frequently $20. The auriferous rock is free milling and yeilds from $5 to $300 per ton. Materials for working the mines are very cheap. Wood avarages $1 75 per cord, lumber $8 per thousand, and coal $2 50 per ton. Timber is the same price as wood.

A Londoner made a bet that he would invent a question to which fifty people would give the same answer. He won the bet. The question was: "Have you heard that Smith committed suicide?" and the answer in every case was "What Smith?"

HOUSE AND FARM NOTES.

Household Scraps.

Dryness of air in a stove-heated room may be obviated by keeping water upon the stove.

Watering ivies with a weak solution of lime water, now and then, tends to promote vigor.

Cut away the stems of chrysanthemums when the flowers have faded and transport the pots to the cellar.

Plants will require less frequent bathing if they are covered with a light cloth before sweeping the room in which they are placed.

A solution of hen manure, in the proportion of a pint of the droppings to three pints of water, is very stimulating to house plants. Apply the liquid dressing once in ten days.

The best time for showering plants is in the morning before the sun shines on them. If other ways of sprinkling have not proved satisfactory, try dipping a brush-broom in water and shaking it over the plants.

Dust and marks of children's fingers can be removed from windows by rubbing them with a sponge which has been dipped in ammonia and water. To remove finger-marks from and restore lustre to the keys of a piano, wash off with a chamois skin wet with cold water; then rub the surface with sweet oil, mixed with half its quantity of turpentine.

When oiled walnut furniture begins to grow dingy, it can be made to look as fresh as new by re-oiling. Linseed or even olive oil can be used, but pure, good kerosene oil is much the best. Rub in well with a soft woolen rag, and polish with clean, dry flannel.

Feet that perspire, and emit a bad odor should be often washed—perhaps every night. After they have been washed, a two per cent. solution of carbolic acid should be applied. In such cases the stockings should be changed daily. Boots should be worn with inner soles. These can be taken out daily and dipped in a two per cent. solution of carbolic acid, and then dry before being used again. The bad odor is due to microscopic organisms. The acid kills them.

Persons who are troubled with chapped feet should soak them before retiring, in water as hot as can be borne, using ammonia or soap freely. Then having dried them with much friction, rub them with glycerine mixed with an equal quantity of carbolic acid, the latter two per cent. strong. The next night, and for a few nights if necessary, rub them again with glycerine, or with melted mutton or beef tallow. This process repeated from time to time will keep most feet soft and healthy.

The action of steam in cleaning clothes is to increase the solvent power of soap, water and other cleansing agents used. So far as we are able to judge, steam alone does not rot the clothes. This rotting is done by caustic potash, or soda, which makes the clothes white, but injures and finally destroys their fibre. The interest of the unconscientious laundryman is to get the clothes clean and white, even while doing so he destroyes their texture with chemicals.

I saw a woman some years since 60 years of age, with golden brown hair so abundant and beautiful that she was accused of wearing a wig; and she told me that she had used, after a severe attack of fever, in order to retain her hair, a preparation of alcohol, caster oil and sulphur, combined in such proportions that it was of the consistency of milk. She bathed the scalp with this mixture thoroughly three or four times a week for a long time. She thought it prevented her hair from turning gray and made it what it was—the admiration of all who saw her. And it had no deleterious influence upon her general health. I have also known others to use a like preparation for the sole purpose of keeping back the silver hue that age will bring.

Many a woman feels disturbed and hurt of the frequent exhibitions of selfishness manifested by husband and sons in the home and in the family relations. She may never give any vent to her feeling in words or by impatient act or look, but she is conscious that an injustice is done to her by the male members of her family. In their daily going and coming out of and into the house, things are carelessly thrown and left for her to restore to their proper places. Her comfort and convenience are often ignored in the most heedless manner, and if she does ever venture a protest, be it as mild as may be, she is immediately snubbed, and, in time, submits for peace-sake.

Agricultural Condensations.

Add "plenty of water, daily" to the directions for growing tender, crisp, early radishes in sand with manure and glass shelter as Croppie advises, and there is no surer or quicker way of drawing enjoyment from a bit of garden. Nothing can be better to excite interest in gardening operations, and to make home seem the best place on earth to a child who begins to look away from it, than to occupy him or her with this quick, pleasant, easy way of contributing to the home resources and delights.

An Iowa paper, The Waverly Republican, mentioned that not a mortgage of any kind has been filed in Bremer County during the last five or six months—"a sign of hard times, for the recorders." But the State, as a whole, sends out each year millions of interest money to non-residents. Which prompts the comment that "it will be a happy day when our debts are paid and enough live stock raised to consume all the grain."

As you value cows that don't kick, do not leave the milking of heifers with their first calves to careless hands. Usually the udders of heifer mothers are tender when full of milk, and the act of milking is painful, hence a great deal of gentleness and care must be exercised, or else kicking may be encouraged. With exercising patience and kindness at the first there will be no danger of this bad habit.

Professor Henry says: "I would urge that our farmers give more oats to young stock, colts as well as calves. There is no feed so easily attainable that will so well correct acidity of the stomach and keep the whole system in good order. To those who wish to raise calves on very little milk, I would say, use oats and oil meal freely, and by studying the wants of the calves you will be able to raise fine animals on a small allowance of milk."

We believe that the table of the average city man is better supplied with vegetables and fruits than that of the average farmer with his acres. No one is to blame for this but the farmer himself. He thinks he cannot afford to "putter away" his time in the garden, hence, this important department is neglected. This is a great mistake. There may be a profit in the garden on the farm as well as elsewhere.

When you go into the barn in the morning and see the cattle lying in a pool of their own filth, which forms icicles when they get up to eat, just think how you would feel in such a condition; and then set yourself to work again till all your stock have a dry place to lie in. This keeping cattle and colts covered with filth is a relic of barbarous laziness that is a disgrace to any farmer and costs more in feed then it saves in labor.

The Boston American Cultivator observes that "it must be gratifying to farmers to know that the future business of the country admittedly depends upon them. If crops move speedily after harvest and threshing, bankers and speculators are confident of rise in stock. The large crops at home and abroad render the idea prevalent that farmers must sell early. It is a matter of fact, however, that each year farmers are better able to hold crops for advance in prices. They are less dependent than formerly."

A common way of treating paint brushes when not in use is to stand them in water. This may be all well enough for a few days, but for any time longer it is bad treatment, causing the brush to be anything but soft and pliable. As soon as a job of painting is done, wash the brushes with use of hot water and soft soap, also using a little naphtha as needed. Then dry and wrap them in paper, and lay where you can put your hand on them when needed.

Timely Hints to Girls.

The girls who have poured over the pages of the little book "Don't," are now invited by an exchange to accept advice in regard to things that they should do.

Do be natural; a poor diamond is better than a good imitation.

Do try to be accurate, not only for your own sake, but for the sake of your sex; the incapacity of the female mind for accuracy is a standard argument against the equality of the sexes.

Do be exact in money matters; every debt you incur means loss to some one, probably to some one less able than yourself to bear it.

Do answer your letters soon after they are received, and do try to reply to them with some relation to their contents; a rambling, ill-considered letter is a satire upon your education.

Do, when you talk, keep your hands still.

Do observe; the faculty of observation well cultivated makes practical men and women.

Do attach as much importance to your mind as to your body.

Do try to remember where you put your gloves and card case; keep the former mended and the latter filled.

Do recollect that your health is more important than your amusement; you can live without one, but you will die early without the other.

Do try to be sensible; it is not a particular sign of superiority to talk like a fool.

Do put your hairpins in so that they will stay; it looks slovenly to, say the least, to see them half dropping out.

Do be ready in time for church; if you do not respect yourself sufficiently to be punctual, respect the feelings of other people.

Do get up in time for breakfast.

Do avoid causes of irritation in your family circle; do reflect that home is the place in which to be agreeable.

Do be reticent; the world at large has no interest in your private affairs.

Do cultivate the habit of listening to others; it will make you an invaluable member of society, to say nothing of the advantage it will be to you when you marry; every man likes to talk about himself; a good listener makes a delightful wife.

Do be contented; "martyrs" are detestable; a cheeful, happy spirit is infectious; you can carry it about with you like a sunny atmosphere.

Do avoid whispering; it is as bad as giggling; both are to be condemned; there is no excuse for either one of them; if you have anything to say, say it; if you have not, hold your tongue altogether; silence is golden.

Do be truthful; do avoid exaggeration; if you mean a mile say a mile, not a mile and a half; if you mean one say one, and not a dozen.

Revival of the Hoopskirt.

"Hoopskirts are certainly getting more popular every year," said a manfacturer to a reporter for the New York Mail and Express, "and in the course of a few years I firmly believe that we shall have the crinoline popular again."

"What do you attribute their increased popularity to."

"For sometime the Parisian fashion papers have been speaking in high terms of their use, and the modistes have advocated their use very largely. They are much preferable to the bustle. Manufacturers of the steel hoop have now perfected that article, and it is now made as pliable as a fabric. The new hoop is very different from the old crinoline. Twenty years ago they used to be made 90 to 100 inches in circumference, and we used to laugh at any as small as 90 inches: now they are made 54 and 56 inches in circumference. I expect in the course of a year or so to have them very popular. A lady who wears a hoopskirt of say 64 inches in circumference can make a much better display of her dress than without it. The style of wearing these handsomely embroidered fronts to dresses can be much improved on by the use of the skirts, the front being held more in position and not hanging carelessly."

Wheat for Hay.

Cereal production is thought by a correspondent of the London Post to be "a doomed industry" in Great Britian—on account of competition with other countries—and he suggests wheat hay for stock feeding as substitute, cutting and curing the crop "when yet green, before the ear has shown any symptoms of ripening." This would not exhaust the land like maturing of seed, it makes excellent fodder, "worth in England $35 to $40 the ton," and so consumed the manure would return to the soil nearly all the nutritive elements that had been taken from it. He adds: "In Australia, owing to the recent drouth, I have turned all my wheat crops into hay, and have realized more than $10 per acre over wheat in grain had I allowed them to ripen. The price there is $20 a ton, without delivery. I hear of one firm of sheep growers feeding 40,000 sheep on it, and consuming 120 tons weekly. They have had all I could spare, which was a large quantity."

Horses to Be Watered Before Fed.

From the London Field.

Bearing in mind that the stomach of a horse is small in proportion to the size of his frame, he requires feeding often, and though three times a day is sufficient, four times is better. Unlike human beings, horses should drink before they eat, because, owing to the conformation of the horse, water does not remain in the stomach, but passes through it into a large intestine called the cæcum. If the horse be fed first, the water passing through the stomach would be likely to carry with it particles of the food, and thus bring about colic. Whatever a groom may say, let a horse drink just as much as he likes. If he be watered four times a day he will never take very much or too much to be good for him. A horse, it must be remembered is fed on dry food, and this, with the strong work done by a hunter, always produces a feverishness, which a sufficiency of water tends to allay.

Successful Butter Making.

Mrs. Lucy McClary, Galesburg, Mich., who received $15 from the State Agricultural Society for "Best Butter," 25lb., made in June, was not, as appears from the local Farmer, indebted to any of the supposed modern improvements in dairying, nor even to Jersey blood. The cows are common Shorthorn grades, pastured on clover and timothy, and having free access to pure water:

"The cream was set in pans, skimmed as soon as the milk was thick, and churned every other day in a rectangular churn. The milk was drawn off when the butter was gathered, and the butter washed, in the churn, with sweet skimmilk. The butter was then taken into the tray and salted at the rate of two ounces per pound. It was then allowed to stand twelve hours, then the milk and brine were thoroughly worked out and the butter packed in a crock and tightly covered."

Hedge Plants for the Cold North.

The best wind-break in our cold climate is an evergreen one. This gives protection when most needed, which deciduous trees do not. Buckthorn is hardy, but not sufficiently vigorous. Spruce, especially the White Spruce (Picea alba) makes an excellent hedge, and, grows fast. So does hemlock, but hemlock in an exposed place will winter kill at temperatures lower than 20 degrees below zero. In some places Arbor-vitæ is winter-killed, but not by cold as much as by damp winds. This killing is most common near the sea. In Northern Vermont Arbor-vitæ seems never to be injured, and it grows very rapidly, even in a dry, poor soil. If, when a young orchard is set, the rows are run north-east and south-west, or nearly in these directions, and an Arbor-vitæ hedge is set between every three rows, the trees will be well protected from the wind. The Arbor-vitæ does not seem to injure the soil perceptibly for the fruit trees. I have seen orchards where the hedges had become 30 feet high, and so wide at the bottom that the nearst row of fruit trees (apples and pears) seemed to spring out from the edge of the hedge, yet the trees were large, thrifty, and productive, and the fruit very fine. I think it best to have no cross hedges, as they prevent a proper circulation of air, and experience has shown that they are quite unnecessary.

Ladies in the Gallery.

Ben: Perley Poore, in one of his interesting historical sketches, tells how ladies first came to attend the sessions of Congress and to hear the oratorical efforts of the members. At first, the notion that it was almost treasonable for a lady to enter the British Parliament Houses,—a notion long since obsolete in England,—was adopted in this country. But it was abandoned even while Washington was President.

Mr. Poore says that after the famous "Jay Treaty" had been ratified by the Senate and the president, in the face of intense popular opposition, the House came naar refusing to make an appropriation to carry into effect, and warm debates ensued. One night at a party, Mrs. Langdon, of New Hamshire, expressed her regret to Hon. Fisher Ames, of Massachusetts, that she could not hear the arguments, especially his speeches.

Mr. Ames replied that he knew no reason why ladies should not be permitted to hear the debates.

"Then," replied Mrs. Langdon, "if you will let me know when you next intend to speak, I will make up a party of ladies and we will go and hear you."

The notice was given, the ladies went, and since then Congressional orators have always had lady listeners.

Down on Connecticut Yankees.

Looking over some old libers in the Surrogate's office at New York a clerk recently came across the will of Lewis Morris, dated November 16, 1760. The will contained the following provisions: "It is my desire that my son, Gouverneur Morris, may have the best education that is to be had in England or America, but my express will and direction are that he be never sent for that purpose to the colony of Connecticut, lest he should imbibe in his youth the low craft and cunning so incident to the people of that country, which is so interwoven in their constitution that all their art cannot disguise it from the world, tho' many of them, under the sanctified garb of religion, have endeavored to impose themselves on the world for honest men." Gouverneur Morris accordingly was sent to King's (now Columbia) College, and not to Yale.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

Cleveland and Hendricks Inaugurated as President and Vice President of the United States.

The Assembled Thousands Greet the New Chief Magistrate With Thunders of Acclaim.

A Most Imposing Military and Civic Parade Follows the Inaugural Ceremonies.

The gentlemen named were inaugurated to-day as president and vice-president, respectively, of the United States of America. The installation of the first Democratic executive for twenty-four years was made the occasion of a demonstration of extraordinary magnitude, marked by a degree of enthusiasm not often witnessed. The event was celebrated by the booming of cannon, the waving of countless flags and banners, the music of 150 brass bands, varied by scream of fife, blast of bugle and roll of drum, and above all the uproarious shouts and cheers of the great multitude that literally packed the principal streets of the capital city.

Providence smiled graciously upon Grover Cleveland, if bright skies and a comfortable stage of the thermometer may be construed as an evidence of divine favor. The petitions for good weather appeared to have been answered, and everybody was happy. The chill of winter had not gone entirely from the air, but it was as warm as could have been expected or even hoped for a day early in March, and it was possible to sit or stand for hours without serious discomfort. The troops forming the first division or escort to the presidential party were under arms at a very early hour, and began arriving at the point of organization west of the White House, as early as 9 o'clock. The regular troops were the first there, and comprised a light battery and twelve foot batteries, eight of these being of the Second artillery and the others one each of the other artillery regiments from Fortress Monroe. It is a queer circumstance that by the orders of Maj. Gen. Hancock, who commands all the troops stationed east of the Mississippi, none of the captains of the five batteries stationed at the Fortress Monroe artillery school were allowed to come here with their commands, the batteries being commanded here to-day by lieutenants. The regular line was formed along the north side of the avenue beyond the White House, with the right resting on Seventeenth street by the Corcoran art gallery, and with the light battery of the Second artillery in Lafayette place, just in the rear. These troops were formed in two battalions, forming a brigade, under the command of Lieut. Col. Loomis L. Langdon, of the Second artillery, with the battalions commanded by Col. L. L. Livingston, Fourth artillery, and Maj. C. B. Throckmorton, of the Second. Those are familiar names to the readers of war history as old commanders of dashing light batteries in the field during the war. None of them can ride now as light as they did twenty odd years ago, when they used to take their guns into action with a swing at hard gallop; and Throckmorton (who is of the old Kentucky Throckmorton stock) rides now so heavily that it takes a seventeen hands high horse to carry him, and even then the horse was pitied to-day. The marines and others of the escort division were formed near by, so that when the time came and broke from the right and marched down in division front which extended almost across the broad avenue, they and the other troops following in and the procession moved as promptly and regularly as clockwork. There was no delay whatever in the movement of the procession, and at 10:30, the hour named, it extended down the broad space opposite the White House through Fifteenth street, past the treasury, and along Pennsylvania avenue as far as Willard's, where it halted for the presidential carriage to fall in. At the Arlington the Pomeroy house annex, where Mr. Cleveland was quartered, was alive at a very early hour, although the new ruler did not seem at all to hurry himself, but turned out and breakfasted with about the same deliberation that he probably did when he administered the affairs of the state of New York. His breakfast, at which were present Messrs. Vilas and Whitney and Col. Barrett, was finished just at 10 o'clock. Before this Daniel Manning was with Mr. Cleveland for a little time, and the quiet and ubiquitous Col. Lamont was in the lower passageway, aiding Sergeant Dinsmore in the struggle with the people who would insist in being where they were not needed nor wanted. Lamont and his family, as soon as

MR. CLEVELAND DROVE AWAY,

took a carriage and drove rapidly through by-streets to the capitol. Scarcely was the breakfast completed when the private carriage of President Arthur, drawn by the four handsome dark bay horses that all Washington knows so well, drew up in front of the private entrance to Mr. Cleveland's quarters, driven by "Albert," the coachman of Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur. At almost the same moment, Senators Sherman and Ransom appeared and were shown up stairs, and in less than five minutes they reappeared, escorting the president-elect and entering the carriage, Cleveland and Sherman taking the rear seats and Senator Ransom the front. A dense crowd, numbering at least 5,000, filled the street in front clear across to the park railing and around in East Lafayette place, and as soon as the chief magistrate appeared and was recognized a ringing, hearty cheer went up that gave the signal to the troops and multitude a square away. The carriage was driven rapidly to the White House, where President Arthur received the party in the blue parlor, and as soon as the troops began to move the party returned to the carriage, Arthur and Cleveland taking the rear and Senators Sherman and Ransom the front seat. In the meantime Senator Hawley had escorted Vice President Hendricks from his quarters at Willard's to the White House in a carriage drawn by four white horses, the leading team being a beautiful pair of Arabs, owned by the livery stable man who furnished the teams. At the White House the spare seat in the Hendricks carriage was filled by ex-Senator Barnum and Senator Gorman, and the carriage followed that of Arthur out through the west drive to the avenue, where it took position in which promptly moved forward at 10:45 a. m. Mr. Arthur has not been noted for being on time on great occasions, but to-day the most exacting pedagogue that ever birched a boy for tardiness could have found no fault with him. As I have said above, the column after pulling out rested at Willard's. Then Maj. Gen. Ayres was leading with his staff and looking so young a horseman that it seemed almost impossible that more than twenty years had passed since he commanded one of the divisions of the old Sixth corps under Sedgwick and Wright. His aides looked like young men, but most of them, too, were veterans of the war. Ahead fully thirty yards rode a platoon of mounted policemen, under the immediate command of Gen. William M. Dye, the chief of police here, who was given his present position because he is a West Pointer. This little squad, despite the fussiness of Gen. Dye, succeeded in clearing the avenue of the masses that overflowed from the footways, and by diligent effort the numerous specials and the occasional regular policeman along the route kept the broad avenue more clear of people than I have ever seen it before on great occasions, except at the carnival held here on Washington's birthday in 1871, to celebrate the laying of the first pavement along the avenue. But then Gov. Shepherd managed the affair, and when he decided on a thing it became an accomplished fact. The column proper was led by the most excellent band of the Second artillery, but just behind the First battalion came the artillery school band from Fortress Monroe, and that insisted on playing all the time, so that the effect of on account of the slight space that separated them. Just as one became enthusiastic with "Garry Owen," by the artillery band, the other distracted with the conspirators' chorus from "Madame Angot." This bother about the music at the head of the column had a distressing effect on a mettlesome horse ridden by a policeman. The horse evidently had a taste for the service, for he tried his best to keep step with the martial music, but while his fore feet were pacing sweetly to the quick strains of "Garry Owen," his hind legs were broken up by "Madame Angot" and tried hard to dance the merry measure. The effect, viewed from the rear where the writer marched along, was rather amusing. As the procession moved farther down the avenue the crowds were more dense and the mounted squad was forced to make repeated charges to drive people back to the curbline. A singular thing about these was that fully one-third were females, not the rough element, but ladies. As the column reached the navy monument at the foot of the capitol grounds considerable trouble was had. The roadway to the right was packed with human beings, who expected that the column would swing, as heretofore, to the left and pass around the north front of the capitol, but as room must be made to the right around the western base of the grand building, the police squad had a hard time.

THE PROCESSION,

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 4.—The president-elect was escorted immediately to the room of the vice president by the senate committee, where he remained until the arrival of the hour fixed for his appearance in the senate chamber to witness the induction of Mr. Hendricks. When the senate assembled this morning the chamber was in a state of preparation for the first part of the inauguration ceremonies. The line which divides the seats of the Republicans from the Democratic side of the chamber was obliterated, and the senators of both parties were crowded together on the eastern or Republican side of the hall. Chairs were arranged between the usual seats and in the aisles, and by thus crowding together senators were enabled to wind up the business of the session before the arrival of the several bodies who were assigned places on the floor. There was some curious grouping in the consolidated arrangement. On the front row and on the extreme right Lamar, Garland and Gorman were seated together, and during most of the time were engaged in what seemed to be an earnest conversation. On the extreme right of the same row sat Bayard, looking pleasanter than he ever before looked at the close of a session, and striving to assume an indifferent air, as though he were not nervously watching the passing of the few moments that would terminate a quarter of a century of Republican supremacy and of a Democratic president. Adjoining Bayard sat Colquitt and Vest, while slightly in front of him and between the two, on a chair placed for his temporary occupation, sat Butler of South Carolina, his face beaming with smiles at the sunburst whose brightness was already visible above the horizon. Pendleton sat on the right of the second row, with Payne on his left, prepared to assume the toga which was slipping from the shoulders of "Gentleman George." When Mr. Payne entered the chamber he paused for a moment and looked around, as if uncertain whether to advance. He was recognized by Mr. Pendleton, who beckoned to him. This was particularly noticed in view of the terribly bitter contest between the two men for the senatorship, and their meeting was watched with interest. Mr. Payne, in obedience to Pendleton's call, passed down the main aisle, cordially grasped the hand which Pendleton extended him, and took a chair by his side. Voorhees sat with Hale, Allison, and Frye, occasionally casting anxious glances toward the north door. Presently the clerk of the house entered and announced the passage of a bill to authorize the secretary of the treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to an Indiana bank for one that had been lost. This explained Voorhees' uneasiness. He asked the senate to pass the bill, and was gratified by having the request granted. On the left of the outer row sat "Honest John Patterson," at one time senator from South Carolina, and next to him was Chace, the Rhode Island Quaker, who did not seem to enjoy the rattle of small talk which Patterson was pouring into his right ear.

MR. EVARTS,

the new senator from New York, sat in the same vicinity, flanked by Lapham, whom Evarts succeeds, and Dr. Loring, the æsthetic commissioner of agriculture. Lapham and Loring are beyond the average man in stature and avoirdupois, while Evarts is below the average, and being sandwiched in between these two physically heavy weights Mr. Evarts appeared at a decided disadvantage. In mental weight and stature, however, the little man will perhaps outweigh the two individuals who overlapped him to-day. Cullom, Dawes and Manderson formed another group, and appeared to be enjoying the scenes that were rapidly transpiring. Spooner of Wisconsin sat with Angus Cameron, to whose seat he succeeds, and was evidently receiving a first lesson from the man whose place he to-day assumed. Morrill occupied his regular seat, and, as is his habit, looked grand, gloomy and peculiar; while Don Cameron, who sat in front of him, entertained Maxey and Platt with incidents of his recent trip to Florida. Meanwhile the galleries were rapidly filling with people in their holiday attire. Admission to the capitol was obtained only by tickets, but notwithstanding this arrangement furnished some guarantee that holders of the coveted pasteboards would have an opportunity to witness the ceremonies in the senate chamber, every seat was occupied before 11 o'clock except the spaces reserved for the diplomatic corps and the relatives of Mr. Cleveland. At 11 o'clock a message was read from the house announcing that the sundry civil bill had been agreed upon. Conger wanted to know what had been done about the public buildings paragraphs of the bill, which Mr. Allison explained, and Conger sat down apparently satisfied. A few minutes later announcement was made that another appropriation bill had been agreed upon. This was the last of the supply bills, and the legislative business was virtually ended with the agreement of the senate to the report of the conferrees. During the pause in the proceedings Col. Lamont appeared in the reserved gallery, escorting the

FAMILY OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT,

Rev. William Cleveland, the president's brother, and wife and two sons; Miss Cleveland and Mrs. Hoyt, sisters of the president; Mr. Hastings, nephew, and Miss Hastings and the Misses Nellie and Annie Yoeman, nieces of the president. In addition to these were Mr. and Mrs. Bacon of Toledo and Mrs. Lamont. Mrs. McElroy and Miss Nellie Arthur, Mrs. John Davis, and Miss Lucy Frelinghuysen occupied seats in the diplomatic gallery, which was filled for the first time in four years. At 11:30 o'clock Gen. Sheridan and Gen. Hancock entered by the north door on the Republican side of the chamber. The seats assigned these distinguished officers were located near the door by which they entered, and they were seated before the vast audience noted their presence. But when recognized the audience made up for the oversight by adding to the volume of applause with which the two great soldiers were welcomed. Gen. Terry entered soon after Sheridan and Hancock, and seated himself on Hancock's left. These three officers, and Surgeon General Murray were the only representatives of the army present in uniform; and the navy had a solitary but worthy representative in Rear Admiral Warden. Ten minutes later the diplomatic corps, gorgeous in gold lace and resplendent with glittering stars and jewels of various knightly orders, and headed by Senor Dominguesa, the minister from Portugal, entered by the main door and were escorted to the seats reserved for them. The buzz of excitement and hum of conversation occasioned by the entrance of these dazzling representatives of foreign governments had not ceased when the clerk of the house again made his appearance, and stepping down the main aisle until the front row of seats was reached, he announced that the house had passed without amendment the senate bill to place Grant on the retired list of the army. There followed one of the most ever witnessed in the senate chamber. The audience did not catch the title of the bill from the announcement of the clerk of the house, whose voice had become hoarse and husky from much reading during the past twenty-four hours. Ingalls rose and asked that the bill be read, which was done, and upon the conclusion of the reading the applause broke spontaneously from those in the galleries, as well as those on the floor. Grave senators, even, forgetting the rules of the senate, joined in the general acclamation. Mr. Edmunds rapped the desk, and looked horrified at senators who were giving open and disorderly manifestations of approval, and violently called for order. What was disorder in this instance, according to the senate rules, was sweet harmony to those who were making it, and again and again the applause rose from floor and galleries, and rebounded and echoed from the glass ceiling overhead, only to be again lifted up by the enthusiastic multitude. When order was at last restored, Mr. Ingalls again rose and asked unanimous consent that the reference of the bill to a committee be waived and that the senate proceed to its consideration. This is a blunder which Mr. Ingalls would not have committed at any other time and in reference to any other bill. In his exultation that congress had at last responded to the popular wish and performed an act of simple justice to the greatest of American soldiers, Mr. Ingalls overlooked the fact that the bill which had just been received from the house was a bill which had originated in and was passed by the senate. This fact being stated by President Edmunds, with the additional fact that no further action was necessary on the part of the senate, the chamber once more rang with cheers and applause. But the scene did not end with this legislative disposition of the bill. Having received the usual certification, the bill was presented to President Arthur, who was occupying his room in the senate wing of the capitol, and received his signature. This completed the act, but did not fulfill the purpose of congress.

GEN. GRANT DULY NOMINATED.

After the usual formal message informing the senate that he had approved the bill had been prepared, President Arthur wrote a message nominating U. S. Grant to be a general in the United States army on the retired list. This message, contrary to all precedent, was read aloud, and the people again signified their approval by generous applause. Then followed a request from President Edmunds that unanimous consent be given to consider the nomination without reference to a committee and in open session. The consent was given, and the nomination was confirmed unanimously. The applause which preceded this announcement, generous as it had been, was surpassed by that which followed, and will stand for many years to come as the most remarkable demonstration ever witnessed in the senate chamber. Ladies joined freely in the applause, which continued for several minutes. Handkerchiefs fluttered and scarfs were waved, and even Sheridan and Hancock, unmindful of the presence in which they sat, could not remain quiet amid the general rejoicing, and beat their knees with their regulation chapeaux. Thus was the old commander, in the presence of congress, representatives of foreign governments and thousands of American people, restored to the army to whose banners he gave many victories, and whose fame he has made as lasting as time. It was a graceful act on the part of congress, and President Arthur deserves special thanks from the American people for the manner in which he crowned the dying soldier with this last but greatest laurel from a grateful and admiring people. The several bodies admitted to the floor of the senate had places assigned them. In front of the semi-circle of seats, easy sofas and chairs, upholstered with maroon-colored morocco, were arranged. Two chairs were placed in front of the clerk's desk for the retiring and incoming presidents, and a row of similar chairs in front of the desks on the Democratic side were reserved for the members of which, headed by the chief justice in a handsome new satin gown, which at once attracted the attention and excited the admiration of the ladies, entered in advance of the diplomatic corps, the senators rising to receive them. On the left and in front of the senators were seated the members of President Arthur's cabinet, Secretary Lincoln sitting next Gen. Terry, and in the rear of the senators the assistant secretaries and other prominent department officials, with a sprinkling of senate officials and messengers. The diplomatic corps were given the two front rows of seats behind the supreme court, and grouped behind these were as many members of the house of representatives as could squeeze into that part of the chamber. Just before the members of the house entered, Payson of Illinois quietly and with a guilty look entered the chamber and selected an eligible seat, thus stealing a march on his brethren. He was soon followed by King of Louisiana and a few others who were more enterprising and thoughtful for themselves than the remainder of their associates. Before the members of the house made their appearance, Capt. Bassett, the venerable doorkeeper, boldly went toward the clock which is suspended over the main entrance, and which furnishes official time for the senate. As he was furnished with a common substantial chair and a rod about four feet long, it was known that his purpose was to turn back the hands of the clock and thus extend the life of the Forty-ninth congress and the presidential term of President Arthur for at least ten minutes. While the old doorkeeper reversed the minute hand from 11:50 to 11:40 a. m., President Edmunds turned his gaze in another direction, the senators looked direct to the front as if time were not being dallied with, and the galleries tittered and broke into a ripple of laughter. Capt. Bassett had just time to put away his chair and rod when the large door of the main entrance swung wide open and the tall form of John Sherman was seen standing on the portal. Behind him were President Arthur and Senator Ransom, Senator Sherman's colleague on the committee of arrangements. Bassett skipped nimbly toward the distinguished group, taking his accustomed place when performing this kind of service, and with his very best bow, announced in loud tones, "The president of the United States." Mr. Arthur thereupon stepped more fully into view, the senator rising; and the crowds in the galleries, with Arthur's last official act in their minds, half rose from their seats and gave him round after round of

THE SUPREME COURT,

HEARTY APPLAUSE.

The president stopped for a moment to bow his acknowledgments. Escorted by Senators Sherman and Ransom, the president walked down the main aisle and took the seat assigned him, facing the senators. A few minutes later and the big doors of the main entrance opened, and again Capt. Bassett skipped down the aisle to perform service for Grover Cleveland which he has performed for every president since the days of James K. Polk. "The president-elect of the United States," said Capt. Bassett, in even louder tones than he announced President Arthur, and the vast audience sprang to their feet and applauded continuously for several minutes, during which Mr. Cleveland stood as one dazed, while a slight flush showed that he was much moved by a demonstration which is given to few men in this or any other country. In a mechanical sort of manner, yet with a movement that betrayed deep emotion, Mr. Cleveland bowed to the members of the house, or rather he inclined his head in their direction, not knowing who they were who stood facing him. Then gracefully turning around, he bowed to the senators, after which acknowledgment, with Sherman and Ransom on his right and left, he moved down the aisle and seated himself beside President Arthur. The applause, however, which greeted Mr. Cleveland's entrance continued, and finally when he was seated a man in the west gallery called out, "Three cheers for Grover Cleveland," and they were given without fear of President Edmunds' gavel, which was playing a lively tattoo on his desk in the vain hope that such exercise would suppress the enthusiastic burst of feeling that has had no opportunity to explode in twenty-five years; but all things, even a Democratic jollification, must come to an end, and the applause and cheers subsided. Mr. Edmunds came near causing the tumult to break out afresh by cautioning the people against making demonstrations and threatening to clear the galleries if the applause should be repeated. Every one knew Mr. Edmunds would not have had time to clear out the people even if he had the physical power to do so, but the people were good-natured and did not again offend in this direction. They had unburdened themselves and were satisfied to permit the remainder of the programme of the senate to proceed in accord with the dignity and rules of that body.

HENDRICKS SWORN IN.

Everything now being in readiness Senator Hawley, the member of the committee of arrangements to whose keeping Mr. Hendricks had been assigned, appeared at the foot of the president's chair with the vice president-elect, where, without further ceremony, Mr. Edmunds administered the oath of office. It is the custom of the vice president to sign the oath which he takes upon assuming office, and this is done in a book made up of blank forms in which are the signatures of all who have been chosen to preside over the senate. The pen Mr. Edmunds handed the vice president would not operate, and Mr. Hendricks laid it down and took a second, which was presented. His hand trembled visibly as he wrote "Thomas A. Hendricks" on the page. This completed the ceremony of inauguration of the vice president and Mr. Edmunds delivered a short valedictory which he had previously prepared, and pronounced the senate adjourned without date. Immediately after this announcement Vice President Hendricks called the senate to order and caused the proclamation of President Arthur convening the senate in extra session to be read. The new senators were then called up and sworn, after which the senate adjourned until to-morrow noon.

THE CROWNING ACT.

CLEVELAND INAUGURATED.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 4.—The ceremonies in the senate being finished the passage to the east front of the capitol, for the inauguration of the new president, was next in order. The crowded press gallery was first emptied, the correspondents being permitted to pass to the platform in advance of the main column, to the seats assigned them. As the public galleries were opened the rush was something fearful, and literally choked the corridors. By dint of much industrious pushing, aided by a little judicious profanity, the newspaper men, numbering over 150, succeeded in getting through. In front of the capitol a large platform had been built for the occasion. It was tastefully draped with the national colors and was furnished with chairs for 2,000 persons. In front of this platform a most extraordinary scene greeted the eye. The assembled multitude of people was simply enormous in its proportions, covering acres of ground. Men and women, white and black, stood as closely packed as was possible for human beings—away out beyond the statue of Washington, in front and to the right and left, they reached far beyond the reach of any man's voice. Every window, balcony or other place on the front of the capitol that afforded a view was alive with people. It is not an exaggeration to say that were there to witness the event, stretching far out on the various streets and avenues, diverging from the capitol where the various divisions of the military and civic bodies formed in readiness to take their places in the grand parade which was to follow. The gaudy uniforms and the long lanes of bright bayonets glistening in the sunlight added in no small degree to the scene. Viewing it not as a partisan, but as a national occasion, it was impossible for any one to look upon it and not catch the inspiration of the occasion. After a wait of fifteen minutes a big policeman appeared at the bronze doors of the capitol and shouted: "Make way!" A passage way to the front of the platform was quickly opened, and the head of the stately procession appeared. As the president and president-elect came into view they were loudly applauded by the occupants of the platform. The great crowd immediately caught up the cheers, and as Mr. Cleveland advanced to the front a wild tornado of shouts and yells swept over the multitude. The illustrious man from Albany bowed gracefully in recognition of this generous reception, a broad smile being visible upon his face as he turned about. He sat down beside the president, and while waiting for the arrangements to be perfected, chatted pleasantly with Mr. Arthur and Chief Justice Waite. All things being ready, he arose and delivered his inaugural address. The volume of his voice is not proportionate to his physical dimensions, although his utterance was distinct as far as it reached. Not a tenth part of the vast assemblage heard a word, and during the delivery of the address the thousands whose curiosity to see the man had been gratified, streamed down the hill into Pennsylvania avenue to look for eligible positions from which to view the parade. The address was not long. In fact, its brevity was the feature that especially commended it to the crowd, for such a gathering has little taste, at such a time, for the subtleties of political economy. The impatient people were more than willing to take it for granted that he intended to do just what was right. Mr. Cleveland was neatly dressed in black, with his Prince Albert coat closely buttoned about him. He wore a standing collar which seemed almost to cut into the fat wrinkles of his neck. The effect of this collar was to excite sympathy for its wearer, for it seemed as if it must hurt him. In speaking he held his left hand close behind him, and emphasized his speech by gestures with his right hand. He spoke without manuscript, but occasionally consulted a small piece of paper bearing notes of the heads of his discourse.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Mr. Cleveland's address was as follows:

Fellow Citizens: In the presence of this vast assemblage of my countrymen I am about to support and seal, by the oath which I shall take, the manifestation of the will of a great and free people. In the exercise of their power and right of self-government they have committed to one of their fellow citizens a supreme and sacred trust, and he here consecrates himself to their service. This impressive ceremony adds little to the solemn sense of responsibility with which I contemplate the duty due all the people of this land. Nothing can relieve me from anxiety lest by any act of mine their interests may suffer, and nothing is needed to strengthen my resolution to engage every faculty and effort in the promotion of their welfare. Amid the din of party strife the people's choice was made, but its attendant circumstances demonstrated a new strength and safety of government by the people. In each succeeding year it more clearly appears that our democratic principle needs no apology, and that in its fearless and faithful application is to be found the surest guaranty of good government. But the best results in the operation of a government wherein every citizen has a share largely depend upon the proper limitation of purely partisan zeal and effort and a correct appreciation of the time when the heat of the partisan should be merged in the patriotism of the citizen. To-day the executive branch of the government is transferred to new keeping, but this is still a government of all the people, and it should be none the less an object of their affectionate solicitude. At this hour the animosities of political strife, the bitterness of partisan defeat and the exultation of party triumph should be supplanted by ungrudging acquiescence in the popular will, and sober, conscientious

CONCERN FOR THE GENERAL WEAL.

Moreover, if from this hour we cheerfully and honestly abandon all sectional prejudices and distrusts, and determine with manly confidence in one another to work out harmoniously the achievements of our national destiny, we shall deserve to realize all benefits which our happy form of government can bestow. On this auspicious occasion we may well renew the pledge of our devotion to the constitution which, launched by the founders of the republic, and consecrated by their prayers and patriotic devotion, has for almost a century borne the hopes and aspirations of this great people through prosperity and peace, and through the shock of foreign conflicts and the perils of domestic strife and vicissitudes. By the Father of his Country our constitution was commended for adoption as "the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concession." In that same spirit it should be administered in order to promote the lasting welfare of the country and to secure the full measure of its priceless benefits to us and to those who will succeed to the blessings of our national life. The large variety of diverse and competing interests subject to federal control, persistently seeking the recognition of their claims, need give us no fear that "the greatest good to the greatest number" will fail to be accomplished, if in the halls of national legislation that spirit of amity and mutual concession shall prevail in which the constitution had its birth. If this involves the surrender or postponement of private interests and the abandonment of local advantages, compensation will be in the assurance that thus the common interest is subserved and the general welfare advanced. In the discharge of my official duty I shall endeavor to be guided by a just and unstrained

CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONSTITUTION,

a careful observance of the distinction between the powers granted to the federal government and those reserved to the states or to the people, and by a cautious appreciation of those functions which by the constitution and laws have been especially assigned to the executive branch of the government. But he who takes the oath to-day to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States only assumes a solemn obligation which every patriotic citizen, on the farm, in the workshop, in the busy marts of trade, and everywhere, should share with him. The constitution which prescribes his oath, my countrymen, is yours; the government you have chosen him to administer for a time is yours; the suffrage which executes the will of freemen is yours; the laws and the entire scheme of our civil rule, from the town meeting to the state capitol and the national capitol, are yours. Your every voter, as surely as your chief magistrate, under the same high sanction, though in a different sphere, exercises a public trust. Nor is this all. Every citizen owes to the country a vigilant watch and close scrutiny of its public servants, and a fair and reasonable estimate of their fidelity and usefulness. Thus is the people's will impressed upon the whole framework of our civil policy—municipal, state and federal—and this is the price of our liberty, and the inspiration of our faith in the republic. It is the duty of those serving the people in public place to closely limit public expenditures to the actual needs of the government, economically administered, because this binds the right of government to exact tribute from the earnings of labor or property of citizens, and because public extravagance begets extravagance among the people. We should never be ashamed of the simplicity and prudential economies which are best suited to the operation of a republican form of government and most compatible with the mission of the American people. Those who are selected for a limited time to manage public affairs are still of the people, and may do much by their example to encourage, consistently with the dignity of their official functions, that plain way of life which, among their fellow citizens, adds integrity and promotes prosperity. The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the development of the resources of our vast territory dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that commended by the history, the traditions and the prosperity of our republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our knowledge of justice and our power. It is the policy of peace, suitable to our interests. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign powers' ambitions upon other continents, and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe and Washington and Jefferson—"Peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none." A due regard for the interests and prosperity of our people demands that our finances shall be established upon such a sound and sensible basis as shall secure the safety and confidence of business interests and make the wage of labor sure and steady, and that our system of revenue shall be so adjusted as to relieve the people from unnecessary taxation, having a due regard to the interest of capital invested and workingmen employed in American industries, and preventing the accumulation of a surplus in the treasury to tempt extravagance and waste. Care for the property of the nation and for the needs of future settlers requires that the public domain should be protected from corrupt schemes and unlawful occupation. The conscience of the people demands that the Indians within our boundaries shall be fairly and honestly treated as wards of the government, and their education and civilization promoted with a view to their ultimate citizenship, and that polygamy in the territories, destructive of the family relation, offensive to the moral sense of the civilized world, shall be repressed. The law should be rigidly enforced which prohibits the immigration of a servile class to compete with American labor with no intention of acquiring citizenship, and bringing with them the revolting habits and customs repugnant to our civilization. The people demand reform in the administration of the government and the application of business principles to public affairs; as a means to this end, civil service reform should be in good faith enforced. Our citizens have the right to protection from the incompetency of public employes who hold their places solely as the reward of partisan service and the debasing influence of those who promise and the vicious methods of those who expect such reward; and those who worthily seek public employment have sought to insist that shall be recognized instead of party subserviency or the surrender of honest political belief in the administration of a government pledged to equal and exact justice to all. There should be no pretext for anxiety touching the protection of the freedmen in their rights or their security in the enjoyment of their privileges under the constitution and its amendments. All discussion as to their fitness for the place accorded to them as American citizens is idle and unprofitable, except as it suggests the necessity for their improvement. The fact that they are citizens entitles them to all the rights due to the relation, and charges them with all its duties, obligations and responsibilities. These topics and the constant and ever varying wants of an active and enterprising population may well receive the attention and the patriotic endeavor of all who make and execute the law. Our duties are practical, and call for industrious application, an intelligent perception of the claims of public office, and above all, a firm determination, by united action, to secure to all the people of the land the full benefits of the best form of government ever vouchsafed to men. And let us not trust to human effort alone, but humbly acknowledge the power and goodness of Almighty God, who presides over the destiny of nations, and who has at all times been revered in our country's history. Let us invoke his aid and his blessing upon our labors.

PRESS COMMENTS.

CHICAGO.

Inter Ocean: President Cleveland's inaugural is a masterpiece of art in its avoidance of questions upon which the American people have at any time been at issue. It is difficult to find any sentiment which would not amount to an elaborate amplification of the proposition that it is better to do good things than to do bad things, and wiser to be wise than to be foolish, and more patriotic to love our country than not to love it, and more profitable to do things that ought to be done than things that ought not. One phrase in the document possesses marked individuality. This is that which recommends to all officials a "plain way of life" as calculated to aid integrity and promote thrift. Although the Mormons have given him the benefit of their votes; he returns them no comfort in the matter of polygamy. Altogether Cleveland's inaugural address is politic. He asserts nothing, defends nothing and criticizes nothing. The public will await, therefore, the announcement of his cabinet with the feeling that it will contain probably few surprises and no sensations.

Times: The speech of the new president upon the beginning of his reign is commendable for its brevity and admirable for the dignified tone and just tenor of its sentiments. The country is not only prepared to hear his views with satisfaction, but to accept them as a reasonable assurance that the march of opinion against the infamous patronage system is not to be obstructed, hindered or endangered by the change of the high officer who holds and is able to exercise, according to his will, the tremendous appointing power. The reign of Cleveland is not to be distinguished by any foreign policy of the gymnastic style of Blaine, and if an unsatisfactory policy should be pursued its fault is more likely to be on the side of the adherence to the "traditionary" policy of national isolation.

NEW YORK.

Sun: Mr. Cleveland's inaugural address is very properly confined to setting forth in a broad and philosophic way the general principles by which he proposes to be guided. It is very well written. There is nothing new or original or brilliant about it, but the passage relating to economical government and a plain mode of living will be welcomed with satisfaction by a great proportion of the people, and there is no doubt that the whole document expressed plainly and sincerely the ideas and purposes of the author.

Times: Mr. Cleveland's inaugural address is dignified, simple and forcible. It is clear that he enters upon the duties of his office with a deep sense of responsibility to the whole country, and the whole country will receive with grateful assent his deprecation of partisan spirit. It is a long time since the party, which was largely represented in the crowds at Washington, has been called on to listen to so much sound doctrine so clearly declared and evidently backed by so resolute and practical a will. It remains to be seen how that party will receive the application of the doctrine which is sure to follow.

Evening Post: The inaugural address is characterized by the brevity and compactness of most of President Cleveland's public utterances. He mars the general effect somewhat by what seems unnecessary encouragement to the anti-Chinese craze. The general impression left by the address will, we think, be one of the rough honesty of purpose applied to the earlier principles of the Democratic party.

Commercial-Advertiser: It is clear, direct and vigorous. It excludes no attempt to turn or glaze over any previous utterances which have evoked from some quarters expressions of discontent. The address is, on the whole, a cheering and satisfactory document, and we trust it will be received by men of all parties in a generous, respectful and patriotic spirit.

World: President Cleveland says what he has to say in plain language, unembellished by rhetorical flourishes, but terse and trenchant, leaving no doubt as to its meaning and impressing the reader with the conviction that it comes from the heart, earnest, unpretending, sincere and vigorous, the inaugural partakes of the character of the man.

NOTING THE DAY.

JOLLIFICATION IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, March 4.—Nearly all the flags were out here to-day, and there was a general recognition of the event at Washington. Some of the most ardent Democrats of the stock exchange blossomed with red roses on their coat lappels, and there was a real circus for about five minutes. The produce exchange put out their banner with a streamer precisely at noon, one was displayed from the assay office, but none from the custom house. The Democratic custom house brokers had a jollification in the rotunda of the custom house, beginning at noon and continuing until after 3 o'clock.

NOTES OF THE DAY.

The Democratic members of the New York stock and mining exchanges celebrated inauguration day with unexampled enthusiasm. Brokers at the custom house exploded bombs and cheered, and were mildly lectured by Collector Robertson for raising a disturbance. One broker, addressing the collector, said he hoped he would remain with them as collector of the port another four years, and this drew a volley of cheers from the crowd.

In the New York senate Ely made a motion that, in view of the honor conferred upon the state by the inauguration, as president, of their former governor, the legislature adjourn for the day. The motion started a hot political discussion on the relative merits of Cleveland and Blaine. Much wild talk was indulged in, after which the motion was carried.

The Democratic members of the Wisconsin legislature and local Democrats held a celebration at Madison last evening, when speeches glorifying over the inauguration of Cleveland were made. There was a moderate display of fireworks on the street and considerable noise from the booming of cannon.

The Democrats of Waterloo and Cedar Falls, Iowa, celebrated the day by firing salutes at noon. A banquet was held in the former city in the evening, which was largely attended. Prominent Democrats of that section, and the state at large were among the invited guests.

At Winona, yesterday, the Democrats displayed flags and fired salutes in honor of Cleveland's inauguration.

The buildings at Evansville, Ind., were decorated with flags. A salute of 100 guns was fired at noon.

A REPLY.

You ask too much; to tell you see
How great a joy 'twill be to me,
When next we meet;
For then, we hope, I shall be thine,
And all thy charms will then be mine
Alone, my sweet.

When to my heart thy heart is pressed,
When on thy loyal, lovely breast
My head is laid;
When quivering lips and eyes shall tell
What words can ne'er reveal so well—
Can love be weighed?

Think'st thou the number can be taken
Of all the leaves by breezes shaken?
Deep in the sea;
Its deepest place was never sounded;
Its farthest shore is still unbounded—
So I love thee!

A SEA SIDE ROMANCE.

"But how can I help feeling neglected and miserable, Ned? You scarcely look at me when Miss Lovel is near, and she is your preferred partner in all things, now. You walk with her, you sing with her, you drive with her, you dance with her, and it makes me very wretched."

"Now, Mollie, if you're going to be jealous!"

"I'm not jealous, Ned. If I thought you didn't care most for me; if I fancied you cared at all for any one else, I don't think I'd remonstrate with you at all. I would just take off this," touching the diamond on her hand, "and hand it back to you. I'm not jealous, but you are not very kind to me, Ned."

"My little pet, you do not see things as I see them. One owes something to society, especially when one is at the seaside. If you would only remember that I love you too well to find fault with anything you can do, and if you would become a little more of a society character yourself, I would be perfectly happy. Why, you scarcely take the least attention from any one but me and so many are willing to offer attentions to you. Now, dear, kiss me at once; I must be off; I am to drive on the beach with Miss Lovel; not jealous, my pet?"

"Not jealous, Ned; no;" and she turned from him, but without giving him the kiss he had asked for.

"She is jealous, though!" the young fellow thought, smiling as he watched the pretty, straight figure going away from the nook in which he had found her out to the stretch of sand, against which the waves were rolling, receding, leaving now a mass of seaweed on it, now returning and bearing it away—a very coquette of an ocean, now kind and now cold, and always fair in the sunlight.

Ned Tremaine hurried over the beach, whistling as he went; and he presently caught up with his affianced, who, in her pretty dress of cream and black, with the wide sun hat pushed a little back on her blonde head, was looking very beautiful and animated—and smiling in the face of Lee Stone, the most incorrigible male flirt at the beach.

"Where now, Tremaine?" the latter called out, as, with a nod, he pursued his way.

"For a drive on the beach; will see you later;" and Ned had gone by, resuming his whistle.

Mr. Stone smiled a little and spoke a few words to Mollie. She colored slightly, followed the tall form of her lover a moment with her eyes, then gave a gracious answer, and half an hour later, when Ned and Miss Lovel met the pretty light carriage on the beach, in which Lee Stone took his daily drive, they received a pleasant nod from pretty Mollie, who was his companion, and who looked as though she was thoroughly enjoying his society.

"She certainly lost no time in following my suggestion," Ned told himself, half in surprise; "and she has evidently found the society of Stone anything but boring."

"What a handsome couple they make," Miss Lovel said, with a certain gleam in her steady gray eyes. Ned colored suddenly, he didn't quite know why.

"Perhaps you didn't know that Miss Annes is my promised bride," he said, a trifle coldly.

"Oh, but so many engagements are broken in a summer at the seaside; one never minds that very much," the languid belle said, indifferently.

That night there was a hop at the hotel, and Ned had made up his mind while dressing to be a little more attentive to Mollie; but, to his surprise, he didn't find Mollie Annes shrinking under her mother's wing, as had been her custom. A number of her old friends had arrived while they were at dinner, and they were about her; beside, Lee Stone was quite pronounced in his attentions to her, and while she gave him (Ned) a smile from the distance he found it quite difficult to get near her; then a light tap on his arm informed him that Miss Lovel was asking him why he was so preoccupied, and, as Mollie and Stone went circling by, joining the waltzers, he followed them with Miss Lovel.

"A rather pronounced flirtation," Leo laughed, later, when he and Mollie stood on the hotel terrace, watching the moonlight on the sea and strand and one solitary couple pacing slowly along beside the waters. Both knew who they were, for a few moments before they had seen Ned Tremaine place that pale-pink scarf about the shoulders of Miss Laura Lovel as he led her across the terrace, to much engrossed in his task, it would seem, to notice Molly or her companion.

"Oh, everybody flirts more or less at a seaside hotel; one has nothing else to do, you know," Mollie answered Lee, with a light ripple of laughter, and he looked down on the pretty face to which the moonlight was so tender, his voice sinking to almost a whisper as he spoke to her.

"It is a cowardly pastime for a man," he said softly, "and for a woman it is a cruel one."

Again she laughed, while arranging the bracelet on her arm; a touch of mockery was in the rippling voice.

"And you—is it pleasant to know that you are cruel or cowardly?" she questioned. "One is tempted to become personal when such remarks come from one who is said to count his conquests with a cruel pride, and to whom the world gives no higher aim than to fascinate, and—remain careless. Am I too plain? Forgive me."

"I forgive you freely—as I would forgive you all things, Miss Annes; but neither you nor the world fully understands. I may seem a trifler; but, were the woman I love to love me in return, no smile would be to me so sweet as hers, no presence half so dear."

Mollie had been watching the couple on the sands, going slowly back and forth, back and forth in the moonlight; now she lifted her sweet young face and looked at him with a sort of wondering pity.

"Do we all wrong you, then?" she asked gently. "Have you failed in your wooing? Can you not win your love?"

His face flushed a little at her words, and she, watching it, was struck by its strength and beauty. How did it chance that she had never noticed it before?

"I am not left the chance to woo or win her," he said slowly; "she is another's promised wife."

"Ah," she said, pityingly, and she gave him her hand in sweet, womanly sympathy, never for an instant connecting his words with herself. He lifted the small hand reverently to his lips, and, drawing it through his arm, turned toward the beach. As he did so he found himself facing Ned Tremaine and Laura Lovel, who were coming in from the moonlight, and he noticed that the young man's face was quite white, while there was a half scornful smile on the lips of the fair belle of the seaside. But the two couples passed each other in silence, the one going down to the stretch of glittering sand, the other going in to the dancers.

A week later, and Mollie had just come in from a long hour, peaceful and calm, spent with Leo in a quiet nook among the rocks that overhung the ocean. He had been reading to her there some of the sweetest poems given to the world by genius. Her heart had thrilled as he read, and new, strange feelings had stirred it. When he closed the book he had looked up and found her eyes filled with tears. And now in her own room she was asking herself how it was that what she had but commenced for the purpose of annoying Ned had in one brief week slain all her old resentment against Miss Lovel, and made her thoughts turn constantly, not to Ned Tremaine, who was her affianced husband, but to Lee Stone, who was termed the greatest male flirt at the beach. What was changing in her life? When she now met Ned and Laura it did not pain her as it used to. Was it because a handsomer face, a stronger and nobler face than Ned's was constantly near, ready to turn to her with devotion, ready to light if she smiled?

A servant broke her ponderings by bringing her two messages—one a bouquet of white flowers, with a few feathery sprays of fern among their whiteness, and one crimson rose gleaming red from their center; and in it was a note from Lee, asking her to go for a drive with him by moonlight; the other was a few angry lines from Ned, asking if she remembered that she was betrothed to him while she allowed every gossip at the hotel to chatter of her flirtation with Lee Stone.

"I have been patient, waiting an opportunity of speaking to you," he wrote, "but you will not give me one, so I write to ask you if you wish our engagement broken, to all it would seem so."

She trembled a little as she read, and her sweet face changed color; but she went to her desk, drew from it every letter he had ever sent her, formed them and his ring in a package and wrote him the following note:

"It was I who was first taught patience, while my existence was forgotten for one who was what you bade me become—'a society character.' Why should I fancy that you wished an interview with me of late? It is not so long since you could not spare a moment for me from Miss Lovel. Do I wish our engagement broken? Perhaps we both wish it, Ned; at least let us break it, since I so displease you. I send you your letters and ring."

Then although a choking sensation was in her throat, she penned a brief note to Leo:

"I will be pleased to go with you;" that was all; and in the starlight—the moon rose late—she went with him out over the beach and far along the country.

Was it strange that he noticed she no longer wore Ned's ring? Was it strange that he told her of his love, and that she listened silently, believing with a strange flutter at her heart? Was it strange that when they drove back, lingering beside the sobbing ocean, another ring should deck her finger and another bond should lie upon her life? Well, two others walked upon the strand, two whom the gossips called lovers; and yet when it was told that Mollie Annes was to place her happiness in the keeping of "the flirt of the beach," one man who heard it turned white as death and shrank from the sight of the beautiful woman beside him, although men called her fair, and many said that she had won him from his faith; yet Mollie was too happy to regret, although she still sometimes remembers.

Love's Young Dream.

From the Philadelphia Call.

George—Ah, my dear boy, so glad to see you. You remember the last time we met you were thinking of buying a gilded cage for your pretty bird.

Algernon—I've not been after any bird cages. You must not get things mixed.

"Oh, no, only speaking in metaphor, my dear boy. I mean that you had your eye on a lovely little house which you expected to buy for your home after your marriage with that dear girl, Miss De Rich. What a charming wife you will have."

"Oh! Ah! yes, yes, I understand now."

"You secured the house, I suppose?"

"I got the refusal of it."

"And Miss De Rich; she accepted you, of course?"

"Well, I got the refusal of her, too—flat refusal, bajove."

The favorable report of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Representative Poland's bill, which has passed the House, for the relief of the Supreme Court, holds out hope of some slight improvement in the affairs of our highest judicial tribunal. The bill provides that appeals from the Supreme Courts of the territories and of the District of Columbia shall be allowed only in cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $5,000, unless the validity of a patent, copyright, statute or treaty is involved. Too great license is allowed in appeals to the highest court, and even the slight restriction provided by this measure will produce a perceptible effect.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

Proceedings of the Extra Session.

At the meeting of the senate on Thursday the 5th, in extra session, the galleries applauded Vice President Hendricks, which manifestation its recipient abruptly terminated with the gavel. The senators arose at this summons, and Dr. Butler offered prayer. Upon its conclusion the vice president took the chair, and was again greeted with plaudits by occupants of the gallery. He called the senate to order, and, in a voice only audible to the clerks, called for the reading of the journal. President Cleveland sent to the senate the names of the gentleman he has selected as cabinet officers. They are as follows:

Secretary of State—Thomas F. Bayard of Delaware.

Secretary of the Treasury—Daniel Manning of New York.

Secretary of War—William C. Endicott of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the Navy—William C. Whitney of New York.

Secretary of the Interior—L. Q. C. Lamar of Mississippi.

Postmaster General—William F. Vilas of Wisconsin.

Attorney General—A. H. Garland of Arkansas.

Immediately on receiving the nominations, on motion of Mr. Sherman, the senate went into executive session, which continued only for a few minutes. It was supposed that the senate, in accordance with general practice, had promptly confirmed the nominations, and the fact that none of them were confirmed excited great surprise.

It was learned that confirmation failed because of the single objection presented by Senator Riddleberger of Virginia. As the rules require that all nominations shall first be referred to the proper committees, the reference can be waived only by unanimous consent, and hence Mr. Riddleberger's objection prevented immediate action as it did in the case of the nomination of Secretary McCulloch a few months ago.

After reading the journal Mr. Van Wyck was recognized and offered the following resolutions for which he asked immediate consideration.

Resolved, That the secretary of the interior be directed to inform the senate whether patents have been issued for lands granted in 1871 to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg road, popularly known as the Backbone railroad. If so, for what number of acres and to what corporation or individual, or whose receipt was taken for the same when signed; whether unusual means were used to hasten the preparation and execution of said patents; whether the clerical force employed worked nights and Sundays, so they might be completed before March 4; what day they were ready for signature of the president; what necessity existed for any special extension to secure the completion and signature the 4th day of March, and whether anything was done to promote the actual settlers, in their rights to any such lands; also whether previous to the 4th day of March anything was done or written in regard to any other unearned land grants for the future which had been consigned by the Forty-eighth congress.

Mr. Edmunds objected to present consideration, and under the rules the matter went over for a day.

In executive session the nominees for President Cleveland's cabinet were taken up separately and confirmed without a division and with unanimity. When the vote was taken on Mr. Bayard's confirmation, Mr. Riddleberger sat silent, neither assenting nor dissenting.

The Inauguration Ball at Washington.

Correspondents say the grand ball room has never been equaled in this country. The reader may have some idea of it if he can imagine a perfecting dancing floor 300 feet wide. The observer looks upward more than fifty feet before his eye strikes the vaulted roof. This great space is filled with decorations upon which it would almost seem that art had exhausted its resources. Over one thousand persons can dance at the same time without treading on each other's toes. Let him imagine the whole interior blazing with a flood of light from half a hundred electric burners, and he will have a faint picture of the scene. Over 8,000 people participated in the dancing. Among those present were President Cleveland and family; President Arthur and cabinet; Senator Bayard, Col. Vilas, of Wisconsin, Gen. Sheridan and Mrs. Sheridan, Gen. Rosencrans, Hon. Dan Manning and wife, Senator Pendleton, Hon. Richard T. Merrick, Senator Wade Hampton, Senator Brown of Georgia, Justice Field, of the supreme court, and Speaker Carlisle and Mrs. Carlisle. There was no formal reception by President Cleveland, but a large number of persons passed about him, and some of the gentlemen standing in the immediate vicinity made the presentation.

Opening of a Reservation in Dakota.

Washington Special: The president has signed an executive order throwing open to settlement the greater part of the Winnebago and Crow Creek reservations, in Dakota. There are 60,000 acres in the tract, and it lies east of the Missouri river and just south of Pierre. There are now about 400 Sioux Indians on these lands. Secretary Teller decided to open these reservations several weeks ago, but held the announcement of the matter back until it could be seen what would be done with the pre-emption repeal in congress. The president and Secretary Teller are committed to the repeal of the pre-emption act, and preferred to have the Winnebago and Crow creek lands come into the market after the repeal should be passed by congress. In that event it could only be open to homestead settlement. Lately they were satisfied by influential Western members that there was no hope for its passage and there was no occasion for delay. The lands thus opened will be surveyed and put in the market in the next sixty days. Delegate Raymond is entitled to great credit in securing this decision from Secretary Teller as the interior department had repeatedly decided against petitions to have the lands in question added to the public domain.

Great excitement prevails in Mitchell, and all points along the line of the road west to Chamberlain, occasioned by the rumor that the Crow Creek reservation was thrown open to settlement by executive order. At the first intimation of the news hundreds rushed upon the reservation as squatters, and it is reported that at least 500 claim shanties have been erected on the reservation in one day. The scenes on the streets and at the land office put one in mind of the great excitement during the big immigration of 1882.

Beecher's Prayer for Grant.

In his opening prayer this morning Rev. Henry Ward Beecher evidently labored under much emotion, and referred to the approach of death for Gen. Grant. He said: Thou hast laid upon our hearts a great desire and a vehement petition for him that lies in sickness and before whom are long opens the gate to let him forth from life. Thou hast granted him to be of great service to this day and land, and by him thou hast borne the banner of victory, and thou hast of darkness wrought light, and out of confusion, order. Thou hast laid upon thy servant a very heavy yoke and burden, and now through suffering he draws near to the end thereof. God, be gracious to him and fill his room with thy divine presence and give to his soul the consciousness of God's forgiving love. May he be patient and gentle, looking evermore to the better life. May he endure to the end and rise through the unspeakable merits and grace of Jesus to the immortality of the blessed. May all thy servants remember him who remembered them in their dark days, and grant that his family may be prepared and blessed for thy will.

The display of fireworks on the night of the 4th was never excelled in this country. Among the curious features were the flight of five thousand rockets at once forming a vast floral bouquet in the heavens. The scene of the exhibition was the White House lot, an area of two or three hundred acres sloping gently away from the south front of the treasury, executive mantion and state department. Uncounted crowds began early to find their way toward the spot from every quarter of the city. For an hour or more they waited commenting meanwhile upon the singular appearance of the monument, a hundred rods beyond the fireworks enclosure. The lower third of the shaft was not visible, but all above was dimly outlined like a ghost of itself against the black sky, and reflecting to its peak rays of electric lights in the city half a mile away. It seemed enormously higher than by daylight and to have not the slightest relation to terrestrial things.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.—In the house the railroad conference committee reported the senate bill with a few unimportant amendments, with a recommendation that the house concur in the amendments. The house adopted the report, and the bill was then passed without debate, and without hardly a dissenting vote. The bill was almost immediately reported to the senate, where it met with a similar reception, Senator Hall alone voting in the negative, and will be enrolled, and will probably reach the governor to-day. Where the word "railroad" was used "and warehouse" have been added, and the governor can appoint the commissioners without the advice of the senate. Part of sec. 20, relating to the long and short hauls, was stricken out and the following placed therein:

Provided, that no railroad company shall charge or receive from any person a higher rate per ton per mile for one car load of freight than for a greater number of car loads, per car, under like conditions or circumstances.

The following is added to sec. 20:

The consignor and railway company may, by contract, signed by the shipper or his delivering agent, limit such liability, but it shall not be competent for the railroad companies in any case to exempt itself for liabilities for its own negligence by any contract. The sum of $20,000 is appropriated to carry out the provisions of the bill.

HOUSE.—Among the bills passed were the following.

Adding cross ties to the articles upon which there may be a lien for labor.

Amending the statutes relating to official trusts.

Providing for a fourth judge in the Second (Ramsey county) judicial district.

For weather station and bureau of crop reports at Northfield.

Relating to the deposit of public funds.

Amending the statutes relating to depositions.

To provide the clothing and transportation of indigent deaf, dumb and blind.

Amending the charter of the city of St. Paul, dividing it into nine wards. Yeas 56, nays 23.

Relating to defense by the state in certain railroad land cases.

Amending General Statutes of 1878 relating to interest on tax judgments.

For a board for the inspection of steam boilers.

To amend the military code.

To provide for the extension of corporations.

SENATE.—Senator Wilson called up his resolution appropriating money for Messrs. J. J. Egan, J. W. Arctander and Attorney General W. J. Hahn, the committee of the State Bar association who prepared the penal code for submission to the judiciary committee. The amount was fixed at $200 each, and the resolution passed.

The senate has agreed to the bill providing for a military instructor at the state university, who is to have the rank of a Colonel.

By a vote of 14 to 11, the senate recommended the passage of the house bill which provides that incorrigible children sent to the reform school shall be a charge upon the state.

The senate has practically killed the house bill extending the time for completion of the Mankato, Austin & St. Paul railroad two years, by laying it on the table in committee of the whole.

Senator Pillsbury, from the finance committee, has provided for three new judges whose offices were created by this legislature, by appropriating $3,500 each per annum, for payment of their salaries.

In committee of the whole, the senate recommended the indefinite postponement of the house bill creating an additional judge in the Twelfth district. It was stated by Senator Castle that Judge Brown was authority for the statement that another judge was not needed in that district.

The house bill levying an additional half-mill tax for state purposes, and thus securing $200,000 additional revenue for the state, was called up and passed by the senate, Senator Rice being the only opponent. Senator Pillsbury, chairman of the finance committee, tersely put the necessity for the bill in the words "You have danced this session. Now you must pay the piper."

The house bill exempting parsonages valued at $5,000 or less from taxation passed the senate and has gone to the governor for signature.

HOUSE.—The long and intense contest over the bill proposing to transfer to the St. Paul, Brainead & Northern the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg road, if not earned by the latter road at the expiration of its grant, culminated in the house when the bill came and finally passed.

The governor returned the act legalizing the incorporation of the Chaska Dairy association without his approval, because the incorporation was a private one and the act therefore in conflict with the special legislation prohibition in the state constitution.

In the house on the 4th at 11 o'clock, Mr. Durant called attention to the fact that the hour had arrived at which a Democratic president had been inaugurated as the president of 50,000,000 people. He thought the occasion was an auspicious one, and therefore moved that a recess be taken for five minutes to permit the Republicans to congratulate the few Democrats in the house on the event. The motion was carried, and Messrs. Edmond and Drake took Mr Durant on their shoulders and carried him to the front of the hall, amid considerable hilarity. Then speeches were made by Mr. Durant, Mr. Valentine and Mr. Hendrickson, and Mr. Nachbar proposed three cheers for Grover Cleveland, which was carried. Dr. Pratt offered a concurrent resolution that the congratulations of the legislature be telegraphed to the chief executive of the United States, which was unanimously carried by both houses, and business was resumed.

SENATE.—The last day of the session was a busy one though there was not much to report. Bills were continually passing through their several stages, and there was almost incessant of ayes and nays.

While the graded license bill was on in the house the senate was almost deserted, and great difficulty was experienced in securing enough votes to pass bills. Calls of the senate were ordered three times in quick succession, but as soon as the door was opened, Senator Wilson, Doran and others would slip out and resume their occupation of listening to the house vote. Finally Doran came into the chamber, and in stentorian tones announced, "High license has just got its death blow."

Out of twenty-six senators voting on the house bill to increase the governor's salary from $3,800 to $5,000, Senator Wheat was the only one voting no.

Routine business was gone through within a hun-drum fashion, and by 11 at night not a thing was left to do until the house sent in further batches of bills. There was a recess taken therefore of a half an hour.

The senators reassembled at 11:45, and desultorily moved and talked for half an hour, when it was learned that the house had adjourned with eighteen senate bills before them unacted upon. This made the upper members mad, and although there were several house bills (given in routine report) to be acted upon, Senator Pillsbury moved to adjourn, and by 20 to 12 the senate at 12:40 agreed to this proposition.

This was the last day for passing bills but on Friday the Senate met and passed complimentary resolutions to officers, etc., and then adjourned sine die.

HOUSE.—The secretary of the senate reported the high license bill passed by the house as amended by the senate, together with other bills that had been amended in the senate. After a sharp debate, the question being on the passage of the bill, and the roll being called there were yeas 44 and nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Batchelder, Bean, Blackmun, Bradford, Brown, Burlingame, Caine, Carson, Coulter, Daniels, Downs, H., Durant, Dyar, Edmond, Evans,

Fiddes, Flynn, Griffin, Holmstrom, Hush, Lee, Lichtley, McKenney, McKusick, Maguire, Maland, Michener, Morse, Murry, Naeseth, Oleson, Pattee, Porter, Pratt, Saettre, Smith, J., Snider, Snow, Stephen, Sweetser, Thompson, Turrell, Wear, Mr. Speaker.

NAYS—43.

Becker, Bruce, Byrne, Caneff, Capser, Collester, Cornish, Downs, D., Drake, Ende, Erickson, Felzer, Gorman, Haraldson, Hample, Hendrickson, Holland, Howes, Illis, Johnson, Knox, Leland, Idenan, McLaren, McMillian, Martin, Murphy, Nachbar, Peterson, P., Peterson, J. W.

Plaisance, Reese, Reinhard, Sadley, Sheehan, Skinner, Smith, R. A., Spaulding, Tenbert, Valentine, Warner, Webster, Wendelschaffer, Wigley.

NOT VOTING—15.

Baumgarten, Bjorge, Brorud, Canning, Case,

Delke, Foster, Lewis, Mason, Myers,

Simpson, Stordock, Tinnes, Thacker, Wall.

So the bill was lost and the question was ended in the house and for the session.

After that matter was disposed of, the house took up third readings of senate bills and, despite the bad air, and the restlessness and disorder naturally resulting, a vast quantity of business was ground out.

Miscellaneous Matters.

The State of Massachusetts is having a very accurate topographical survey made, which, when completed, will be the most elaborate and minute of any State survey ever made. It is said that had a good topographical map of the State been in existence, it would have saved, since the first railroads were built in 1836, $20,000,000 in their construction alone by indicating where the most feasible routes lay.

The largest locomotive in the world, the El Gobernado, built at the railroad works at Sacramento, Cal., has just been completed and sent down to the Tehachipi Pass. Its weight is considerably more than 100 tons, and it has large drivers, five on each side. Its length is so great that it projected through both ends of its stall at the round-house. It was named in honor of Governor Stanford.

In a lecture at Brigton an English professor included in a list for young ladies of "whom not to marry" all smokers and men who indulged in alcoholic liquors. The audience manifested disapproval loudly and frequently, and the London Truth's comments on the present scarcity of husbands imply that the ladies led in the expression of disagreement with the professor's ideas.

From a single grain of wheat planted in 1881, says the Grass Valley (Cal.) Record, grew twenty-two stalks, each bearing a full head. These yielded 860 grains, 760 of which were planted the next year, producing one-fifth of a bushel of splendid wheat. This was planted last spring, yielding seventeen bushels, making 1,020 pounds of wheat from one grain in three years.

A well-educated person who possesses a college sheepskin, reads his Bible his Shakespeare and the daily papers seldom uses more than three or four thousand words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions and wait till they find a word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a larger stock, and eloquent speakers may rise to a command of ten thousand. Shakespeare, who displayed a greater variety of expression than probably any writer in any language, produced all his plays with about thirteen thousand words. Milton's works are built up with 8,000, and the Old Testament says all that it has to say with 5,462 words. In the English language there are, all told, 70,000 words.

In El Paso, Texas, a Mexican dollar is worth 85 cents. In El Paso del Norte, just across the river, in Mexico, an American dollar is worth 85 cents. Not long ago a cowboy took a fifteen-cent drink of whiskey in an El Paso saloon. He tendered an American dollar and received for change a Mexican dollar, equivalent there to 85 cents. He then crossed over to the Mexican town and took another drink of the same stuff. He passed over the Mexican dollar and received for change an American dollar, equivalent there to 85 cents. He continued this operation all day, and at night was found dead drunk with his original dollar in his pocket. N. B—This story shows that picturesque lying may be made very interesting.

The New York Journal of Commerce has kept a record of prices in that market for more than a quarter of a century, and a table, showing the price contrasts at the close of the year 1884 for a number of sample commodities, furnishes comparisons of some interest. The year 1878 marked the extreme depression of most articles in the period of shrinkage followed the panic of 1873. At the close of that year the following articles were cheaper than at the close of 1884: Corn, oats, rye, hay, cotton, fish, foreign fruit, hemp, hops, American pig iron, leather, New Orleans molasses, pork, hams, sides, lard, butter and cheese. The articles of the list which were lower at the close of 1884 than in 1878 were wheat and wheat flower, Scotch pig iron, linseed oil, refined petroleum, rice, sugar, tallow and wool. Wool and foreign pig iron are at the lowest prices of the record from which our comparisons are drawn.

The Habits of Birds.

From the Atlantic.

Birds not only cough and sneeze, but they dream and snore, making most distressing sounds as if strangling. They hiccough—a very droll affair it is, too—and they faint away. The goldfinch spoken of above, being frightened one night, in his struggles was caught between the wires, and gave a cry like the squeak of a mouse in distress. On my hastening to his release, he slipped out in the room and flew wildly about till he hit something and fell to the floor. He was picked up, and his fright culminated in a dead faint. The little head drooped, the body was limp, apparently perfectly lifeless, and he was laid in his cage, ready to be buried in the morning. He was placed carefully on the breast, however, and in a few minutes he hopped upon his perch, shook out his ruffled feathers, and composed himself to sleep.

One feat sometimes ascribed to man is in the case of birds a literal fact—they can sleep with one eye open. This curious habit I have watched closely, and I find it common in nearly all the varieties I have been able to observe.

The Saltpeter Beds of Nevada.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

The saltpeter beds of Nevada are far better situated for the development of their deposits than the niter region of South America, which is a desert entirely devoid of water and all vegetable life, and where the development can be accomplished only by surmounting many difficulties; the provisions of the miners have to be transported from long distances; the water supply for all purposes is condensed from the ocean water and carried to the niter fields, while fuel has to be procured from the mountains in the south of Chili. In Nevada, we are told, the saltpeter deposits are in the vicinity of a rich farming country, with an abundant suply of water and wood close at hand, and the niter can be furnished at prices considerably cheaper than that for which the South American article can be obtained.

Prof. Clarence Martin, principal of one of the leading public city schools of Louisville, resigned and has left the city for parts unknown. It is charged that he took salaries of his teachers to the amount of $1,000 and lost it at faro.

Albert Sidney Johnston's Death.

From an Article by Col. Wm. Preston Johnston, Son of Gen. A. S. Johnston, in the Century for February.

Gen. Johnston was with Statham's brigade, confronting Hurlburt's left, which was behind the crest of the hill, and a depression filled the chaparral in front. The confederates held the parallel ridge in easy musket-range; and "heavy fire as I ever saw during the war," says Governor Harris, was kept up for an hour or more. It was necessary to cross the valley raked by this deadly ambuscade and assail the opposite ridge in order to drive the enemy from his stronghold. When Gen. Johnston came up and saw the situation, he said to his staff; "They are offering stubborn resistance here. I shall have to put the bayonet to them." It was the crisis of the conflict. The Federal key was in his front. If his assault were successful their left would be completely turned, and the victory won. He determined to charge. He sent Governor Harris, of his staff, to lead a Tennessee regiment; and, after a brief conference, with Breckenridge, whom he loved and admired, that officer followed by his staff, appealed to the soldiers. As he encouraged them with his fine voice and manly bearing, General Johnston rode out in front and slowly down the line. His hat was off. His sword rested in its scabbard. In his right hand he held a little tin cup, the memorial of an incident that had occurred earlier in the day. Passing through a captured camp, he had taken this toy, saying: "Let this be my share of the spoils to-day." It was this plaything which, holding it between two fingers, he employed more effectively in his natural and simple gesticulation than most men could have used a sword. His presence was full of inspiration. He sat his thoroughbred bay, "Fire-eater," with easy command. His voice was persuasive, encouraging, and compelling. His words were few; he said: "Men! they are stubborn; we must use the bayonet." When he reached the center of the line, he turned, "I will lead you!" he cried, and moved toward the enemy. The line was already thrilling and trembling with that irresistible ardor which in battle decides the day. With a mighty shout the line moved forward at a charge. A sheet of flame and a mighty roar burst from the Federal stronghold. The Confederate line withered; but there was not a an instant's pause. The crest was gained. The enemy were in flight.

Gen Johnston had passed through the ordeal seemingly unhurt. His horse was shot in four places; his clothes were pierced by missils; his bootsole was cut and torn by a minnie, but if he himself had received any severe would he did not know it. At this moment Governor Harris rode up from the right. After a few words, Gen. Johnston sent him with an order to Col. Statham, which having delivered, he speedily returned. In the meantime, knots and groups of Federal soldiers kept up a desultory fire as they retreated upon their supports, and their last line, now yielding delivered volley after volley as they sullenly retired. By the chance of war, a minnie ball from one of these did its fatal work. As he sat there, after his wound, Capt. Wickham says that Col. O'Hara, of his staff, rode up, and Gen. Johnston said to him, "We must go to the left, where the firing is heaviest," and then gave him an order, which O'Hara rode off to obey. Governor Harris returned, and, finding him very pale, asked him, "General, are you wounded?" He answered, in a very deliberate and emphatic tone: "Yes, and, I fear, seriously. These were his last words. Harris and Wickham led his horse back under cover of the hill and lifted him from it. They searched at random for the wound, which had cut an artery in his leg, the blood flowing into his boot. When his brother-in-law, Preston, lifted his head, and addressed him with passionate grief, he smiled faintly, but uttered no word. His life rapidly ebbed away, and in a few moments he was dead.

His wound was not necessarily fatal. Gen. Johnston's own knowledge of military surgery was adequate for its control by an extemporized tourniquet, had he been aware or regardful of its nature. Dr. D. W. Yandell, his surgeon, had attended his person during most of the morning; but finding a large number of wounded men, including many Federals, at one point Gen. Johnston ordered Yandell to stop there, establish a hospital, and give them his services. He said to Yandell: "These men were our enemies a moment ago; they are prisoners now. Take care of them." Yandell remonstrated against leaving him, but he was premptory. Had Yandell remained with him, he would have had little difficulty with the wound.

How to Tell Shoddy Cloth.

"How," asked a Sun reporter of a New York tailor, "is an inexperienced buyer to distinguish between all-woolen goods and the material containing a cotton warp, of which that gentleman was complaining?"

"By merely raveling out the rough edge of the material and inspecting the threads," said the tailor. "Any one can tell a cotton thread from a woolen thread. The one will break short in two, on being tested; while the other will fray and floss out, like yarn and worsted. In this way you can readily detect a mixture of cotton warp in a sham all-woolen fabric."

"How do you detect shoddy in cloth?"

"In just the same way, and even more easily. Fray out two or three threads from the rough edge, and untwist them. If they contain shoddy, it will drop out of the twist, sometimes like sand, and then again in an impalpable dust, that will like enough, make you sneeze. If you'd inhale enough of the stuff it would be apt to give you a headache and a sore throat, for most shoddy is rank poison.

A monster octopus was caught in Commencement bay, Oregon, last week, in about three hundred feet of water by fish hooks. Its arms or feelers were fully four feet long and eight in number. Each was supplied with 120 pairs of suckers, by which the octopus holds its prey. Its body was purse-shaped without fins, and was nearly a foot in circumference.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Thomas F. Bayard of Delaware was born at Wilmington on the 29th of October, 1828. As a boy he always excelled in his studies, although he was anxious in early youth to become one of America's merchant princes, and was inclined to throw overboard all the possibilities of political greatness which were incident to his position as member of the ruling house of Delaware. His early education was obtained principally at the "Flushing" school at Wilmington. He was persuaded to give up his mercantile ambition and to study for the legal profession. He was admitted to the bar in 1851, and had soon built up an excellent practice extending all over the state. In 1853 he was appointed by the president as United States district attorney, but soon afterward abandoned the office. It was in March, 1869, that he was chosen to succeed his father, Hon. James A. Bayard, as United States senator. He was a sterling adherent to the doctrines of the Democratic party, and came in a short time to be regarded as one of their ablest exponents in the upper house. Through the framing of all the latter reconstruction legislation he stood as the representative of the large part of the Northern people that believed in dealing equitably by the Southern states; and, although in the minority, he made himself felt in the advocacy of their cause. He was relected in 1875, and became a member of the electoral commission, voting with his Democratic colleagues against the seating of Rutherford B. Hayes in the presidential chair. Throughout the greenback discussion Mr. Bayard is noted for his strong conservatism on financial questions; is a moderate tariff man and a strict constructionist and economist. At the Cincinnati convention, in 1880, he was next to Hancock on the first ballot, receiving 153 votes to 171 for Hancock. On the second ballot the nomination was made. He was last elected to the senate in 1881, and his present term expires in 1885.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. Manning was born in Albany, N. Y., Aug. 16, 1831. His parentage was of Irish, English and Dutch extraction. He was a poor boy, and his early opportunities for schooling were very limited. At eleven years of age he went to work as an office boy at the establishment of the Albany Atlas, which was afterward merged into the Albany Argus, with which paper he has ever since, in one capacity or another, been connected. In 1873 he assumed sole charge of the Argus, and was elected president of the company, which position he yet holds, though he has done little or no writing for some time. He was a member of the Democratic state convention of 1874 that nominated Samuel J. Tilden for governor, and was a delegate to the St. Louis convention of 1876 that nominated Mr. Tilden for president. He has been a member of the Democratic state committee since 1876. Was its secretary in 1879 and 1880, and was elected chairman in 1881, which place he now fills. He was warmly interested in the nomination of Mr. Cleveland for president at Chicago last July, and it is generally conceded that he showed great skill in the convention as the head of the New York delegation. Mr. Manning has been active and successful outside of journalism and politics. He has long been a director of the Albany & Susquehanna Railway company and is president of the National Commercial bank of Albany, of which he was first director and then vice president. He is also park commissioner of Albany and is a director of the Albany Electric Light company.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Lucius Q. C. Lamar of Oxford, Miss., was born in Putnam county, Ga., Sept. 17, 1825; was educated at Oxford, Ga., and graduated at Emory college, Georgia, in 1845; studied law at Macon, Ga., under the Hon. A. H. Chappell, and was admitted to the bar in 1847; moved to Oxford, Miss., in 1849; was elected adjunct professor of mathematics in the university of the state, and held the position as assistant to Dr. A. T. Bledsoe (editor of the Southern Review), which he resigned in 1850, and returned to Covington, Ga., where he resumed the practice of law; was elected to the legislature of Georgia in 1853; in 1854 moved to his plantation in Lafayette county, Miss., and was elected to the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth congresses of the United States, and resigned in 1860 to take a seat in the secession convention of his state; in 1861 entered the confederate army as lieutenant colonel of the Nineteenth regiment, and was promoted to the colonelcy; in 1863 was intrusted by President Davis with an important diplomatic mission to Russia; in 1866 was elected professor of political economy and social science in the University of Mississippi, and in 1867 was transferred to the professorship of law; was elected to the Forty-third congress of the United States, and was re-elected to the Forty-fourth congress; and was elected to the United States senate as a Democrat, to succeed James Lusk Alcorn, Independent, and took his seat March 5, 1877; was re-elected in 1882. His term of service in the senate will expire March 3, 1889.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

William Crowninshield Endicott, Mr. Cleveland's secretary of war, was born in Salem in 1827, and is the son of William Putnam Endicott and Mary, daughter of Hon. Jacob Crowninshield, who was a representative to congress. He attended the Salem schools, and was graduated from Harvard college in the class of 1847. He married his cousin, a daughter of George Peabody, and has two children, a son and a daughter. Judge Endicott studied at Harvard law school, and read law in the office of the late Nathaniel J. Lord. He was admitted to the bar about 1850, and a few years later formed a partnership with the late J. W. Perry, and continued with him until his appointment by Gov. Washburn to a seat on the supreme bench in 1873. This position he held until 1882, when he resigned on account of his health. In 1882 he made an extended tour of the continent. He was a member of the Salem common council in 1852, 1853 and 1857, when he was elected president of that board. He was city solicitor from 1858 to 1863. He is a member of the historical society and of the board of overseers of Harvard college. Politically Mr. Endicott is of Whig antecedents, his affiliations with the Democratic party dating from the Bell-Everett campaign of 1860, but he has never been an active politician. Last fall he was the candidate of his party for governor in the state, but did not himself appear in the canvass, and received a comparatively small vote. As a lawyer and a judge Mr. Endicott holds high rank, and personally he is a gentlemen of the highest character. The judge has never been an active party man, and, it is hinted, has not always voted the straight ticket. This is supposed notably to have been the case when Gen. Butler was the Democratic candidate for governor. Last fall, as Butler's successor on the ticket, he polled a vote much larger than that of his associates. His home is in the old Puritan city of Salem, and he is a descendant—said to be the oldest lineal descendant—of the Puritan Governor John Endicott, who cut the red cross out of the British flag, as is dramatically related in one of Hawthorne's "Twice-told Tales." In person Mr. Endicott bears a striking likeness to the portrait of his famous ancestor, just as the features of Mr. Robert C. Winthrop of Boston, the orator at the foundation and also at the completion of the Washington monument in the national capital, strikingly resemble those of his own ancestor, Gov. John Winthrop, Gov. Endicott's colonial rival.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

William Collins Whitney, the new secretary of the navy, is a native of Conway, Mass., and was born in 1839. His father, Gen. James S. Whitney, who had been collector of the port of Boston, a delegate to the Charleston convention of 1860, and prominent among the great Democrats of that state, was regarded as one of the leaders of the party. The latter died in 1878, during the exciting contest against Benjamin F. Butler. After being graduated from Williston seminary at Easthampton, William C. Whitney entered Yale college in 1859. With William G. Sumner, the well-known writer and teacher upon political economy, who was his classmate, Mr. Whitney divided the first prize for English essays. He was chosen to deliver the oration of his class on graduation. Entering the Harvard law school, he was graduated in 1865, and continued his studies in this city with Abraham R. Lawrence, now one of the judges of the supreme court. On his admission to the bar he began the practice of his profession, which he has since followed. His fidelity to the cause of his first clients brought him many more, and his reputation as a lawyer was increased by his marked success and fearlessness in several notable causes. Charles H. Sweetser, the founder and editor of the Evening Gazette, after disposing of a half interest in his paper, was obliged to leave that journal and started the Evening Mail. A criminal charge was preferred against him by his former partner. At the risk of incurring the enmity of men of influence and powerful politicians, Mr. Whitney became the attorney for his old classmate when he failed of securing the counsel of older men in the profession. His success in dismissing the charge secured him a high standing. Later he successfully defended Sweetser on the charge of libel brought against him as the editor of the Round Table by Charles Reade for criticisms on the novel of "Griffith Gaunt." In 1871 Mr. Whitney took a foremost part in the organization of the Young Men's Democratic club, which still continues as a powerful political factor. He was prominent among those in the club who maintained and perfected the system of inspection at the polls in the memorable election of that year, when the citizens asserted their rights and fought against the notorious Tweed and Republican-Democratic ring. Mr. Whitney's prominence in the politics of New York has been uninterrupted since that time. Mr. Whitney served as an inspector of schools in 1872, and the same year was defeated for district attorney as the candidate of the Reform Democracy, owing to the demoralization of the party. He was actively engaged in the canvass that resulted in the election of Gov. Tilden and Mayor Wickham. As one of the principal speakers at the reception given to Gov. Tilden by his club in December, 1874, Mr. Whitney protested against the continuance of an inflated currency and a plea for "hard money." When Mr. Whitney became the official adviser of the mayor he was placed as a barrier between the public treasury and the establishment of claims, aggregating millions of dollars, growing out of the ring frauds. There were already over 3,800 suits pending against the city, involving $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and new ones were beginning every day by the score. He held this office until December, 1882, having twice been reappointed, when he resigned the position, in which he was entitled to continue for two years more. It is estimated that his saving to the city while he was its council directly amounted to $2,000,000, and indirectly to much more.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

William F. Vilas was born in Chelsea, Orange county, Vermont, July 9, 1840. His father, Judge Levi B. Vilas, was a member of the Vermont legislature at the time, and one of the prominent old-school Democratic politicians of the Green Mountain state, so that his son comes honestly by his Bourbonism. The judge was frequently the candidate of his party for United States senator, presidential elector, etc., and represented Vermont in several national Democratic conventions. Judge Vilas moved his family to Wisconsin in 1851, and entered into the practice of the law at Madison. William F., who inherits so many sterling traits, physical and mental, from his sturdy, hard-headed ancestors, was graduated from the Wisconsin state university in 1858, at the age of eighteen. Two years later he won his degree of LL. B. at the Albany law school, and was admitted the same year to practice in the supreme courts of New York and Wisconsin, and began the active practice of his profession at Madison, Wis., swinging his shingle to the breeze on his twentieth birthday, the 19th of July, 1860. In 1862 the war spirit overcame him; he raised Company A, which elected him captain, and the 25th of August was mustered into the Twenty-third regiment of Wisconsin volunteer infantry. The regiment was ordered to the front in a few weeks, and joined the forces under Sherman, who was then preparing for an attack on Vicksburg. It took part in several sharp engagements preceding the attack, and figured prominently in the subsequent siege of the city. The 25th of February following Vilas was appointed major of his regiment, and the 23d of March its lieutenant colonel. From June 5 to Aug. 25 he was in command of the regiment, owing to the ill health of Col. Guppey. This period included the last month of the siege and nearly two months after the surrender. The 25th of August, 1863, Col Vilas resigned his position, having been in the service but one year, nearly all of which time, however, was spent in active campaigning. On returning from the war Col. Vilas resumed the practice of his profession in Madison, in which he has been remarkably successful throughout. The 3d of January, 1866, he was married to Miss Anna Matilda, daughter of Dr. William H. Fox of the village of Oregon, Wis., one of the pioneer physicians of Dane county, and a gentleman of much wealth and high reputation.

Col. and Mrs. Vilas have three children now living—Cornelia, who will be eighteen years of age the 31st of May next; Henry, born May 28, 1872; and Mary Esther, born Oct. 10, 1873. They have lost one son, Levi B., born in 1869. Miss Cordelia, familiarly known as "Nellie," is a beautiful, bright, well-educated, vivacious young lady, who is alreday exceedingly popular in social circles at Madison. She is well calculated in time to really shine in Washington society life. Mrs. Vilas herself is a lady of charming disposition, elegant manners and fine education; as a hostess she has few equals in Wisconsin. In addition to his large and lucrative law practice, Col. Vilas fills and has filled several positions of public trust. He is one of the professors of law in the Wisconsin state university law school, being a regular lecturer on practice, pleadings and evidence. He was for some years trustee of the Wisconsin State Soldiers' Orphan asylum and secretary of the board. He was one of the three leading attorneys appointed to revise the statutes of Wisconsin in 1878, and personally superintended the publication of the revision. He is one of the most active members of the Wisconsin board of state university regents. Col. Vilas was one of the delegates from Wisconsin to the Democratic national convention at Chicago, and officiated as president of the convention, being prominently mentioned himself for a place on the ticket. He afterward made the speeches of notification to Cleveland and Hendricks. He is now member from Madison in the lower house of the Wisconsin legislature—the first elective office he ever held—and is the leader of the Democratic side of the house. The colonel was recently indorsed by his Democratic fellow members for a position in the cabinet. Col. Vilas is conceded by all to be the leader of the strong Madison bar, and is one of the most able and eloquent advocates in Wisconsin. His national reputation as an orator began with his famous eulogy of Grant at the Chicago banquet. Col. Vilas is worth from $200,000 to $300,000, most of it acquired from his practice, and the rest inherited from his father, who left a goodly fortune. The colonel is the state solicitor in Wisconsin for the Chicago & Northwestern railway, and is associated in the law with his younger brother, Edward P. His brother Charles H. is a Chicago physician. His brother Levi M. is a prominent attorney at Eau Claire, Wis., who is now being talked of in connection with the succession to Associate Justice Taylor on the state supreme bench.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Augustus H. Garland was born in Tipton county, Tenn., June 11, 1832. His parents removed to the State of Arkansas the following year and settled in the bottom lands of the Red river valley. At a suitable age young Garland was sent to Bardstown, Ky., to be educated in what was then the most famous seat of learning in the Southwest. His academic studies were pursued in the Catholic colleges of St. Mary and St. Joseph. During the latter part of his residence in Bardstown he read law, and attended the trial of causes in the court room whenever he had the opportunity. At that time the local bar was very strong. Garland profited greatly by this practice, as well as by his studies, which he pursued with persistent devotion. Returning home he continued to woo that jealous mistress the law, and in 1853 was admitted to practice at Washington, Ark. In 1856 he removed to Little Rock, the capital of the state. He was admitted to practice as an attorney in the supreme court of the United States on Dec. 26, 1860. By that time he had obtained professional reputation, and in the same year was a Bell and Everett elector. He opposed the secession of Arkansas as long as there was any hope of a peaceful solution of sectional differences. When, however, war was inevitable, he threw in his lot with his state. He was a member of the provisional congress which met at Montgomery, Ala., in May, 1861, and took part in drawing up the constitution of the Confederate States. During the struggle between the Federal and Confederate governments, he gave his counsel to the Southern cause, first as a representative and afterward as senator. He was serving as a senator in its congress when the Confederacy collapsed. In 1865 Mr. Garland petitioned the supreme court of the United States, to practice therein without taking "the iron-clad oath," at the same time submitting an argument in support of his petition, which was a masterpiece of reasoning. He won his case, which was not decided until the December term of the supreme court, 1867. While it was pending he was elected United States senator from Arkansas. He appeared to take his seat in the senate March 4, 1867, but was not permitted to do so. In 1874 Mr. Garland was elected governor of Arkansas without opposition. His election as senator took place in January, 1876, without opposition. He began his term as successor to Powell Clayton, Republican, on March 5, 1877. In 1883 he was re-elected to the senate for six years.

Logan and Pugh.

From the Boston Transcript.

Senator Pugh, of Alabama, served in the same Congress with Senator Logan just prior to the outbreak of the rebellion. They were then members of the same political party, and were personal friends. Near the close of the war, when the Union soldiers went through Alabama, a detachment of Wilson's cavalry approached the residence of Senator Pugh, in Eufaula. When they saw the troops approaching, Mr. Pugh, who had been in the Confederate army and in the Confederate Congress, after having served in the Congress of the United States, expected to be roughly handled. He walked out to the front yard, and when the detachment drew up to his gate he said to them: "There's the house go in and take possession." The officer in command inquired: "Is your name James L. Pugh?" "That's my name, sir," responded the Senator, supposing the Unionists merely wanted to identify him in order to make him suffer the more. "Here are my orders respecting you, sir," said the officer, extending a paper. Mr. Pugh unfolded the paper, expecting to read an order for his immediate arrest and transportation to prison. Instead of that, he read about as follows:

"To——, officer commanding, etc.: You are hereby ordered to proceed to the residence of Hon. James L. Pugh, at Eufaula, and to station a guard around the premises. See that neither Mr. Pugh nor anything belonging to him is molested. JOHN A. LOGAN,
"Major General Commanding."

In August, 1883, John Lowry, who was a large farmer northeast of Moorhead, but who is now serving out a term in the Michigan penitentiary for embezzlement, left $2,060 for investment in real estate with F. A. & G. A. Elder of Moorhead. When Mr. Lowry was arrested at the instance of his former employer, the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company of Michigan, he appointed a Mr. Childs of Michigan as his receiver. Childs placed a Mr. Watson in charge of the farm here to look after Mr. Lowry's accounts. Recently Watson swore out a warrant for the arrest of F. A. Elder, for embezzlement, G. A. Elder having previously left for the east. F. A. Elder was placed in $3,500 bonds to appear March 7, for examination.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE—After business of unimportant nature, the sundry civil appropriation bill was considered. A resolution was offered requesting the president of the United States to negotiate with foreign powers to secure treaties binding the nations to open their mints to the free coinage of silver.

HOUSE—A resolution was offered refusing to take part in the inauguration ceremonies, because the representatives had not been assigned their proper place. It was lost. The house voted, notwithstanding Republican filibustering, to take up the contested election case of Frederick vs. Wilson, Iowa. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bankruptcy bill was lost—11 yeas to 195 nays.

Both houses were in session far into the night, their attention being chiefly paid to reports from conference committees on disputed points in appropriation bills. Much filibustering was resorted to by the Republicans in the house, who did not wish the Frederick-Wilson case to come up.

SENATE.—Mr. Sherman explained that the committee of arrangements appointed by the senate to take charge of the inaugural ceremonies had not discriminated against the house in any way, but in the present instance precedence had been somewhat departed from in favor of the house.

Mr. Van Wyck satirically said the senate could not agree to legislative provisions on an appropriation bill when put on by the house, but could itself put on such a bill as the Pacific Mail subsidy clause when it saw fit. John Roach, Jay Gould and C. P. Huntington had been defeated at the other end of the capitol, but had demanded that the senate should violate its own rules.

Nearly the whole day was spent in hurrying through the appropriation bills.

Mr. Pendleton offered the following resolution, for which he asked immediate consideration.

Resolved, That the thanks of the senate are due and hereby tendered to Hon. George F. Edmund for the courtious, impartial and able manner in which he has presided over its deliberation and fulfilled the duty of president pro tem. The resolution was unanimously egreed to.

HOUSE.—The speaker laid before the house a communication from G. H. Craig, representative of the Fourth Alabama district, stating that he had forwarded to the governor of that state his resignation, to take effect March 3.

Mr. Robinson (N. Y.) made an appeal "as the last word he would ever say in Washington," asking the house to make a donation of any amount to Mrs. Meikleham, granddaughter of Jefferson, and requested unanimous consent for the passage of a bill making an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. Hammond objected.

The proceedings of the day were without special interest. Nearly all the time was consumed in awaiting reports from conference committees and appointing such committees. The fun of the evening was confined to the ways and means committee room, where Mr. Blackburn was celebrating his last night in the house by treating his particular friends to a musical party, the instrumental portion of which was furnished by a party of Lexington colored men, while the entire company now and then joined in the refrain of some negro melody, and broke into applause as each air was completed. Messrs. Curtin, Poland, Robertson and Money were among the members present, and Postmaster General Hatton and ex-Gov. Blackburn were among the distinguished guests.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—During the two sessions of the Forty-eighth congress there have been introduced in the house 8,286 bills and 345 joint resolutions. The following named measures of general importance have been enacted into laws:

Bills to establish the bureau of labor; to establish the bureau of animal industry; to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals; to repeal the test oath act of 1862; to limit to three years the time in which prosecutions may be begun against persons for the violation of internal revenue laws; to establish a bureau of navigation in the treasury department; to provide a retired list for soldiers and marines who have served continuously for thirty years or upward; to reduce the rate of postage on newspaper and other periodical publications of the second class when sent by others than a publisher or news agent, to one cent for each four ounces; to remove certain burdens from the American merchant marine (the Dingley shipping bill); to provide civil government for Alaska; to prevent and punish the counterfeiting in the United States of bonds or other securities of foreign governments; to extend the duration of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; to make all public roads and highways postroads; to make it a felony for any person to falsely personate an officer or employe of the United States acting under authority of the United States; to relieve from the charge of desertion certain soldiers of the late war who, after having served faithfully until the close of the war, left their commands without leave; to provide for the location of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers of the Mexican war and war of 1812 whose disabilities were not incurred in service against the United States; to reorganize the corps of judge advocates of the army; to declare forfeited certain lands granted to aid in construction of a railway and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria, Or.; to reorganize the inspectors general department of the army; to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801, by referring them to the court of claims.

The following important bills have been sent to the president for his approval and will doubtless be signed by him before the adjournment of congress to-morrow, and hence may be considered as enacted:

To prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in this country; to declare the forfeiture of lands granted to aid of the construction of the Texas Pacific railroad, and to prevent the unlawful occupation of public lands.

Among important measures yet remaining in conference committees upon points of difference between the houses are:

The house bill to repeal the pre-emption and timber culture laws; the house bill to forfeit lands granted the Atlantic & Pacific Railway company, and the house bill to provide for the settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men of the army for private property destroyed in the service of the United States.

SENATE.—The remaining committee amendments to the river and harbor bill were agreed to, but it was finally killed by laying on the table.

A great excitemnet was caused by the entrance of President Arthur and President Cleveland.

A message from the house was received announcing the passage of the bill authorizing the president to place one person on the retired list of the army. [Applause.] The bill was read at length.

The President pro tem of the Senate—Manifestations of applause are not in order. The clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States: I nominate Ulysses S. Grant, formerly general commanding the armies of the United States, to be general on the retired list of the army, with the full pay of such rank.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

The president pro tem of the senate then announced that the nomination would be considered in open session. "The question is, will the senate advise and consent to this appointment? All senators in favor will say I. [A storm of ayes.] All opposed no. [Dead silence.] The ayes have it unanimously. This announcement was received with thunders of applause, both on the floor and in the galleries. Vice President-elect Hendricks, escorted by Senators Edmunds and Hawley, had entered the chamber and had been received with applause. When quiet prevailed, the presiding officer (Mr. Edmunds) said, "The chair has the pleasure of announcing that the vice president of the United States is in the senate chamber, and if agreeable to him I will now administer to him the oath of office." Mr. Hendricks then stood up, and Mr. Edmunds administered the oath, and after a neat address declared the Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE.—The closing up was full of confusion and excitement. The passage of the Grant bill produced similar scenes to those in the senate. The announcement of the result was hailed with three cheers, and long and continued applause.

At ten minutes before 12 o'clock according to the hands of the clock, which had been turned back that extent of time, Mr. Springer as chairman of the committee appointed to wait on the president, announced it had performed its duty, and the president had nothing to communicate.

Mr. Keifer offered the following resolution: That the thanks of this congress are hereby tendered to the Hon. John G. Carlisle, speaker, for the courtesy with which he has treated all its members and for the ability and firmness with which he has presided over the deliberations of the house during the Forty-eighth congress.

A vote was taken standing amid loud continued applause. The speaker pro tem, Mr. Hatch, (Mo.) declared the resolution adopted unanimously by 325 representatives of the Forty-eighth congress. Mr. Carlisle made a brief reply and declared the house adjourned.

HOW'S THIS?

It would rather seem as though the farmers of this county were not allowed to draw a breath without the permission of the Pillsbury & Hurlbut Elevator Company. There is an advertisement in the Pioneer-Press of a company who offer to ship flax for seed, and a Polk County granger wrote them for information as to terms, &c. The firm paid no attention to him but in due time he received the following reply from the Pillsbury & Hurlbut Elevator Co:

"Your postal card to ———, has been referred to us for answering, as they do not put out flax in your territory. We, however, have undertaken to do this at stations where we could get orders enough to enable us to ship a full carload. We think ——— is our nearest point to your station. Our prices at stations where we loan seed, provided, as we said before, we get orders enough to warrant us in making loans, will be as follows: American seed $1.75, Russian seed $2. We would advise using the Russian seed. However, whichever you prefer to take will be fully up to sample shown you by our agent, and if same is not entirely free from mustard seed and all other foul seeds, we would not wish you to take it. Our plan is to take a note drawing 10 per cent. interest for the value of the seed, due not later than Nov. 15th, '85, and enter into contract with the parties to receive their entire crop of flax seed grown from seed furnished (less a certain number of bushels they may want to reserve for future seed,) for which we agree to pay the Chicago price of said flax seed on date of delivery, less 32 cents per bushel. This 32 cents is to cover freight and charges that would accrue on the flax between ——— and Chicago."

If this does not show that the P & H. Co. controls the destinies of this upper country it certainly shows an attempt. In this case the applicant lives within a few miles of a station to which he would naturally wish his flax seed shipped, but the station to which P. & H. propose to ship his flax seed is between 20 and 30 miles from him. And he must go there if he wants a little flax to sow, clean up and black his boots, take off his hat and give to P & H. a note that secures to P. & H. all the profit he can make and then haul his crop over 20 miles further than he would to reach his own station. And it is all conditioned on whether the P. & H. company get orders enough to ship carload lots whether anybody can get seed. It seems a farmer hasn't even got the poor privilege of sending to a commission man for a small lot and paying the freights thereon, because no one but the P. & H. company can sell in that "territory!" Farmers who will buy of P. & H. under such circumstances deserve to lose their whole crop and the conditions imposed make it very probable that they will.

Shall Farmers Hold Their Wheat Over Another Harvest?

Eds. Rural Home:—It is a matter of inquiry with many farmers (those who are in circumstances to enable them to do so) whether there is any inducement for them to hold their present wheat crop now on hand, over another harvest in hope of better prices. For the farmer to hoard his crop from year to year, looking for better prices is, in the main bad policy, for the natural shrinkage, waste by vermin, interest on money, and insurance amount to a percentage generally above what can be realized from advance in prices. And, in truth, if we look back at the markets for a period of some twenty years, we see that there has been a gradual decline in prices, so that those who held over were at last obliged to sell for less price than which might have been obtained when the crop was harvested. Such having been the experience of almost all who have held crops over for better prices during past years, there is less prospect that many will hold over the next harvest. There is a limit below which prices cannot be maintained, and that is the limit of cost of production. If a crop does not pay the producer he will not continue its production, for he cannot any more continue to raise a crop at a loss from year to year, than a merchant could sustain himself in business in selling goods below cost to him. Either would alike lead to bankruptcy.

The average cost of raising wheat in every section in that locality, though I hold that, under a wise system of husbandry, wheat can be raised at present prices. On the virgin soils of the West grain is much cheaper than in the older countries of the East, but subject to transportation it must also sell much cheaper, and pays no more profit. It is certain that such a condition of markets will lessen production, and it is also just as certain that the present low prices, the world over will greatly increase consumption, for wheaten bread in the old world has been heretofore, only a luxury with the laboring classes, that could be allowed but seldom, which is now a cheap and common food. An increased consumption with usual production will soon reduce any surplus that may be now held in the markets of the world.

But there is another view of the present condition of markets which will soon be felt. There is an universal cry of over-production, as a cause of depressed prices. That the past two harvests have been abundant, there is no doubt, but that there is any unusual surplus, or will be at the next harvest, is very doubtful. Markets are controlled by supply and demand, but both supply and demand are estimates, not real, and it often happens that estimates are made more in the interests of speculation than to show the real condition.

The cry of over-production in our country, as well as elsewhere, has been the great cause of depressing markets and not any excessive supply, accumulated on hand. There is now less wheat visible in this country, than there was a year ago, and the same is true of the English market, and it is reported at the great wheat growing sections of the West that there is less than usual left in the hands of farmers at this season of the year. The crop of England, at the last harvest, was estimated to be the extraordinary yield of thirty bushels per acre. It is now known that it did not exceed twenty-eight bushels, and the supply on hand is several million bushels less than it was one year ago, and the acreage sown to wheat is decreasing from year to year, as prices have sunk below the cost of production. In our own country it is sure that the extreme low prices have lessened the acreage sown to winter wheat, and that oats and barley will be largely substituted for spring wheat the coming spring; so that if the season should be favorable and a full yield be harvested the coming season, there can be no claim of over-supply to keep prices below average rates.

With these views of present conditions it seems quite probable that those who hold over will be able to realize within the next twelve months a remunerative advance above present prices. The claim set forth by some English authorities that ere long India will furnish all the deficiency of the English market in breadstuffs, and that we cannot count on their market for our surplus, is more a scare than any real prospect. India, it is true, has a large territory, and doubtless millions of acres adapted to wheat growing, but she has also a dense population to be supported from the soil of an ignorant superstitious race. Their agriculture is miserable, and without prospect of immediate improvement. The yield of wheat is said to be but five or six bushels per acre, and that of inferior quality. There is a large inland transportation before reaching seaport for shipment, and even at the very low wages paid for labor, and cheap transportation, they cannot put grain on the English market below current prices, even allowing they have the grain to spare, but which cannot be expected until their primitive agriculture is superceded, and a better civilization prevails. There is no country in the world that can supply the English market with wheat of like quality, cheaper than we can, notwithstanding the high price of labor in our country.

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

The Cost of Rum.

The cost of Rum to the nation in money is the least of its evil qualities. Dollars spent foolishly may be earned over again, property destroyed may be replaced, and the money cost of the foolishness of a man to-day can be made good by wisdom to-morrow.

The real cost of Rum to the country is the destruction of its men and women, a loss which cannot be made good. The son torn from his mother, the husband from his wife, the father from his family and lost in the yawning chasm of appetite, these losses can never be made good. They are complete losses, they are wrecks without hope of salvage. There is no return for a soul in Hell, and Rum means souls in Hell.

But the money cost is something so absolutely enormous that it is worth considering. It is worth something to know how much we are paying for the destruction of our best men and boys, in hard cash. It is well to compare the cost of death with the cost of life. Very many of the problems that now vex those who are investigating can be solved by these statements and comparisons.

We take 1883 as an example and we find that during that year the people of the United States spent their money as follows:

Carpets	$31,000,000
Worsted goods	33,000,000
Woolen goods	160,000,000
Cotton goods	210,000,000
Boots and shoes	196,000,000
All textiles	437,000,000
Articles of wear	482,000,000
Tea, coffee, etc.	145,000,000
Butter and cheese	181,000,000
Sugar	231,000,000
Bread or wheat flour	212,000,000
All foods	963,000,000
Wages paid in mechanical and manufacturing industries	947,000,000
Intoxicating drinks	$944,000,000

Judge Severance, in a speech before the prohibition convention at Mankato said that in a law practice of 30 years he defended 100 persons charged with homicide, and in all but one case the action charged had been committed in intoxication. He advocates prohibition.

Joseph Cook writes to The Voice, and says: "Constitutional prohibition should be made an issue in State and National politics. I favor the measure in both fields. If it can be adopted without the formation of a third party, all well. If not, then we must have it through a third party."

What Does It Mean?

What does drunkenness involve? It means that to thousands life becomes one long disease. Solomon told us that truth three thousand years ago. "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." The ghastly objects; the terrible sights and sounds; the creeping, cowering, loathsome, hellish imaginings, conjured up by delirum tremens—that inconceivably ghastly and agonizing illness—are but a few of God's executioners upon excess. The fact that a nation is addicted to drink means that the health of myriads will be ruined; it means that myriads of children with diseased bodies and fatuous minds and depraved impulses will be, in the awful language of an old preacher, "not born into the world, but damned into the world," as idiots, or cripples, or as all but predestined drunkards; the curse of nations; the curse of their neighbors and the curse of themselves; a curse to the very ideal of humanity, which they drag and degrade; poisoning its very life blood, barring its way to the great goal of better deeds. Nor is it only the bodies of men that suffer; it is their souls. Powerless for his deliverance, the conscience of the drunkard is not powerless for his torture. Robert Burns, Lamb and Coleridge have uttered the cry of men who have thus been swept over the cataract. The Spartans, when they wished to turn their children from intemperance, used to show them physical degradation in the shape drunken helots. The spiritual condition of a man who has given himself over to our merciless enemy, is that when he temporarily recovers from his pitiful degradation he feels tenfold the heart-rending anguish of the lost soul. This is the reason why, year by year, drink not only crowds the workhouses with paupers, and the jails with felons, asylums with lunatics, and the hospitals with the diseased; but it also swells, more than any other cause, week by week and year by year, the number of the lost, and those who, through the awful gate of suicide rush with rude impulse into the presence of their God.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union will meet at the residence of Mrs. A. C. Cowing, on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Peterson's Magazine far April comes to us with a lovely steel engraving of "Adeline," one of Tennyson's heroines; a beautiful, double-size, steel, colored fashion plate; and a half hundred other illustrations for stories, work table, fashions, &c. The stories—though "Peterson" is celebrated for good stories—are better than ever. Frank Lee Benedict's, "The Burglary at Archers'," is full of humor. Mrs. Stephen's, "The Motherless Girl," gets more powerful and pathetic as it goes on. The brilliant novelette of New York fashionable life, by Mrs. John Sherwood, "The Lost Ariadne," comes to a conclusion, in which the parties who deserve it are properly made happy. A novelet by a new author, "A Tale of Louisiana Pine Lands," opens with great vigor, is full of local color, and promises to quite rival Cable, in its pictures of Creole life. Certainly every woman of refinement ought to have this magazine, for it is emphatically THE lady's-book; and the terms are but two dollars a year, with great reductions to clubs. This is a good time to subscribe. Specimens are sent gratis, if written for, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOW'S THIS?

It would rather seem as though the farmers of this county were not allowed to draw a breath without the permission of the Pillsbury & Hurlbut Elevator Company. There is an advertisement in the Pioneer Press of a company who offer to ship flax for seed, and a Polk County granger wrote them for information as to terms, &c. The firm paid no attention to him but in due time he received the following reply from the Pillsbury & Hurlbut Elevator Co.:

"Your postal card to ——— has been referred to us for answering, as they do not put out flax in your territory. We, however, have undertaken to do this at stations where we could get orders enough to enable us to ship a full carload. We think ——— is our nearest point to your station. Our prices at stations where we loan seed, provided, as we said before, we get orders enough to warrant us in making loans, will be as follows: American seed $1.75, Russian seed $2. We would advise using the Russian seed. However, whichever you prefer to take will be fully up to sample shown you by our agent, and if same is not entirely free from mustard seed and all other foul seeds, we would not wish you to take it. Our plan is to take a note drawing 10 per cent. interest for the value of the seed, due not later than Nov. 15th, '85, and enter into contract with the parties to receive their entire crop of flax seed grown from seed furnished (less a certain number of bushels they may want to reserve for future seed,) for which we agree to pay the Chicago price of said flax seed on date of delivery, less 32 cents per bushel. This 32 cents is to cover freight and charges that would accrue on the flax between ——— and Chicago."

If this does not show that the P. & H. Co. controls the destinies of this upper country, it certainly shows an attempt. In this case the applicant lives within a few miles of a station to which he would naturally wish his flax seed shipped, but the station to which P. & H. propose to ship his flax seed is between 20 and 30 miles from him. And he must go there if he wants a little flax to sow, clean up and black his boots, take off his hat and give to P. & H. a note that secures to P. & H. all the profit he can make and then haul his crop over 20 miles further than he would to reach his own station. And it is all conditioned on whether the P. & H. company get orders enough to ship carload lots whether anybody can get seed. It seems a farmer hasn't even got the poor privilege of sending to a commission man for a small lot and paying the freights thereon, because no one but the P. & H. company can sell in that "territory!" Farmers who will buy of P. & H. under such circumstances deserve to lose their whole crop and the conditions imposed make it very probable that they will.

Shall Farmers Hold Their Wheat Over Another Harvest?

Eds. Rural Home:—It is a matter of inquiry with many farmers (those who are in circumstances to enable them to to do so) whether there is any inducement for them to hold their present wheat crop now on hand over another harvest in hope of better prices. For the farmer to hoard his crop from year to year, looking for better prices is, in the main bad policy, for the natural shrinkage, waste by vermin, interest on money, and insurance amount to a percentage generally above what can be realized from advance in prices. And, in truth, if we look back at the markets for a period of some twenty years, we see that there has been a gradual decline in prices, so that those who held over were at last obliged to sell for less price than which might have been obtained when the crop was harvested. Such having been the experience of almost all who have held crops over for better prices during past years, there is less prospect that many will hold over the next harvest. There is a limit below which prices cannot be maintained, and that is the limit of cost of production. If a crop does not pay the producer he will not continue its production, for he cannot any more continue to raise a crop at a loss from year to year, than a merchant could sustain himself in business in selling goods below cost to him. Either would alike lead to bankruptcy.

The average cost of raising wheat in every section in that locality, though I hold that under a wise system of husbandry, wheat can be raised at present prices. On the virgin soils of the West grain is much cheaper than in the older countries of the East, but subject to transportation it must also sell much cheaper, and pays no more profit. It is certain that such a condition of markets will lessen production, and it is also just as certain that the present low prices the world over will greatly increase consumption, as for wheaten bread in the old world has been heretofore only a luxury with the laboring classes, that could be allowed but seldom, which is now a cheap and common food. An increased consumption with usual production will soon reduce any surplus that may be now held in the markets of the world.

But there is another view of the present condition of markets which will soon be felt. There is an universal cry of over production as the cause of depressed prices. That the past two harvests have been abundant there is no doubt, but that there is any unusual surplus, or will be at the next harvest, is very doubtful. Markets are controlled by supply and demand, but both supply and demand [illegible] and it often happens that [illegible] made more in the [illegible] than in [illegible]

The cry of over production in our country, as well as elsewhere, has been the great cause of depressing markets and not any excessive supply accumulated on hand. There is now less wheat visible in this country than there was a year ago, and the same is true of the English market, and it is reported at the great wheat growing sections of the West that there is less than usual left in the hands of farmers at this season of the year. The crop of England at the last harvest, was estimated to be the extraordinary yield of thirty bushels per acre. It is now known that it did not exceed twenty-eight bushels, and the supply on hand is several million bushels less than it was one year ago, and the acreage sown to wheat is decreasing from year to year, as prices have sunk below the cost of production. In our own country it is sure that the extreme low prices have lessened the acreage sown to winter wheat, and that oats and barley will be largely substituted for spring wheat the coming spring, so that if the season should be favorable and a full yield be harvested the coming season, there can be no claim of over-supply to keep prices below average rates.

With these views of present conditions it seems quite probable that those who hold over will be able to realize within the next twelve months a remunerative advance above present prices. The claim set forth by some English authorities that ere long India will furnish all the deficiency of the English market in breadstuffs, and that we cannot count on their market for our surplus, is more a scare than any real prospect. India, it is true, has a large territory, and doubtless millions of acres adapted to wheat growing, but she has also a dense population to be supported from the soil of an ignorant superstitious race. There is a large inland transportation before reaching seaport for shipment, and even at the very low wages paid for labor, and cheap transportation, they cannot put grain on the English market below current prices, even allowing they have the grain to spare, but which cannot be expected until their primitive agriculture is superceded, and a better civilization prevails. There is no country in the world that can supply the English market with wheat of like quality, cheaper than we can, notwithstanding the high price of labor in our country.

Nor is it only the bodies of men that suffer, it is their souls. Powerless for his deliverance, the conscience of the drunkard is not powerless for his torture. Robert Burns, Lamb and Coleridge have uttered the cry of men who have thus been swept over the cataract. The Spartans, when they wished to turn their children from intemperance, used to show them physical degradation in the shape drunken helots. The spiritual condition of a man who has given himself over to our merciless enemy, is that when he temporarily recovers from his pitiful degradation he feels tenfold the heart-rending anguish of the lost soul. This is the reason why, year by year, drink not only crowds the workhouses with paupers, and the jails with felons, asylums with lunatics, and the hospitals with the diseased, but it also swells, more than any other cause, week by week and year by year, the number of the lost, and those who, through the awful gate of suicide rush with rude impulse into the presence of their God.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union will meet at the residence of Mrs. A. C. Cowing, on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Peterson's Magazine for April comes to us with a lovely steel engraving of "Adeline," one of Tennyson's heroines; a beautiful, double-size, steel, colored fashion plate, and a half hundred other illustrations for stories, work table, fashions, &c. The stories—though "Peterson" is celebrated for good stories—are better than ever. Frank Lee Benedict's "The Burglary at Archers," is full of humor. Mrs. Stephen's, "The Motherless Girl," gets more powerful and pathetic as it goes on. The brilliant novelette of New York fashionable life, by Mrs. John Sherwood, "The Lost Ariadne," comes to a conclusion, in which the parties who deserve it are properly made happy. A novelet by a new author, "A Tale of Louisiana Pine Lands," opens with great vigor, is full of local color, and promises to quite rival Cable in its pictures of Creole life. Certainly every woman of refinement ought to have this magazine, for it is emphatically the lady's book, and the terms are but two dollars a year, with great reductions to clubs. This is a good time to subscribe. Specimens are sent gratis, if written for, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Gath's" Letters appear only in the Minneapolis Tribune. Read them in Sunday and Wednesday's edition of the daily, and in every issue of the weekly Tribune.

Euclid Items.

From the Olive Leaf.

No sleighing at present, but plenty of time to get snow between now and May 1st.

The Keystone Farm Co. have sold three carloads of seed wheat to the Fisher Farm Co., at Beltrami.

Seven horse races were run over the Euclid track Saturday afternoon and the Teal family got beautifully left by the town horses. They brought in an unknown, but it was not fast enough to beat the Jockey Club's unknown.

Twelve of the Euclid young men took in the Warren roller rink last Monday night, and in a short time they had the whole rink to themselves.

W. H. Graver has recovered from his injuries so as to be able to walk without crutches, but when he faces south his game foot points east.

The Red Wing Sun says that Down's, of the State Legislature, downed all other cranks when he introduced a bill to regulate roller skating.

Wm. Cronkhite has gone up to the Lake of the Woods country, prospecting.

Mrs. L. S. Hancock returned home last Friday.

Mrs. J. S. Chapin is expected home next week.

FISHER, Minn., March 4th, 1885.

Editor Bulletin:—As some considerable censure has been put upon the Board of County Commissioners for their action in deciding to build two bridges in the county, and especially the one at Crookston, I would respectfully ask space in your paper to give some of the reasons for such action.

1st. The petition presented to the Board was very large and represented a great part of the tax payers of the county and signed by nearly all the farmers living southeast of Crookston.

2d. It was shown before the Board that people living southeast of Crookston have to go south of the elevators in Carman and cross the railroad track before they can get to the city of Crookston, making about two miles extra travel time they go to market.

3d. As the city of Crookston alone pays nearly one-fifth of the taxes of the county, and for the last two years had cheerfully paid taxes to make improvement in other parts of the county, and have had nothing themselves, the Board considered that they were entitled to as much consideration as other parts of the county.

The Board thought it much better to pay for the bridges with bonds paying 6 per cent interest than with orders, as 1-7 of one mill on the present valuation will pay the interest and create a sinking fund sufficient to pay off the bonds at maturity, while the issuing of that amount of orders would depreciate the credit of the county, a thing we considered much to be deprecated.

Very truly yours,

E. A. BRADISH,
Com. for 2d District.

The Minneapolis Tribune Company has just been reorganized with a capital of $500,00. Their newspaper property alone is valued at $200,000, and their new building is paying ten per cent. on $215,000, which was the actual cost of property when completed. There is not a better equipped newswaper in the west than the Tribune.

MORTGAGE SALE.

First Publication Jan. 22d, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of eighteen hundred and eighty seven 65-100 dollars ($1887.65-100,) which is claimed to be due, and is due, at the date of this notice, upon two certain promissory notes secured by a mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Poline Angelina McIntyre and H. D. McIntyre, to Morris R. Brown, bearing date the eleventh day of November A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 27th day of November A. D. 1882, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 400, which mortgage was for a good and valuable consideration on the 23d day of February A. D. 1883 duly assigned to Joseph Kelso, and said assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for said County on the 27th day of February A. D. 1883, in book "K" of mortgages on pages 260 and 261, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed; and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nineteen (19) Block number sixteen (16) in the original Townsite of Crookston according to a plat of said Townsite, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars ($50) attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State on the 12th day of March A. D. 1885, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., of said day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

WHEREAS, Pierre Dulude, as mortgagor, did on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of July 6th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situated in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The south half of the northwest quarter, and the south half of the northeast quarter, of Section fourteen (14,) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west, of the fifth principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of three hundred and twenty-five dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with three interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage, and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 6th day of July, A. D. 1881, at 2:45 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 87, 88, 89 and 90; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and fifty-eight and 10-100 dollars, due as principal and interest upon said mortgage on the first day of July, A. D. 1884, and the said principal and interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of three hundred and seventy-seven and 40-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. Hammond, one of the above mentioned mortgagees, died intestate on on the third day of February, A. D. 1882, at Middlebury, in the County of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas Thomas A. Hammond, Charles E. Bush and Thad. M. Chapman, of said County of Addison and State of Vermont, were on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1882, appointed administrators of the estate of said John L. Hammond, deceased, by the Probate Court for the District of Addison, State of Vermont; and whereas an authenticated copy of the appointment of said administrators was, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1882, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the postoffice in the City of Crookston, in said County, on the fourth day of April A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated February 18th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Feb. 19th, 1885.]

WHEREAS Israel Dion, as mortgagor, did on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, duly execute and deliver to J. L. Hammond and C. E. Bush, of Addison County, Vermont, as mortgagees, his mortgage bearing date of January 25th, A. D. 1881, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagees the following described lands, situate in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section eighteen (18,) in Township one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range forty-four (44) west of the 5th principal meridian, to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars with interest, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with five interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagor to said mortgagees, which said mortgage was on the 25th day of January A. D. 1881, at 3 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 92, 93 94 and 95; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the sum of forty-six dollars, due as interest upon said mortgage and the said interest is still unpaid and due; and whereas, said mortgagor having failed to pay the taxes lawfully assessed on the premises in said mortgage described, for the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, the undersigned did on the fifth day of September, 1883, pay said taxes and all interest and penalties thereon, amounting in all to the sum of thirty-two and 21-100 dollars, for which sum so paid the undersigned hold the treasurer's receipt, and claim a lien on said mortgaged premises for the amount so paid with interest from the date of such payment; and whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of said mortgagor to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagees, their heirs or assigns, to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable; and whereas the legal representatives of John L. Hammond, deceased, one of said mortgagees, and Charles E. Bush, the surviving mortgagee, have exercised their option to consider and declare, and do hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and whereas there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice including taxes paid as aforesaid the sum of three hundred and fifteen and 53-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof; and whereas John L. STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss.
County of Polk. In Probate Court.

Special term, held Feb. 25th, 1885.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Anderson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of E. E. Lommen the administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come to his hands, and the disposition thereof; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, and a description of all the real estate of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions thereof; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of said real estate or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the debts of said deceased. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, and that it is necessary in order to pay the same, to sell a part of the whole of said real estate; and that it will be for the best interests of said estate that said real estate shall be sold at private sale.

It is therefore ordered, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before the Judge of this Court on Saturday the eleventh day of April A. D. 1885, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the office of the Probate Judge, in the City of Crookston, in said County, then and there to show cause, if any there be, why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell said real estate according to the prayer of said petition.

And it is further ordered, That a copy of this order shall be published for four successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, the last of which publication shall be at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County, and personally served on all persons interested in said estate residing in said County, at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, and upon all other persons interested according to law.

Dated at Crookston this 25th day of February A. D. 1885.

By the Court,
ROBERT J. MONTAGUE,
[illegible] Judge of Probate.

EMIGRATION OLD AND NEW.

Talk with an Emigration Agent on the Improved Methods of Transporting Population from Europe.

St. Paul Globe.

In conversation with A. E. Johnson, the emigration agent, a Globe reporter learned some interesting facts concerning the modus operandi, past and present, of transporting immigrants from Europe, which forms so important a factor in the growth of the Northwest.

It it within the memory of many of the Globe readers, when emigrants all came over in sailing vessels, making the passage between Liverpool and America in from four to ten weeks, depending on the wind and weather. Emigrant agents in those days contracted with ship owners for the entire passage space of a sailing vessel for a particular date. Usually these contracts were made in the fall or winter for the following spring and summer, and the agent necessarily took considerable risk of not securing the required quota of passengers to fill the vessel. This led subsequently to the establishment of regular lines of clipper sailing vessels between Liverpool and Boston or Bremen and Quebec, and later on, between Scandinavian ports and America. These vessels usually departed monthly during May, June July. August and September. Intending emigrants from the interior would arrange with the agents or owners of these vessels for passage for certain dates, and in order that vessel owners might not be disappointed in the number of passages for each vessel the system of "hand money" was introduced. This is: The emigrants would make a deposit to the agent to apply on passage which, in case the emigrant failed to take a passage as agreed upon, was forfeited.

The price of passage by the clipper shippers from British ports ranged from £8 to £10, or from $40 to $50, and from continental ports about $10 higher. This included rations of uncooked provisions, which were served weekly to the emigrants, but each passenger had to attend to the cooking individually. On this account a superintendent was usually elected by the passengers who

and to avoid the inconvenience of each cooking on his "own hook" the supplies were pooled and when cooked served to the passengers pro rata. In cases where German or Scandinavian passengers failed to obtain passage in direct sailing vessels, and were obliged to cross the North sea to England and take passage by one of the Liverpool vessels, it frequently happened that the different nationalities had bloody fights in the kitchen, in which kettles and pots played havoc on craniums. Many of these emigrants, after having earned some money in America, made remittance to their families and friends in the old country, by the very captains with whom they had come out. This led to the system of sending money home to be used expressly for passage tickets. It was not an unusual occurrence for the newly arrived emigrant to make payment to the company's agent in America for passage for a particular person, who was in turn notified by the vessel owners on the other side that his passage was prepaid and that he had the privilege of emigrating, but that no money would be paid him.

HIGH RATES.

Between 1840 and 1850, when steamers began to ply between England and America, the sailing vessels enjoyed a very lucrative emigrant business, which was not relinquished to the steamship lines without a struggle, and as late as 1860 the sailing vessels were still in the field for emigrant business, securing, however, but meager patronage.

In the early days of emigration by the steamship lines the passage money was invariably required to be paid in gold, and the price was usually $40. This gold rate during the war of the rebellion made the price of emigrant passage range from $80 to $100. With the disappearance of the premium gold the steamship lines concluded to accept currency in payment, and the establishment of several new lines, anxious for a share of the emigrant trafic at the then high-ruling prices of $40, brought about a system of differential rates which has ever since been maintained through all the years of competition, until to-day this very problem of "equal" or "differential" emigrant rates has brought the price of passage tickets down to the ridiculous figure of $10. The steamship lines appointed a few booking agents at such important points as Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Albany, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, and later at Chicago and St. Louis, but not beyond the Missouri or intermediate points between Chicago and St. Louis or Chicago and Dubuque. Purchasers of passage tickets in Illinois, for instance, had the choice of either going to Chicago, St. Louis or Dubuque, to reach either of which places it required in many cases several days.

THEY POOLED THEIR ISSUES

and in order to avoid the inconvenient delay neighbors would club together, usually in the winter, and commission some trusty person who would go to the nearest large city and buy passage tickets for the entire party. Now that the price of emigrant passage has been reduced to $10 every steamship line has its local agents in every city, village and town and at every cross-roads. Country, merchants, lawyers, bankers insurance and real estate agents, and even farmers are passage agents, and their solicitations make life a burden to the would-be purchaser of passage tickets, or the foreign-born citizens who may wish to go back for a visit.

There are now upwards of twenty regular passenger lines competing for emigrant business, each with its peculiar advantages and inducements, and just now the competition is keener than ever before known in the history of emigration. The system of booking emigrants has been so improved and is now so complete and simple that it is considered a matter of no particular moment to book a family of a dozen persons ranging from 1 to 70 years of age from the remotest parts of Germany, Italy, Switzerland or Norway to any railroad station in America, and have them come through, without loss of gross-vater's walking stick even. Not only is provision made for both inland and ocean transportation, but the payment of money, to the passenger, either before starting or at the port of embarkation, or on landing in America, may be included in the passage order. Some lines have adopted the system of having the agent at the port of embarkation to whom application may be sent by the passengers previous to sailing, notifying the local agent in America who has issued the order for passage on what steamer and day of sailing the particular passenger is expected to sail, and the American agent in turn advises the purchaser. The leading emigration agents are fully advised in advance on what steamers passengers will embark, and the arrival of every steamer at American ports on which the agent has passengers, is telegraphed, and the time of departure from the seaport of such passengers. This enables the agent to notify friends at what hour to expect the passengers. While it is understood that children under 12 years of age are not forwarded by the steamship companies unless accompanied by some adult person, yet it sometimes happens that children under 10 come all the way from Norway through to Dakota alone. Cases are known where such children have been labeled with their name, the name and address of their relatives to whom they are going.

THE TICKETS.

The prepaid steamship order is rather an elaborate affair, and contains nearly all the information that an emigrant would wish. One drawn by the Thingvalla Steamship line's agent at Crookston, No. 20053, has in large letters across the top the name of the company, announcing direct communication with Scandinavia and New York by the Hekla Geiser, Island, Heimdal, Thingvalla or Kjobenhavn steamships from Copenhagen, Christiania, Christiansand, Stavanger, Bergen, Drontheim, Gotenburg, Malmo or Stockholm. It then has the general agent, Alfred Mortensen, Chicago, and A. E. Johnson & Co., general northwestern agents, St. Paul. The ticket in question was issued in Crookston, Minn., and was made out to Ole Olson by the agent, W. M. Ross, who gave receipt for $120 as passage money for the transportation of Gulbrand Oppergaard, aged 50, Marie 45, Hans 20, Gustav 16, Gulbrand 13, Nigeborg 10 and Halvor 8, in any of the Thingvalla steamships from Christiana to New York. With this goes the which gives the number of the steamship ticket it is ordered with and its own number, which is No. J. 14799, drawn at Crookston by W. M. Ross, and gives transportation from New York to Crookston on account of the [illegible] line for the five adults and two children named on the steamship ticket by the West Shore route and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway, the ticket being good for one year. A notice is attached, which specifies that if the ticket is not used the order must be returned to the purchaser, and in the event all the passengers named do not arrive, notice must be given when the order is exchanged upon landing at New York.

THE MOST IMPORTANT FEATURE

of these prepaid emigrant tickets is that they are not transferable, which is a guarantee to the purchaser that if the passenger for whom the tickets is bought declines to emigrate the tickets are to be returned and the passage money will be refunded to the purchaser, and to him only. The losses incurred by the steamship companies, or their general agents, on account of dishonest local agents, is insignificant compared with the volume of business and the aggregate amount of money handled. Tickets are supposed not to be honored without being advised, but it is a rare occurrence that an emigrant is refused passage on this account.

The importance of the emigration business in the Northwest may be inferred from the fact that a certain agency in St. Paul transacted a business in passage and money remittance during 1884, to the amount of $400,000. The Amount of travel between Europe and America by our foreign-born citizens is increasing rapidly, and as high as 600 Scandinavians, principally from the Northwest, have been known to take passage on a single steamer from New York, and as many as three hundred have left St. Paul on a through train for New York, en route to Europe.

The influence on emigration of large numbers of our people visiting their former homes, bringing good reports of their own successes and prospects, cannot be overestimated.

Competition between the ocean lines, as well as the railroad companies, will always keep rates between Europe and the Northwest at the lowest possible figures, and the indications are that this class of travel will increase year by year, all of which will tend to keep our natural advantages and inducements properly before the emigrating classes of Europe. From reliable sources it is learned that upwards of 8,000 passage tickets have been sold in St. Paul since January 1s, and, allowing the same number for Minneapolis, it is a moderate estimate to say that 10,000 have been sold in Minnesota, applying the ratio of one cash emigrant to each prepaid, and we have a direct addition of 20,000 already secured this year to our population, which will be increased materially during the remaining 10 months even should both ocean and inland emigrant rates be restored to former prices, which is hardly probable.

The American Bazar, New York, for March, just received, is a brilliant number of this popular ladies' paper. Its fashion illustrations are superb, its literary contents excellent, and its whole make-up clean and interesting, in short it is emphatically a paper suited to the home circle. All this makes it amply worth its almost nominal subscription price of only One Dollar a year, but not [illegible] tle, its proprietors offer a choice from a list of premiums which is really wonderful. As a sample, 37 complete stories by best writers, or 65 pieces of popular music (words and notes), or a dictionary that retails for one dollar, etc. We advise our lady readers to send 10 cents for a sample copy and see it for themselves.

The Minneapolis Tribune Company has just been reorganized with a capital of $500,00. Their newspaper property alone is valued at $200,000, and their new building is paying ten per cent. on $215,000, which was the actual cost of property when completed. There is not a better equipped newspaper in the west than the Tribune.

"YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO MISS IT."

"An eight-page, forty-column weekly a whole year for only 50 cents." This is the offer made by the publishers of the American Rural Home, of Rochester, N. Y., to all persons who send in their year's subscription before April 1st, 1885. This is an opportunity to secure one of the best farm journals in the world at a bargain. The Rural is the brightest, cheapest and most popular weekly published for the farmer and his family. It is not a paper of mushroom growth, like many so-called farm journals that are at present being extensively advertised, but has been published regularly for fifteen years. Many of the ablest Agriculturists and Horticulturists write for it. EMIGRATION OLD AND NEW.

Talk with an Emigration Agent on the Improved Methods of Transporting Population from Europe.

St. Paul Globe.

In conversation with A. E. Johnson, the emigration agent, a Globe reporter learned some interesting facts concerning the modus operandi, past and present, of transporting immigrants from Europe, which forms so important a factor in the growth of the Northwest.

It it within the memory of many of the Globe readers, when emigrants all came over in sailing vessels, making the passage between Liverpool and America in from four to ten weeks, depending on the wind and weather. Emigrant agents in those days contracted with ship owners for the entire passage space of a sailing vessel for a particular date. Usually these contracts were made in the fall or winter for the following spring and summer, and the agent necessarily took considerable risk of not securing the required quota of passengers to fill the vessel. This led subsequently to the establishment of regular lines of clipper sailing vessels between Liverpool and Boston or Bremen and Quebec, and later on, between Scandinavian ports and America. These vessels usually departed monthly during May, June, July, August and September. Intending emigrants from the interior would arrange with the agents or owners of these vessels for passage for certain dates, and in order that vessel owners might not be disappointed in the number of passages for each vessel the system of "hand money" was introduced. This is, the emigrants would make a deposit to the agent to apply on passage which, in case the emigrant failed to take a passage as agreed upon, was forfeited.

The price of passage by the clipper shippers from British ports ranged from £8 to £10, or from $40 to $50, and from continental ports about $10 higher. This included rations of uncooked provisions, which were served weekly to the emigrants, but each passenger had to attend to his cooking individually. On this account a superintendent was usually elected by the passengers who

and to avoid the inconvenience of each cooking on his own hook, the supplies were pooled and when cooked served to the passengers pro rata. In cases where German or Scandinavian passengers failed to obtain passage in direct sailing vessels and were obliged to cross the North sea to England and take passage by one of the Liverpool vessels, it frequently happened that the different nationalities had bloody fights in the kitchen, in which kettles and pots played havoc on craniums. Many of these emigrants, after having earned some money in America, made remittance to their families and friends in the old country by the very captains with whom they had come out. This led to the system of sending money home to be used expressly for passage tickets. It was not an unusual occurrence for the newly arrived emigrant to make payment to the company's agent in America for passage for a particular person who was in turn notified by the vessel owners on the other side that his passage was prepaid and that he had the privilege of emigrating, but that no money would be paid him [illegible]

[illegible]

Between 1840 and 1850, when steamers began to ply between England and America, the sailing vessels enjoyed a very lucrative emigrant business which was not relinquished to the steamship lines without a struggle, and as late as 1860 the sailing vessels were still in the field for emigrant business, securing [illegible]

In the early days of emigration by the steamship lines the passage money [illegible] currency in payment, and the establishment of several new lines, anxious for a share of the emigrant trafic at the then high-ruling prices of $40, brought about a system of differential rates which has ever since been maintained through all the years of competition, until to-day this very problem of "equal" or "differential" emigrant rates has brought the price of passage tickets down to the ridiculous figure of $10. The steamship lines appointed a few booking agents at such important points as Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Albany, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, and later at Chicago and St. Louis, but not beyond the Missouri or intermediate points between Chicago and St. Louis or Chicago and Dubuque. Purchasers of passage tickets in Illinois, for instance, had the choice of either going to Chicago, St. Louis or Dubuque, to reach either of which places it required in many cases several days.

THEY POOLED THEIR ISSUES

and in order to avoid the inconvenient delay neighbors would club together, usually in the winter, and commission some trusty person who would go to the nearest large city and buy passage tickets for the entire party. Now that the price of emigrant passage has been reduced to $10 every steamship line has its local agents in every city, village and town and at every cross-roads. Country merchants, lawyers, bankers, insurance and real estate agents, and even farmers are passage agents, and their solicitations make life a burden to the would-be purchaser of passage tickets, or the foreign-born citizens who may wish to go back for a visit.

There are now upwards of twenty regular passenger lines competing for emigrant business, each with its peculiar advantages and inducements, and just now the competition is keener than ever before known in the history of emigration. The system of booking emigrants has been so improved and is now so complete and simple that it is considered a matter of no particular moment to book a family of a dozen persons ranging from 1 to 70 years of age from the remotest parts of Germany, Italy, Switzerland or Norway to any railroad station in America, and have them come through without loss of grossvater's walking stick even. Not only is provision made for both inland and ocean transportation, but the payment of money to the passenger, either before starting or at the port of embarkation, or on landing in America, may be included in the passage order. Some lines have adopted the system of having the agent at the port of embarkation to whom application may be sent by the passengers previous to sailing, notifying the local agent in America who has issued the order for passage on what steamer and day of sailing the particular passenger is expected to sail, and the American agent in turn advises the purchaser. The leading emigration agents are fully advised in advance on what steamers passengers will embark, and the arrival of every steamer at American ports on which the agent has passengers is telegraphed, and the time of departure from the seaport of such passengers. This enables the agent to notify friends at what hour to expect the passengers. While it is understood that children under 12 years of age are not forwarded by the steamship companies unless accompanied by some adult person, yet it sometimes happens that children under 10 come all the way from Norway through to Dakota alone. Cases are known where such children have been labeled with their name, the name and address of their relatives to whom they are going.

THE TICKET.

The prepaid steamship order is rather an elaborate affair and contains nearly all the information that an emigrant would wish. One drawn by the Thingvalla Steamship line agent at Crookston, No. 2005, has in large letters across the top the name of the company, announcing direct communication with Scandinavia and New York by the Hekla, Geiser, Island, [illegible], Thingvalla [illegible] steamships, from Copenhagen, Christiania, Christiansand, Stavanger, Bergen, Drontheim, Gotenburg, Malmo or Stockholm. Further it has the general agent, Alfred Morton, Chicago, and A. E. Johnson & Co., general northwestern agents, St. Paul. The ticket in question was issued in Crookston, Minn., and [illegible] Ole Olson by [illegible] who gave a receipt for [illegible] passage money for the transportation of [illegible]

[illegible] line for the five adults and two children named on the steamship ticket by the West Shore route and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway, the ticket being good for one year. A notice is attached, which specifies that if the ticket is not used the order must be returned to the purchaser, and in the event all the passengers named do not arrive, notice must be given when the order is exchanged upon landing at New York.

THE MOST IMPORTANT FEATURE

of these prepaid emigrant tickets is that they are not transferable, which is a guarantee to the purchaser that if the passenger for whom the tickets is bought declines to emigrate the tickets are to be returned and the passage money will be refunded to the purchaser, and to him only. The losses incurred by the steamship companies for their general agents, on account of dishonest local agents, is insignificant compared with the volume of business and the aggregate amount of money handled. Tickets are supposed not to be honored without being advised, but it is a rare occurrence that an emigrant is refused passage on this account.

The importance of the emigration business in the Northwest may be inferred from the fact that a certain agency in St. Paul transacted a business in passage and money remittance during 1884 to the amount of $400,000. The amount of travel between Europe and America by our foreign-born citizens is increasing rapidly, and as high as 600 Scandinavians, principally from the Northwest, have been known to take passage on a single steamer from New York, and as many as three hundred have left St. Paul on a through train for New York, en route to Europe. The influence on emigration of a large numbers of our people visiting their former homes bringing good reports of their own successes and prospects, cannot be over estimated.

Competition between the ocean lines as well as the railroad companies will always keep rates between Europe and the Northwest at the lowest possible figures, and the indications are that this class of travel will increase year by year, all of which will tend to keep our natural advantages and inducements properly before the emigrating classes of Europe. From reliable sources it is learned that upwards of 8,000 passage tickets have been sold in St. Paul since [illegible] tle, its proprietors offer a choice from a list of premiums which is really wonderful. As a sample, 37 complete stories by best writers, or 65 pieces of popular music (words and notes), or a dictionary that retails for one dollar, etc. We advise our lady readers to send 10 cents for a sample copy and see it for themselves.

The Minneapolis Tribune Company has just been reorganized with a capital of $500,00. Their newspaper property alone is valued at $200,000, and their new building is paying ten per cent. on $215,000, which was the actual cost of property when completed. There is not a better equipped newswaper in the west than the Tribune.

'ROUND HOME.

Lester Grey returned on Friday from a winter's visit in Canada.

Sunday and Monday were not the warmest weather that ever was.

Mitchell & Co. are moving into one of Dobson's brick stores on Broadway.

Conductor J. B. Copeland took his train again on Wednesday evening.

Peter Cornelius and Ole Bang went out to the Thirteen on a voyage of discovery this week.

Billy Jenne has returned from Fergus Falls and is working in Lee & Herrick's flouring mill.

For embroideries in every style and in endless varieties and prices, go to the New York store.

Saturday had all the makins' of a blizzard except the snow. Old Boreas did "whooper up" lively.

Hon. H. Steenerson returned on Friday from his duties at St. Paul. Glad to get back to civilization.

Gaze upon the new ad of the New York Store and drop in and see what George can do for you. He is on deck everytime ready to supply the wants of all his numerous customers.

Are you going to the World's Fair at New Orleans? Whether you are or not if you need a trunk or valise it will pay you to go to the New York store and price their stock of these goods.

Fred Chapin returned on Friday from a visit to the old folks at home, in old Prattsburgh, Steuben Co., N. Y. Fred has had a good time and returns refreshed to his duties on the railroad.

Peter Cornelius lost a valuable cow last week. He was getting out ice and while he was at dinner with the men the cow came along and being too inquisitive slipped into the hole in the river. She was drowned when found.

The New York store shows an endless variety of dress goods in every style and price. Elegant patterns for prices to suit the times.

Our citizens were treated to a novel sight on Monday—a partial eclipse of the sun. Smoked glasses were called into requisition and many an eye turned skyward to see the moon do its level best to cover up old Sol. It succeeded within a third or so.

That coffee-mill what you see hanging onto McKinnon's Bro's wagon in front of their shop is not a coffee mill by a long shot—it is one of those newfangled broadcast seeders that will sow 80 acres in a day. It is said to be the boss business by those who have tried it.

Uncle Boston Smith, State Sunday School Missionary, will conduct the services at the Baptist church Thursday and Friday evenings of this week. On Sunday he will address the children of the Sabbath School, and requests a full attendance, as he has something interesting to say to them.

Senator Steenerson informs us that J. M. Palmer received $230 of the Pillsbury & Hurlbut Elevator, Co., in settlement of his claims. Mr. Steenerson, it will be remembered was appointed to take the testimony in the case. We intended to have published a full account of the proceedings in the case but have failed to obtain the papers.

Mr. J. B. Merrill was up from Fisher this week and dropped in to "encourage" the JOURNAL by renewal on the cash in advance plan. He gave us his experience in flax-raising. Raised a quantity a few years ago on breaking, got a good yield and a good price, but has never succeeded in getting a good crop of anything else on the same land since, though crops all about it were excellent. Considers flax very exhausting to soil.

Gene Stilwell, of Averill, Russell & Carpenter, St. Paul, was enjoying city life on Tuesday and Wednesday. By the way we may miss his periodical visits for the future as he, together with F. D. Wright, has purchased Mr. Russell's interest in the firm, and Gene will hereafter remain at the house. The firm name will be Averill, Carpenter & Co. Mr. Wright is, like Gene, one of the largest hearted fellows in the business and deserves all the good luck in the business. "Here's Ho!"

If you want cottons, bleached, half-bleached, pilow-case goods, or anything in that line, call and examine the fine stock at the New York store.

On Thursday last Mr. Chas. H. Mix received the sad intelligence of the sudden death of his wife at Oxford, Ohio, from paralysis. Mr. Mix received a letter from his daughter Cassie, saying that her mother was not feeling quite as well as usual and a few minutes after he had read the letter a telegram was received announcing that Mrs. Mix was dangerously ill and bidding him come at once. A hour or so later a telegram announced that she could not live but a few hours and shortly before the arrival of the train on which Mr. Mix was to leave arrived another telegram was received announcing the death of Mrs. Mix. The Major went to St. Paul and from there to Chicago where he was to meet his daughters and the remains of his wife. Fred and his wife went to St. Paul on Monday evening to attend the funeral. The news of this sudden death is received in sorrow by the many friends of deceased in this [illegible]

"Uncle Boston" arrived to-day and will lecture to-night and to-morrow night at the Baptist chapel and will remain over Sunday, holding services at the Baptist chapel.

Harry Bender arrived on Tuesday and expects a carload of horses to-day or to-morrow.

Fred Anderson has opened a place on the corner of Main and Robert where he will dispense the plain or ornamental at a moment's notice. Fred knows how to mix in proper proportions.

St. Paul does not seem to have lost its attractions to our people yet. Among those who visited that Mecca last week were John N. Ives, Rev. C. E. Page, E. D. Childs, J. G. McGrew and W. M. Ross.

J. W. Ralston reports the arrival of a new settler, who arrived on the 17th inst. in a very destitute condition, financially considered. However he is very healthy, weighs 11 pounds, and John thinks he has the makin's of a stout healthy granger in about 21 years.

They also have on hand a fine assortment of carriages and buggies of their own manufacture which is a good guarantee of their worth.

Charlie Seely took a trip down to Wahpeton last week and says that he had the boss time. He enjoyed a ride around the city and Breckenridge, behind Frank Tuttle's spirited trotter, while Frank handled the ribbons and took in the skating rink at W., where he beheld the the grand champion race of America between F. Gen. Grant will doubtless soon pass away. The old hero who has faced death on many a battle-field is fast succumbing to the insidious foe that is sapping his life. The cancer in his mouth is of the malignant kind and being at the roots of the tongue cannot be cut away without removing the tongue and a portion of the roof of the mouth, which operation would doubtless kill the patient. The latest reports show the General's condition to be critical in the extreme, and it is said he cannot live to exceed ten days.

Polk County Sunday School Convention.

It has been arranged to hold a County Sunday School Convention in the M. E. Church, Crookston, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 24th and 25th next.

Each Sunday School is requested to make its pastor, superintendent, and three others, delegates to represent them in the convention. Norman, Kittson and Marshall County Sunday Schools are invited to send delegates. Free entertainment will be given all attending the convention.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says; "The Welcome Oats grow from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 23 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 76 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

MY DREAM.

A slender form, a girlish face,
  Blue eyes, and golden hair;
Sweet lips, dear lips! and sunny smiles,
  A vision angel fair!
Oh, gentle eyes! oh, cruel eyes!
  Why will you haunt me so?
Filled with the old sweet tenderness
  The love of long ago.

A merry laugh, a pleasant voice,
  Sweet chimes, like silver bells;
Old music unforgotten still,
  Around me rings and swells.
Oh, wooing voice! oh, cruel voice!
  Why will you haunt me so?
Speaking the old sweet tenderness,
  The love of long ago.

An angel form, a blessed face,
  A picture fading never!
The anguish of a vanished hope,
  That clings to me forever.
Oh, blessed dream! oh, cruel dream
  Why will you haunt me so?
Sad with the old sweet tenderness,
  The love of long ago.

THE BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

Lois stitched away night and day at red shirts and blue-and-white shirts and gray. They were the spells and talismans that kept her all the bright hours of the brightest days, as well as the dark hours of the darkest ones, in the corner of the window of her dingy little room.

It was not a dirty room. She kept it clean, but a mean yellow paper, and mean yellow doors, and a blackened ceiling, and second-hand furniture, will look dingy; and tasteful rooms with flowers and birds, and pretty bits of lace curtains, and all that, cannot be kept up by an honest young woman who lives by making flannel shirts and has a little sister to care for also.

To be sure, Trot was the joy of Lois's life—the one thing she had left to love.

Once they had been so happy. Their father, a merry, black-eyed sea captain, had kept a home for them in a sweet country place. Their mother, bright cheeked and curly haired, had been an elder sister to Lois. Oh, what merry times they had had!

But the dear father's ship went down one dreadful night, and when the news came his wife only lived long enough to kiss the little dead baby they put into her arms, and Lois at 18 and Trot at 8 were left alone in the world.

The house was sold. The orphans were not too well dealt with. There were debts to be paid; and, though one or two kind captains made up a purse for the little girls, they had families themselves, were not rich, and were men who were always on the wing. Still there was enough to live on for a year, and Jack bade Lois be of good cheer.

Jack was engaged to Lois. This voyage ended, he would be first mate, and then, if she would marry him, there would always be a home for Trot. Lois would have married Jack if he had no chance of promotion, and terrible as was her grief, his love kept her heart from breaking.

But the clouds were gathering darker and darker about her young life. Jack sailed away one day, kissing her before he went with long, lingering kisses, and bidding her think only of his return.

And alas! that happened which happens now and then on the great ocean—the vessel was not heard of again. It was never spoken; it did not arrive in port; no vestige of its existence was ever washed ashore where men who understand such things could find it. No figurehead, no steamer marked with name, no bottle in which some bit of hurried writing told its fate.

After awhile old sailors knew nothing ever would be heard of the ship, and they told Lois, whose heart still clung to hope.

And now three years were gone, and Lois stitched at the flannel shirts in her city room, and Trot grew up thin and quiet and eager-eyed wondering at fate, and always looking back on merry Christmas days and midsummer holidays and papa's home-comings, and the curly haired mother who laughed so much, and Lois, with dimples in her cheeks, walking with Jack in the moonlight, and at herself, a rosy child, with a store of dolls and sugar-plums and pretty pink and blue dresses, kisses innumerable, and she the pet of the household, as though she were some one else.

Yet Lois loved her, and she always found herself in her arms, when she awoke in the morning. Only Lois was sad and poor, and there seemed nothing bright in life.

On her eleventh birthday, to be sure, she had a surprise, a beautiful book with gilt cover and gay pictures. She did not guess how much night work Lois had done to earn it, and now she was hard at work thinking, thinking, thinking, what she should do that she might give Lois a present on her birthday. Lois would be 21 on the 3d of May.

To do this Trot knew that she must earn some money. She could not sew well enough, and though she was industrious and did all the housework and bought the provisions and cooked them and helped carry home the bundles, that made no money.

When Trot went to the bakers for bread, or to the butcher's for say, a neck of mutton or some sausages, or to the cheap store, where coffee was cheaper than it was anywhere else, she thought of this constantly.

She asked the prices of the pretty things in the shops, of collars, and cuffs, of neckties, of books, of jewelry of the cheaper sort found in trimming stores.

Things seemed very dear to Trot, but one who only hoped might as well hope for pounds as for pence.

And, sometimes, Trot lying alone in bed before Lois finished her work and came also to rest her pretty, weary head on the coarse pillow case, would wish that there were fairies like the fairies in her book, who came at night to put shillings into good children's shoes. At last the very day before Lois's birthday, it seemed to Trot that this happened.

Trot had a hole in her shoe, right in the sole, close to the edge where it was fastened to the upper. It let in the water in rainy weather.

It was a trap for pebbles and splinters, so that Trot was often compelled to hop on one foot to a doorstep and take the intruder out. And one day, when she had been buying a penny mince pie, not for dessert but for dinner, something slipped in that hurt her a good deal, and that seemed to her like a button. "But if it is a button," thought Trot, "I'll keep it. Buttons are useful."

She set her little basket down, and held on by the area-railing, and ran her finger into her shoe, and into her palm dropped a small, shining silver thing—a sixpence, really a 6-penny piece. Now, sixpence is not a large sum, but when attained miraculously at the moment when one had ceased to hope for anything, it might seem so at Trot's age.

Some vague idea that fairies were really around actually thrilled the child.

Then the substantial fact fixed itself in her mind.

A present of some sort Lois should have. She could give it to her.

Trot hid the treasure in the corner of her pocket-handkerchief, took home the pie, and kept her secret as she ate the pie with her coffee.

Then, when all was tidy, away she went, stealing out the house with great importance, and staring at the shops and pricing things, and finding nothing (for sixpence) that was worth buying.

At last, in a small shop window, she saw some little pin-cushions—two scallop shells set over a bit of colored satin, with a loop of ribbon to fasten to one's belt or a nail.

They might do, she thought.

Alas! they were 18 pence apiece.

But the half-grown girl behind the counter was good-natured.

"Look here," she whispered to Trot, "I know how hard it is to get things when you're young and ain't earning yet. She charges 18 pence for these, but she buys 'em of an old sailor, who makes them himself, for sixpence. You go down the street, along the wharf to a little yellow house. There's toy boats in the window, and parrots, and bananas, and he's an old man with a wooden leg; and jest ask him. He'll sell you one, I'm sure."

"It's very nice of you to tell me," said Trot, and with a grateful look she sped away; and though Lois would have expected to see her killed outright, did get safly through the crowds of drays and carriages at the waterside of the yellow house, where the little old man with his wooden leg kept his queer little shop, and, as the sign at the door declared, "boarders" also.

Lame sailors smoked on the steps. One whittled at the end of the workroom.

As Trot stood modestly waiting, a tall man, with a long beard, who looked thin and ill, and very sad, hurried past her and went up stairs. It was then that the old man asked her what she wanted.

"One of them cushings?" he repeated. "Well, my dear, yes. By the dozen is my rule, but I breaks rules for pretty little lassies like you. Will you have a blue, a pink, or a yaller silk? Make up your mind and I'll pitch down what you choose. My darter fixes the silk, I gums the shells on and polishes 'em, and so they're finished. She's at work up stairs now. So which?"

"Blue, please," said Trot, and away stumped the old man. When he came down he showed her the cushion, took the silver, and went to hunt up a bit of paper to wrap it in; and the whittling sailor spoke to him.

"That poor chap looked blue," he said.

"He is blue," said the old sailor. "All that's come and gone is nothing to this," he said. "He hoped agin hope until now. But, you see, he's looked for his gal a month now, and can't find her; and he says either she's dead or married and he's talking of putting a pistol to his head. I never see a chap so mortal down in the mouth afore."

"Folks has lived through it and married other gals," said the sailor, whittling hard and turning very red.

"Yes," said the old man, "but don't you see, he's had three years on a desert island, and seen two men along of him die, one arter the other, and was at starvation's door when Capt. Briggs picked him up, that weak he couldn't stand. And now this worry. Sartinty can be borne better than unsarinty be it ever so woful. Here, little lassie!"

But Trot, with eyes and mouth wide open, did not even see the little package he held out to her.

A memory of a nose and of hair like those of the tall man she had seen burst upon her.

Jack had no beard, but oh—but oh—she was strong in childish hope and that childish expectation of fine endings to real life-stories which we lose in after life.

Lois would have sighed and gone away, but Trot clutched the old man's jacket with her thin little hands.

"Oh, please, sir," she said, "oh, I believe it's Jack. I always knew he wasn't drowned. Oh, please tell him that if he's Jack, I'm Trot, and Lois is my sister. Oh, tell him! I think it's Jack, and that it is Lois he is looking for. We're Capt. Lee's daughters—tell him—tell him!

"Good Lord!" shouted the whittling sailor, dropping his knife. "It's like a play. The fellow is looking for Cappen Lee's darter."

Up he went, five stairs at a time. Down he came with the man with the beard.

"Where is she? Where is she?" he gasped. "This—this isn't Trot?"

"This isn't Jack. Oh, dear, dear?" cried Trot. "Only your nose—that looks like. Oh, is it Jack Darrow?"

"Where is Lois?" was all he answered.

And the whittling sailor wiped his eyes with a big red handkerchief and the old man yelled "hurrah!"

Then he crammed the pretty cushion into the child's pocket and she went away with her hand in the thin brown hand of Jack Darrow, and told him all as they hastened along.

"Go up and prepare her, Trot," said Jack. "This is sudden. It might hurt her."

So Trot climbed the stairs, thinking what she might say, and she came where Lois sat at work and said:

"Lois, I want to give you a birthday present, and the fairies put sixpence into the hole in my shoe and I went to buy a pin cushion, but I've got a bigger present than that. Guess what it is? It's—it's Jack—"

"The child is delirious!" shrieked Lois. "Oh, Trot. Trot—my little Trot!"

"Oh, Lois! said Trot. 'I'm only preparing you. Jack has come back. He's down stairs."

But Jack was up stairs by that time, and, for my part, I think that joy, however sudden, seldom kills.

"Oh, what a wonderful birthday present you brought me!" cooed Lois, embracing her sister next morning. "Oh, my pet, we shall be so happy together."

And so they were.

General Grant, in the Mid-Winter Century, says the troops on both sides in the battle of Shiloh "were Americans, and united they need not fear any foreign foe."

THE EFFECTS OF POISON!

Some Startling Statements—Dangerous Drugs—Worse Than Opium Smoking.

VIEWS OF MEDICAL AUTHORITIES.

The Washington Post says:

For centuries it has been contended that a cough medicine, to be effective, must contain morphia, opium, or some other equally dangerous drug, and to-day nearly every cough medicine in the market has for its base some one of these deadly poisons. In every State of the Union physicians and coroners are constantly reporting innumerable cases of poisoning and death resulting from such compounds. One authority states that these have done more injury than opium smoking. A purely vegetable and at the same time efficacious cough cure has been considered an impossibility. It is for this reason that eminent medical authorities and public men everywhere like Dr. James A. Steuart, Health Commissioner of Baltimore, and Dr. Samuel K. Cox, of Washington, have spoken so enthusiastically of the discovery of Red Star Cough Cure which is obsolutely free from poisons or narcotics. Dr. O. Grothe, of the Brooklyn Board of Health, and heads of similar boards in other cities, are also among those who have issued official certificates in its favor.

Prof. John J. Caldwell, M. D., member of the Electro-Therapeutical Society, New York; Medical Society, Kings County (Brooklyn); Medical Society Baltimore; for six years in civil and military hospitals; assistant surgeon U. S. Volunteers; author of "Electro-Therapeutics," etc., certifies that a very desirable new departure has been made by the introduction of Red Star Cough Cure; that in addition to the rare quality of being entirely vegetable and harmless, he finds it to be an ingenious compound, pleasant to take and of remarkable efficacy.

Who Have Used It.

To THE PUBLIC:

From personal experience as well as from observation of its marked efficacy in other cases that have come under our notice, we cheerfully recommend RED STAR COUGH CURE as a safe and reliable family medicine.

Combining the power to relieve and cure promptly, with the rare quality of being entirely free from opiates, poison and narcotics, as demonstrated by the analysis of recognized medical authorities, it may justly be termed a valuable discovery.

We concur in the official opinion of the Commissioner of Health of Baltimore, that it happily supplants the objectionable and not unfrequently harmful features of other cough mixtures."

Over fifty physicians of Baltimore, including those of leading hospitals, charitable institutions, colleges and schools, have voluntarily endorsed Red Star Cough Cure, not only as the best thing of the kind ever discovered, but as being entirely free from the harmful features of other cough mixtures. Every one will find it a safe, sure cure. It is entirely free from opiates, narcotics, emetics and poisons. It leaves no bad effects. It does not derange the system. It is pure, pleasant, prompt. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine throughout the United States at fifty cents a bottle. THE CHARLES A. VOGELER COMPANY, Sole Proprietors, Baltimore, Maryland.

Bernard Murphy, Champion Youth Walker of Australia, says in the Melbourne Sportsman: "On Monday previous to the match with Ormes, of Sydney, I was attacked with the 'stitch.' I could not walk another yard, and gave up all hope of winning. I was advised to try St. Jacobs oil. I did so rubbing a little on my side. I have not been troubled since, and won my match."

In a four ounce glove fight at Sportsman's Park, New Orleans, between George Rooke of New York, and George Fryer, England, Rooke was knocked out in the first round, which lasted one minute and ten seconds. The round began by Fryer forcing the fighting. Rooke landed a blow squarely on Fryer's mouth. Fryer then got in several half-hits, and Rooke was driven to his corner and pressed against the ropes. Fryer here sent one straight from the shoulder. The blow landed on Rooke's right arm, paralyzing it to such an extent, that he dropped his guard. Fryer then caught Rooke on the jaw, knocking him down. When Rooke picked himself up, Fryer hit him under the left jaw, and Rooke fell like a log. He was carried to his corner almost senseless, and the fight decided in favor of Fryer, who was loudly cheered.

The Best Butter Color.

The great unanimity with which dairymen of high reputation have adopted, in preference to anything else, the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., of Burlington, Vt., is remarkable. It shows that the claims of imitative colors are baseless, wise dairymen will use no other.

Allen's Lung Balsam
A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
THAT WILL CURE
COUGHS, COLDS, CROUP!
MOTHERS,
Have you delicate, weakly children, who are always taking cold and subject to Croup? Remember, there never was a case of Croup which did not originate in a cold! Lung Balsam is your remedy.
READ THE FOLLOWING:
WHOOPING COUGH CURED.
O. A. HARRIS, of Benevolence, Ga., writes, Dec. 13, 1884: "My little boy, but little more than a year old, had a severe attack of WHOOPING COUGH, which my family physician said could not be cured, as it was winter. Having heard of the merits of ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, I immediately proceeded to town and purchased a bottle. To my surprise, this one bottle cured him sound and well. Others, hearing of the result, tried it, with equally good results. Later, my two little girls had Whooping Cough, and one bottle cured both of them. We think Whooping Cough is not much to be dreaded, if ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM can be had and given."
By its faithful use CONSUMPTION HAS BEEN CURED, when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.
DON'T DESPAIR because all other remedies have failed; but try this remedy and you will not be deceived.
It will cure when all others fail.
Directions accompany each bottle.
As an Expectorant it has no Equal.
It Contains no Opium in Any Form.

A Clear Skin is only a part of beauty; but it is a part. Every lady may have it, at least, what looks like it. Magnolia Balm both freshens and beautifies.

TWO OF THEM.

Kate Goldie and I were great friends in spite of the difference in our positions; she being Farmer Goldie's only daughter, and I the only child of the rector of the same little sea-bounded village. We had grown up from babyhood, knit together by the similarity of our circumstances—both the same age, both motherless, both only daughters of doting fathers, to whom we were equally devoted.

"What is the matter?" I cried, as I approached her one day.

"Nothing is the matter; I was but thinking and I want your advice, Miss Florence. You see," she began, "they both wants to marry me, and I don't know which to take. I was thinking about it when you came up."

"But who are they?" I asked, are 'they' Jim Taylor and Walter Butler, for if so"——

"No," sadly, "not Walter Butler; it's Jim Taylor and David Wardour."

"But, Kate, you puzzle me. I thought," in a low voice, "I always fancied it was Walter"——

"I was not speaking of myself, but of them. Jim Taylor and David Wardour; which shall it be?"

I withdrew my arm from hers in a transport of righteous indignation.

"I don't understand you," I cried; "why should it be either, when you care for Walter?"

It was her turn to be indignant now, she turned round on me fiercely.

"Walter, Walter," she said; "why do you keep on talking of him? Ah!" with something that almost sounded like a sob, "how stupid you are!"

"Then you had better not ask my advice," I answered highly offended. But she did not heed me.

"Miss Florence," she continued, "what I wants to know is this: Which is the richest of the two, and which is the kindest-hearted. Mr Bowles has known them both ever so long; have you heard him say?"

But I was too indignant to answer her question.

"Kate," I said, loftily, "I am ashamed of you. I never thought you would look at matrimony in this spirit; its quite shocking. Which is the richest indeed! Oh, it is horrible: it ought to be no question of money; only of which you—you—love the best. I never thought you would be so worldly."

"Miss Florence, you are a goose," was Kate's unmannerly rejoinder, as she walked away from me toward home, leaving me still with an expression of conscious virtue depicted on my countenance.

During the days that ensued I saw nothing of Kate, and by degrees it dawned on me that we two old friends were indulging in the folly of a quarrel. I was, however, sincerely disgusted with her, and my disgust increased when, a few days after I met her in the cornfield, my father announced to me that he had heard in the village, that she was engaged to be married to Jim Taylor.

"You must go this afternoon and congratulate her, Flo," he continued, quite unaware that Kate and I were not on speaking terms. But this state of things could not continue, so I took his advice and went down to Hawthorn Farm, in the afternoon, to offer my congratulations and tacitly cry Pax!

I found Kate looking ill, with dark rings round her eyes, and by no means the blushing bride-elect. She received my congratulations very calmly.

"He is here," she said; I will call him. Jim come and speak to Miss Florence. He is shelling peas for me," she continued; "I alwaws make him useful—I can't abide idle fellows."

I began to feel sorry for Jim.

He came in, however, anything but sorry for himself, radiant and blushing as any girl; but as he was eminently uncomfortable in my presence, Kate dismissed him to the peas again and resumed her conversation. She was far more talkitive than usual, being as a rule very silent.

"Yes," she continued, "we shall marry very soon, so as to be well settled down before harvest time; for you know, Miss Florence, we are going to live here and manage the farm. Father is getting old, and he worries himself to death about things, so now Jim and I will do it all and—Jim has plenty of capital"—defiantly.

"Oh, yes, it is all very nice," I answered, somewhat sarcastically, "and I am sure Jim is a good fellow." I added more warmly; "he looks it."

"Oh, he is very well;" then, more brightly, "I'll tell you what he is, Miss Florence; he is a right down good farmer, and that is what we want here."

"I am very glad to hear it," I answered, and very shortly after took my leave. There was a constraint about us both that made the interview anything but satisfactory, and I was pleased—almost for the first time in my life—to leave sweet Hawthorn Farm, where I had always been so happy. There was alteration in it since the days when I used to go there in Kate's holiday-time, and eat strawberries or cake, according to the season of the year; then, everything about the place had been bright and prosperous; now all spoke of want of money. True, it was as tidy as, under the circumstances, it could be, but it was a shabby, poverty-stricken tidiness compared to the old days of spick and span neatness, which it was to be hoped Jim's capital might restore.

As we walked through the village street toward home who should I encounter but Walter Butler? He was sauntering along with his hands in his pockets, whistling loudly, and looking anything but the lovesick swain. For the first time, good-looking as he was, his countenance repelled me, and involuntarily I contrasted it with Jim's straightforward, ingenuous face. How idle he looked too! Surely he could not again have left his place. When last I had seen him he had been keeper to Mr. Groves, about three miles inland.

"Good evening, Walter," I said.

"Good evening, miss."

"Are you come home for a holiday?" I continued.

"I've left Mr. Groves," he answered somewhat defiantly.

"I'm sorry for that," I replied. "I am afraid you are rather a rolling stone."

"I am not a-going to stay in a place where I am not trusted;" he responded, almost impertinently. Then: "So Kate Goldie is going to be married? I wonder how Jim Taylor will like keeping that old father of hers? I reckon he won't make much out of that place, as he has had nothing put into it for these many years past."

"That is his affair," I answered. "Good evening, Walter," and I passed on.

Six weeks later Kate Goldie and Jim Taylor were made man and wife in the little village church. To my mind Kate looked beautiful. Her simple white dress and bonnet became her better than her ordinarily rather smart attire, and her unusual palor was an improvement to her. The happy pair went straight home to Hawthorne Farm, and began the business of life at once. The whole affair seemed sadly lacking in romance.

All this time Walter remained idling about the village, picking up a few shillings at hay-making, harvesting, etc., and etc., and haunting Hawthorne Farm as soon as ever Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were settled there. He would stroll up to the house and present his handsome face at the kitchen window where Kate would be busy with her cooking or her baking, or he would walk boldly in and offer to help her with anything in which she was employed. On some pretext or other he was long absent, and soon my father began to look grave about it and to say he feared that Walter Butler was not up to much good and that the village people were beginning to talk.

In those days I often used to go and see Kate and always found her busy and industrious, but with a haggard, worried look in her eyes that ought not to have been there, for her affairs were looking up—the harvest was a good one, Jim worked like two men, fences were repaired, more hands were taken on new machinery bought, and altogether Hawthorn Farm began to wear a faint resemblance to its former self. Old Mr. Goldie, too, was perfectly happy, Jim was an attractive and respectful son-in-law, and it seemed to me that, except that her husband was too soft, as she once said to me, Kate had nothing to complain of.

One afternoon when I strolled up there I found, to my annoyance, Walter Butler, with a pipe in his mouth, sitting in the best parlor, while Kate sat in the window mending. I at once evinced my displeasure by saying, with marked coldness:

"I will not stay, Kate, as I see you are occupied." and I was about to withdraw when she flung down her work and came after me.

"Oh, Miss Florence, do stay—do stay!"

There was a ring of entreaty in her voice that struck me, and I turned round again.

"I can't stay," I answered, "if Walter Butler is sitting there smoking."

"He shan't sit there—he shall go."

"I thought that you could not abide lazy fellows, Kate?" I continued somewhat maliciously.

"No more I can," she answered, flushing. "I hate them! Oh, I hate them!"

There was a passion, a fire about her as she ejaculated these words that puzzled me and made me at once go back with her. We found Walter still lounging on the pretty chintz-covered sofa, but my presence seemed to make Kate brave, and she said to him:

"Now just you go about your business, Walter, and take your nasty pipe out of this room when Miss Florence is coming into it."

He rose sulkily enough.

"Good-bye, Kate," he said patronizingly, made me a surly salute, and was about to leave the room, when Jim came in—fair, red-faced, debonair, as usual. Not so debonair, though, that he could not shoot a glance of anger and contempt at Walter Butler.

"What are you a-doing here?" he asked, and then turning, after greeting me, to Kate. "My dear he said gently, "I want my tea early to-day."

I staid and had tea with them, and was more than ever struck by Jim's gentleness and goodness to his wife and his innate good breeding. I began to think Kate had married well after all.

Her manner toward him was singularly variable. One minute it was cold, the next warm; it was contemptuous, yet at times respectful—altogether a riddle.

"What a good husband you have, Kate!" I remarked, as he left the room to return to his work.

"Yes," she answered "he is well enough—he is very good to father and me—that I can't deny—but he is not much of a man," she added, with some contempt. "When you marry, Miss Florence, marry a man as will look after you."

"Why, Kate, Jim is always thinking of you. I should not have thought that you, who are so very independent, cared to be looked after so much."

"You are not married, Miss Florence. You don't understand," and with this, for me rather humiliating remark the conversation ceased.

It was a few weeks after this that Jim proved himself the man in the sense I could not understand, in so satisfactory a manner that he and Kate have been the happiest of couples ever since. Kate herself told me all about it in a moment of expansion, following immediately after the event.

It seemed that one day when Walter was lounging about her while she was busy in her kitchen-garden, Jim came in very quietly—he was always quiet—at an hour when he was usually out in the fields, with a heavy carter's whip in hand. He walked up to Walter.

"Now," said he, quite calmly, "I wants to know what business you always have here, prowling about my wife? If ever I catch you in this here garden or house again I will lay this"—holding up the whip—"about your shoulders; so now you had better be gone."

Walter stared in amazement at the quiet, fair-haired man. "You oaf, you," he said.

"An oaf, am I?" said Jim. "Then take this," and he gave him a smart cut with the whip.

With a cry of rage Walter tried to spring on him, but Jim kept his head and alluded him.

"Don't try that," he said, "or you will get the worst of it," and once more he raised the whip menacingly.

"Kate, go in," he said with a ring of authority in his voice she had never heard there before, but she did not stir. How could she, when love and admiration for her husband were surging through her veins, and her heart was beating so that she could not move?

For one minute the two men stood eyeing each other, and then, lithe and active Jim had seized Walter round the waist and thrown him to the ground.

There was a cry of joy, of pride, and Kate ran up to her husband.

"Oh, Jim! I am so glad!"

He looked at her wonderingly, but did not answer, for Walter, with an evil, white face, had risen to his feet, and finding his despised antagonist too much for him was preparing to beat an undignified retreat. The sight of Kate, clinging to her husband's arm, seemed too much for him. He shook his fist, speechless with fury, at them both, then slowly withdrew, turning round from time to time to repeat the gesture. But Kate and her husband had entered the house, he quite calm and quiet again, a fact which impressed his wife with his strength of both body and mind not a little.

"Did you say you were glad, Kitty?" he asked incredulously.

Oh! so glad, Jim. I have been so miserable. He would come here day after day, and reproach me with having behaved badly to him; and say that I had given my promise to marry him. So I had, but after I had said 'yes,' he cooled off, became quite distant like, and never came near me. Then I grew sore and angry, and when he went away to Mr. Groves without a word to me, I vowed I would have nothing more to say to him. It was just about the time that poor father lost so much money, and when you came and asked me to marry you, I thought as how you were rich and—"

"Yes, yes, I know all about that, Kitty; you never hid from me why you married me. But why did you never tell me how Walter persecuted you? I would soon have sent him about his business. I thought," rather sadly, and hesitatingly, "that you liked him to come."

"And I thought," with downcast eyes, "that you were not—not—man enough, Jim and I was angry that you did not show more spirit, and I said to myself, 'you were but a poor thing.' But now," with a glow of pride, "I know differently, and oh! I am so glad he is gone. He is a bad man, he is."

Jim drew her to him and kissed her. "He is a bad'un, Kate, and do you know why he became so cool and distant to you after asking you to marry him? Because he found out that affairs here were in a bad way and that you would have uncommonly little money, instead of a great deal, as he fancied. Don't you think you are well rid of him for a husband?"

"I do, Jim; indeed, I do—and, Jim, I have always been a good wife to you although I did marry you because you were rich and would let father live with us, but now"—in a whisper—"you know—yes, you know"—

"What, Kitty? Say it out loud."

"Why, you know that I love you."

That is word for word as Kate told the story to me. She is a comely matron now, with half a dozen children about her. I am still Miss Florence, not having yet found the man equal to looking after me.

The Mysteries of Jupiter.

From the Providence Journal.

The problems waiting for solution in regard to Jupiter are almost without number. Telescopists are never weary of studying the markings on his disk. New lines of his varying belts, dots on his surface, changing tints, bright spots near his equator, rifts in his cloud atmosphere, occultations and transits of his moons and shadows are scanned by eagle-eyed observers, accurately mapped by skilled draughtsmen, and laid away to swell the huge pile of observations which, one of these days, when the Jovian alphabet has found an interpreter, will reveal the process of world-making going on in a planet so huge in bulk that his primeval fire still burns. The great red spot, visible for years on Jupiter, has come and gone. Its appearance was a mystery, its disappearance is equally unaccountable. It left behind an unsolved problem, tangible proof of the equatorial acceleration of the planet. For the bright spot near the equator made a circuit around the planet in five minutes less time than the great red spot that was 40 degrees from the equator. In precisely the same way, the spots near the sun's equator complete a revolution in less time than those nearer the poles. Here is another link connecting the central luminary more intimately with his lordly son, and including his developments within the bounds of solar mysteries. When we find out the reason why the equatorial sun spots move faster than the polar sun spots, then we shall learn why the Jovian bright spots moved faster than the great red spot. We shall probably be convinced at the same time that the regal planet is far more in the condition of the sun than his less massive and less richly endowed brethren. How many ages must roll on before the dawn of the day of certainty succeeds the long night of theory?

Fresh and Stale Bread.

In reply to an inquirer, the Christain Union makes several statements about bread, which those anxious that, "good digestion wait on appetite, and health on both," should heed. It says: "Fresh bread contains a large amount of water, about forty-five per cent., much of which is in a pure or uncombined state.

"Within two or three days after baking, chemical changes take place in the interior of the loaf, in which the greater portion of the water enters into a combination with the starch and gluten of the grain, giving to the bread the appearence of being lighter, although if placed upon the scales it will be found that it has lost scarcely anything in weight.

"The fact can be easily demonstrated by placing a stale loaf in a closely covered vessel, and puting it in a hot oven for half an hour. On breaking open such a loaf it will be found to possess all the characteristics of a newly baked loaf, the water having been driven out from a combination with the constituents of the flour by the heat.

"A portion of the inside of a freshly baked loaf, when rubbed between the fingers, or when chewed, forms sticky, pasty mass, which is permeated by the degestive fluids with difficulty.

"Pieces of stale bread treated in the same manner, separate into small particles, which are readily acted upon by the digestive fluids. It is for this reason chiefly that stale bread is so much more wholesome and digestible than freshly baked bread. It should be added that the indigestibility of warm bread is greatly increased by the addition of butter."

Bishop Kip, of California, does not inscribe his name on his visiting cards, but simply the words, "The Bishop of California."

THERE'S NO POCKET IN A SHROUD.

You must leave your many millions,
And the gay and festive crowd;
Though you roll in royal billions,
There's no pocket in a shroud.

Whether pauper, prince, or peasant,
Whether rich or poor or proud—
Remember that there isn't
Any pocket in a shroud.

You'll have all this world of glory,
With a record long and loud,
And a place in song and story,
But no pocket in your shroud.

So be lavish of your riches,
Neither vain nor cold nor proud,
And you'll gain the golden niches
In a clime without a cloud.

A LITTLE SHOP GIRL.

"She's an old darling," said Grace Craxall. "And I mean to help her all I can. I've got a beautiful recipe for chocolate eclairs, and on Friday evening I am going there to make up all that I can, so that the school children will buy them on Saturday. I know how to make cinnamon apple tarts, too, and lemon drops and cocoanut balls."

"Grace, I do believe you have taken leave of your senses," said Medora May. "One would think it was disgrace enough for Aunt Deborah—our own mother's sister—to open a horrid little huckster shop without our mixing ourselves up in the affair."

"But Aunt Debby must live, you know," said Grace, who was perched, kitten fashion, on the window sill, feeding the canary with bits of sparkling white sugar. "And cousin Nixon couldn't keep her any longer, and her eyes are not strong enough for fine needle work, and her education has not fitted her to be a teacher, and her poor old rheumatic bones keep her from going behind a counter or entering a factory. I suppose you wouldn't be willing to have her come and live with you?"

"I!" cried Medora. "Do you suppose I want to proclaim to the whole town that I have such a dilapidated old relation as that?"

"I would take her quick enough," said Grace, "if I didn't board with Mrs. Howitt, and share the little up stairs back room with the two children. Just wait until I marry some rich man," she added with a saucy uplifting of her auburn brows, "and then see if I don't furnish up a stately apartment for Aunt Debby!"

"Don't talk nonsense," said Medora, acidly. "It's very likely, isn't it, that a factory girl like you is going to marry a rich man?"

Grace Craxall laughed merrily. All through life she and her cousin, Medora May, has agreed to differ on most points. Grace seeing no other career before her had, on the death of her last surviving parent, cheerfully entered a factory, while Medora, taking her stand on the platform of a false gentility, had done fine sewing and silk embroidery on the sly to support herself, putting on all the airs of a young lady of fashion the while. And now Aunt Debora May, to the infinite disgust of her aristocratically inclined niece, had actually opened a little low windowed shop in a shady street just out of the main thoroughfare, and as Medora despairing expressed it, "gone into trade!"

For Aunt Debby, in her bewildered loneliness, had scarcely known what to do until Grace Craxall came to the rescue with her hopeful courage and straightforward common sense.

"I only wish it wasn't sinful to take a dose of laudanum and put myself out of the way," sighed the poor old lady.

"Now, Aunt Debby, that doesn't sound a bit like you," said Grace, cheerfully.

"But what am I to do?" said Aunt Deborah.

"What can you do?" said Grace.

"I don't know as I am good for anything," said the old lady with a quiet tear or two, "except to help around the house, and I ain't strong enough for regular hired help. Your uncle always used to say I was a master hand at making bread."

"Then make it," brightly interrupted Grace.

"Eh?" said Aunt Debby.

"There's a nice little store to let on Bay street," went on Grace for ten dollars a month."

"But I haven't got ten dollars a month," feebly interrupted Aunt Deborah.

"I'll lend it to you," said Grace, "out of the wages I have saved. And there's a pretty bedroom at the back of the shop, and a clean, dry basement under it, where you could bake your bread. I know, for the sister of the lady where I board is looking for dress-making rooms, and I heard her speaking about it."

"Do you mean to open a bakery?" said bewildered Aunt Debby.

"Not exactly that," explained Grace. But if Mrs. Howitt, or Mrs. Taylor, or any of the ladies around here could get real home-made bread, such as you make, do you suppose they would put up with the sour stuff they get at the baker shops? And you could easily get up a reputation on your raisin cakes, and fried crullers and New England pumpkin pies. Now couldn't you?"

The old lady brightened up a little.

"I used to be pretty good at cooking," said she. "And if you think I could support myself so—"

"I am sure of it!" cried cheerful Grace. "And I'll go there with you this very day to look at the place, and will engage it for three months on trial. And I can paint you a sign to put over your door, 'Home-made Bread by Mrs. Deborah May!' And I'll hem you some curtains and arrange the shelves in the low window! I almost wish I was going to be your shop girl," she added merrily. "But I can help you in the evening, you know!"

Grace Craxall's prophecies proved correct. Aunt Debby's delicious home-made bread, whiter than powdered lilies, sweet as ambrosia, soon acquired a reputation, and the old lady could scarcely bake it fast enough. People came half a dozen blocks to buy the yellow pumpkin pies and delicious apple tarts; children brought their hoarded pennies to invest in chocolate sweetmeats, vanilla caramels, and cream cakes, with puffy shells and delicious centers of sweetness. The little money drawer grew fat with coins, and Aunt Debby's dim eyes grew bright and hopeful again.

And one day Mr. Herbert Valance, walking by with Medora May, stopped and looked in.

"Isn't that your cousin Grace," said he, "behind the counter?"

Medora turned crimson with vexation.

"My cousin Grace?" she said. "No, indeed! We are not—in trade!"

What possessed her to utter this deliberate falsehood Medora could not afterwards have told. Partly the sting of false shame, partly a disinclination for Mr. Herbert Valance to know that her relations were not, to use her expression, "ladies and gentlemen."

Mr. Valance looked up at the sign over the door.

"The name is May," he remarked indifferently.

"Yes," said Medora, angry at herself blushing so deeply, "but we are no relation."

Mr. Valance thought over the matter; he afterwards met Miss May at a party given by a friend, where pretty Grace Craxall was also present; he had taken rather a fancy to the bright blue eyes and delicate blonde beauty of the former. Valance Hall, on the hill just out of the city, was solitary enough, now that his sisters had all married and gone away, and perhaps a man might find a less attractive and graceful wife than Medora May. But he could not be mistaken, he thought, in Grace Craxall's identity.

And so the next evening, about the same time, he sauntered into the shop.

Grace was behind the daintily clean little counter, taking some newly baked maple caramels off the pan. She looked up with a smile.

"Good evening, Mr. Valance," said she.

"So," he thought, "I wasn't mistaken after all. And the little blue-eyed seraph is mortal enough to tell a lie in spite of her angelic appearance!"

But he looked serenely at Grace.

"I didn't know you were in trade," said he.

"Didn't you? Well," retorted Grace, "I am my Aunt Deborah's shop girl at present. I always come here in the evenings to help her, because," she added, with a sweet shade of seriousness coming over her face, "Aunt was old and poor, and she didn't quite know how to maintain herself in independence; and, unfortunately my wages at the factory are not enough for us both. So I advised her to open this business, and she did, and she is doing well; and she bakes the most delicious bread and pies you ever ate, so," with a saucy twinkle under her eyelashes, "if you know of any customers, will you please recommend our firm?"

"To be sure I shall," he answered in the same spirit. "And I am very glad, Miss Caxall, to see that you are not ashamed of being a working girl."

"Of course I am not," said Grace. "Why should I be?"

"But your cousin Medora is."

Grace gave a little shrug of her shoulders.

"Very likely," said she. "Medora and I differ in many things."

Mr. Valance bought a pound of caramels and went away.

"She is a beauty," he said to himself. "And she is a sensible beauty into the bargain. One of those rare avises in our country, a thoroughly well-balanced girl."

He must have been very well pleased with his purchase, for he came again the next evening, just in time to walk home with Grace Craxall. And they talked over Aunt Deborah's affairs, and concluded, as flour was low just then, it would be a favorable opportunity for the old lady to lay in her winter stock through Mr. Valance, who was acquainted with one of the great New York grain merchants.

Only a few weeks had elapsed, when Medora May was electrified to learn that her cousin Grace was engaged.

"To some master baker or journeyman confectioner, I suppose," she said contemptuously.

"No," said Grace, with eyes roguishly sparkling, "to Mr. Herbert Valance."

"I—don't believe—it, said Medora, growing red, then pale.

"But it's really so," said Grace. "And we are to be married in three months. And Aunt Debby is to come to the hall and live with me as soon as she can dispose of her business to advantage. And dear Medora, I hope you will often come and visit me there."

Medora May did not answer. She could not. But in her secret heart she recognized how infinitely more successful in life's lists had been Grace's true, frank honesty than her own subtle and devious course.

Like many another, however, the lesson had come to her too late.

A Boston Romance.

From the Chicago Courier.

About eighteen months ago, a young gentleman living on Commonwealth avenue was smitten with a violent passor for a pretty servant employed in his mother's house. They were married secretly; but the family early discovered the state of affairs, and then there was a terrible time. It was proposed to the erring son that his low-born wife should be given a certain sum of money and sent so far away that she could never trouble him. It is presumed he regretted his hasty act, for he accepted the terms, and the girl was sent away. The matter was confined to members of the family, with the exception of an aunt of the young man who helped furnish the money to buy the silence of the girl, not even the most intimate friends knowing the way things stood. The young gentleman, of course, passed for an unmarried man.

About six months after the disappearance of his wife he met a beautiful girl at Cambridge, with whom he fell desperately in love. She was lovely, accomplished, and his equal in birth and fortune. He paid her marked attention for several months, and finally offered himself in marriage. The young lady accepted him and the engagement was announced. Now during this time the aunt, who knew his secret, had been taken violently insane, and was put in the McLean asylum for treament. The Cambridge young lady, whom we will call Miss White, had a sister in the same asylum who was insane from melancholy. Miss White frequently visited her sister, and continued to do so after her engagement, even speaking of her coming happiness during one of her visits. One day one of the keepers at the asylum said to the melancholy patient: "Miss White, your sister is coming to see you to-day." In the opposite gallery the aunt of the young man was confined, and she overheard the message. She immediately called out, "I must see your sister when she comes; I have a secret to tell her." Accordingly, when Miss White called, the aunt found means to see her, and after asking if it was true she was engaged, told her the story of the young man's marriage, and that he had never been divorced. The young lady was almost stunned, although, obtaining the news in such a place, she could not believe it. Returning home she told her father what she had heard, and upon investigation he found it true. At this time the invitations were out for the wedding and all preparations made. Miss White sent her bethrothed husband a note asking him to call at a certain time. When he arrived she walked into the room and in the presence of her parents accused him of his treachery and the terrible position in which he had nearly placed her. He did not attempt a denial, and could not find anything to say in extenuation, except that he loved her and thought that his wife would never appear. The young lady suffered a serious illness, which sufficed as a pretext for recalling the invitations. The kind of honor in a family which could permit such a thing to go on and allow an innocent girl to be sacrificed, ought to be bound in a separate edition of the blue book.

England's Seaside in Winter.

Olive Logan's London Letter.

I find that many persons in America think it so strange that we in England should go to the seaside in winter, and wonder how it is that the Queen should seek her marine residence at Christmas time. These persons who so wonder are not familiar with the peculiarities of the British climate, and think because there are ice and snow in New York and Philadelphia the same conditions must prevail here. They make their climatic calculations without bringing in that important factor, the Gulf Stream. By the aid of this obliging body of water the temperature of the south coast of Britain is simply delightful during the winter months, and as for the Isle of Wight, where the Queen goes, it is Italy with sanitary improvements—nothing more nor less. The fogs which are apt to make life a vexation in London at or near this season are unknown on the coast, and often when it is as dark as pitch at noonday in London, we, us and company jump into the electric-lighted Pullman train and in an hour are on the King's road at Brighton; with the sun shining brilliantly over our heads, the blue waves dashing at our feet, the sea dotted with pleasure craft, little German bands tinkle-tooting the latest American importation, "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By," or some other sugary sentimentalism, in our ears, and the whole of the June procession of Hyde Park and Piccadilly fashionables elbowing us as we move through the crowd.

The Wisconsin Samson.

Fishing parties and explorers in the wilds of Northern Wisconsin were, a few years ago, familiar with Peter Panquette, the Samson of the region. He was a famous woodsman, possessed of mighty endurance and muscles that were like iron. Senator Clark says: I have had him bare his arm to me and crack hickory nuts upon his muscles. It was like cracking them on a stone. He could take a handful of dried, hard hickory nuts and crush them to pieces by merely tightening his fist."

On one occasion, while serving as a guide for a party of explorers, a yoke of oxen, drawing a boat down the Fox, gave out through fatigue. Panquette took their place and hauled the boat along, heeding the strain less than the beasts.

By the terms of her will, the late Mrs. Clarissa C. Peck, widow of Philander Peck of Chicago, left $395,000 to her relatives, and the remainder of her estate, estimated at between $400,000 and $500,000, for the foundation of a home for incurables in Chicago. The Old People's Home of Chicago is left $10,000, and the same amount for the American Sunday School Union and the Lake Forest University. The Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago is left $10,000 for mission schools, and $10,000 is bequeathed to the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

William F. Burton, the caricaturist, who has just died at Jersey City, was only twenty-nine years old. He was the most widely known as the producer of whimsical illustrations of certain popular songs. The sketch of "What are the wild waves saying?" in which a small boy and girl are depicted looking out on the sea that is wetting their feet was his work. He was a frequent contributor to Puck, Harper's Weekly, and other illustrated papers, and a profuse illustrator of picture books.

According to a statement of the Hon. Isaac N. Arnold, a member of congress from Chicago at the time, who says he had the information direct from President Lincoln himself, Tennessee was omitted from the emancipation proclamation in deference to the opinions and wishes of Andrew Johnson; who argued that it would alienate or divide the Union men of that state and temporarily strengthen the pro slavery element upon which the rebels chiefly depended. The Union men of Tennessee afterward changed the constitution of the state so as to abolish and prohibit slavery within its borders. These amendments were ratified at a popular election Feb. 22, 1865.

A New Device for Making a Living.

Blakely Hall tells of a new device by which a clever but unscrupulous woman in New York makes a living:

A clerk in the counting room of a prominent New York paper told me an ingenious scheme the other day which I imagine has never been exposed. A respectably dressed and prosperous looking woman came into the office as if she owned it, and was rather proud of the fact, stammered down an advertisement with the requisite change on the counter, and smiled affably on the clerk. "Still another?" asked the clerk, brightly. "Still another," repeated the woman. "This time it is a beauty, too. Come to me, you know, when you want one." She smiled again and drifted out of the room. "For three years," said the clerk, "that woman has had an advertisement in the paper every day announcing that she has for sale at her residence a piano which will go at a bargain. The advertisement invariably states that the instrument has only been in use a week and is in every respect as good as new, but that sudden reverses in fortune and a decision to move out of town force the owner to sell at once. I thought for the first five or six weeks that her ladyship was having a hard time to sell her piano. Then I began to smell a mouse. One winter night she was obliged to wait here a long while for a car, and a talk led her into the confession that she sold pianos in this way as a regular business. She has an arrangement with the manufacturer, by which he furnishes her a fresh piano as soon as the last one is sold, and as they are all of cheap make, but rather showy, they manage to go off very well. She is anxious to keep her business very quiet, but it has noised abroad, until she has several competitors, and the Sunday papers will invarably have the names of four widows who are obliged to sell their piano at once. Every one of them makes a good living by it. Piano makers, it seems to me, have rather a tempestuous time, anyway. If my memory serves me, the life and death struggle which goes on among the makers of these instruments began at the centennial—according to the advertisements. Since then all sorts of devices have seen the light, but the employment of alleged indigent widows is probably the most original.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Post says: "Some day Lieutenant Garlington will be found to have done brave deeds and to have made a more successful fight against the elements than any one else who been connected with the Signal-Service Arctic expeditions. His retreat over 600 miles in open boats, and the consequent saving of the lives of all his men, was pluckier and showed more judgment than anything done by the last expedition. He was practically in the same situation and was further north when his ship was lost than Greely was at Cape Sabine. Greely, too, had boats, as Garlington had, but the latter took to them, made his journey, and saved his men, while Greely knocked his boats to pieces for fuel and lost most of his party by starvation." Garlington is a brave man and desired success. He was graduated at West Point at the time of the Custer massacre and assigned to the seventh cavalry. Instead of taking his vacation to which he was entitled he made haste to join his regiment at a time when it was expected that it would be still further depleted by Indian conflicts. He is no carpet soldier but has a laudable ambition to win fame, whatever dangers may be in his way.

IN THE JAWS OF A SHARK.

The Marvelous Experience of Alfetto While Working at His Calling of Diver

From the Panama Herald.

Alfetto the Spanish diver, who has been at work on the wreck of the Atlanta, near Morehead, thus speaks of an adventure had by him a few days ago: At the time I was at the bottom of the sea. I was just about to signal to be drawn up for a moment's rest, when I noticed a shadowy body moving at some distance above me and toward me. In a moment every fish had disappeared, the very crustaceans lay still upon the sand and the cuttle fish scurried away as fast as they could. I was not thinking of danger, and my first thought was that it was the shadow of a passing boat. But suddenly a feeling of terror seized me. I felt impelled to flee from something I knew not what. A vague horror seemed grasping after me, such as a child fancies when leaving a darkened room. By this time the shadow had come nearer and taken shape. It scarcely needed a glance to show me that it was a maneater, and of the largest size. Had I signaled to be drawn up then it would have been certain death. All I could do was to remain still until it left. It lay off twenty or twenty-five feet, just outside the rigging of the ship, its body motionless, its fins barely stirring the water about its gills.

It was a monster as it was, but to add to the horror the pressure of the water upon my head made it appear as if pouring flames from its eyes and mouth, and every movement of its fins and tail seemed accompanied by a display of fireworks. I was sure the fish was thirty feet long, and so near that I could see its double row of white teeth. Involuntarily I shrunk closer to the side of the vessel. But my first movement betrayed my presence. I saw the shining eyes fixed upon me; its tail quivered as it darted at me like a streak of light. I shrunk closer to the side of the ship. I saw it turn on one side, its mouth open, and heard the teeth snap as it darted by me. It had missed me, but only for a moment. The sweep of its mighty tail had thrown me forward. I saw it turn, balance itself, and its tail quivered as it darted at me again. There was no escape. It turned on its back as it swooped down on me like a hawk on a sparrow. The jaws opened and the long, shining teeth grated as they closed on my metal harness.

It had me. I could feel its grinding teeth on my copper breastplate as it tried to bite me in two, for, fortunately, it had caught me just across the middle, where I was best protected. Having seized me it went tearing through the water. I could hear it bound forward at each stroke of its tail. Had it not been for my copper helmet my head would have been torn off by the rush through the water. I was perfectly conscious, but somehow I felt no terror at all. There was only a feeling of numbness. I wondered how long it would be before those teeth would crunch through and whether they would strike first into my back or my breast. Then I thought of Maggie and the baby and wondered who would take care of them and if she would ever know what had become of me. All these thoughts passed through my brain in an instant, but in that time the connecting air tube had been snapped and my head seemed ready to burst with pressure, while the monster's teeth kept crunching and grinding away upon my harness. Then I felt the cold water begin to pour in and heard the bubble, bubble, bubble, as the air escaped into the creature's mouth. I began to hear great guns and to see fireworks and rainbows and sunshine and all kinds of pretty things, then I thought I was floating away on a rosy summer cloud, dreaming to the sounds of sweet music. Then all became blank. The shark might have eaten me at his leisure and I never would have been the wiser. Imagine my astonishment then when I opened my eyes on board this boat and saw you fellows around me. Yes, sir, I thought I was dead and ate up, sure.

Alfetto was found by his comrades a few minutes after the snapping of the line. He was picked up insensible, with several holes punched in the metallic part of his diving suit.

Mumps.

There are three glands, or rather collections of glands, on each side of the mouth that secrete saliva—the fluid which keeps the throat moist and helps to digest food. One collection is just below the ears; the second below the ends of the lower jaw; the third under the tongue. Mumps is a brief fever, and one of its characteristic symptoms is an inflammation and swelling of these glands, generally those near the ears—whence its medical name, parotiditis—inflammations of the parotid glands, the name mumps is from the mumbling way in which the patient often speaks, it being painful to move the inflamed jaws.

Every inflammation of these glands does not constitute mumps, but only such as is caused by a peculiar kind of contagion, which probably enters the mouth in breathing, and thence finds its way to the glands through the main ducts.

In all infectious diseases there is a period of "incubation"—a term taken from hatching—the time between the exposure and the first symptom. In mumps this period varies from eight or ten days to two or three weeks.

The swelling begins below the ear, extends back to the end of the jaw, and thence spreads in all directions. Sometimes it is so slight as to be scarcely noticed; sometimes it is so great on both sides as to give the neck and head a pyramidal shape. And yet very severe symptoms are sometimes connected with the slightest swelling.

The swelling may be confined to one side of the neck, but most often it extends to both, the one, however, first affected being the worst. The whole disappears in eight or twelve days. In rare cases the swelling extends to important glands in other parts of the body, sometimes with serious results.

The fever is often so slight that the patient keeps about, and unless it extends to other glands is always without danger, and requires only the simplest treatment.

The period of greatest susceptibility to an attack is between the ages of five and fifteen. It is unknown under one year, and not common in adults. Yet persons who have seemed proof against it when young are sometimes severely attacked late in life. It is one of the diseases which are seldom repeated.—Youth's Companion.

IN SCHOOL DAYS.

ill sits the school-house by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
round it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

'ithin, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
he warping floor, the battered seats,
The jack-knife's carved initial;

he charcoal frescoes on its walls;
Its door's worn sill, betraying
he feet that creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing.

ong years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting;
it up its western window panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting.

t touched the tangled golden curls
And brown eyes, full of grieving,
f one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favor singled;
His cap pulled down upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left, he lingered;
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hands light caressing,
And heard the tremble of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because"—the brown eyes lower fell,—
"Because, you see, I love you!"

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child face is showing;
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing.

He lives to learn in life's hard school,
How few who pass above him,
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her—because they love him

JANET'S WAGER.

WOULDN'T MARRY A MAN WITH RED HAIR.

"Well, I know one thing," said pretty Bessie Carleton, decidedly; "I never shall marry a man with red hair. May Brown doesn't know how she has lowered herself in my esteem by marrying such a red-headed fellow as Clem Weston. I wouldn't have believed it of her. But the deed is done; she really has married him; here are her wedding-cards, Janet," and she tossed them across to her friend. "No, indeed," she went on, leaning back in her comfortable lawn-chair, "my mind is made up; mark my words, Janet. I never shall marry a man with red hair." Janet laughed most provokingly.

"Don't be too sure," she said in a warning tone, "there's no telling what you may do before you die; as old Miss Gaylord is always saying, 'we're born but we're not buried."

Bessie laughed and then asked seriously, "But why shouldn't I be sure? I never could marry a man with red hair, because to begin with, I never could fall in love with him. Think how unromantic it would be. In novels the heroes always have 'waving auburn curls' or 'jet black locks.' I have never come across any endowed with my pet abhorence, red hair.

"I regret to express my feelings, Bessie," said Janet, coolly; "but I feel it my duty to tell you that you are making of goose of your-self," and while her friend stared at her in a mixture of surprise and indignation, she continued calmly; "To begin with, you are not in a novel, so you can hardly expect young men with 'auburn tresses, and 'jet locks flying to the wind, to be always hanging around doing nothing, as seems to be the aim of the impossible romances that you refer to, and to end with, you are only a girl doomed to live a useless unromantic life, like all the rest of us until some kind creature with black or red hair, I don't know which, shall take pity on you and marry you. So I wouldn't be so vehement against the unknown red-haired if I were you. Do you know," she cried, starting up, "I will wager a box of French bonbons that you marry a man with, not golden brown, not auburn, but real downright red hair; what will you give me if I win?"

"This diamond," answered her friend, lazily touching the beautiful jewel at her throat.

"O, no," remonstrated Janet, "I won't take anything so handsome; you are too generous."

"Not at all," was the reply, "because I am sure that I never shall have to give it up."

"Eh bien! nous verrons, was the quick retort. "Ah," changing her tone, "here come the boys," as across the lawn toward them came two handsome young fellows.

"What's the row," called one of them as he came up; "we heard your excited voices as we rode up the avenue, and with our customary courage flew to the rescue. Whose life is in danger?"

"It is just this," explained Janet. "Bessie declares she will never marry a man with red hair." Upon this Laurie passed his hand complacently over his own blonde curls. "And I have wagered a box of bon-bons against her diamond pin that she will. Won't you take it down in black and white, Fred?" turning to her cousin.

"Certainly." And after a prolonged search among his numerous pockets, he produced a diminutive note-book wherein he made a most business-like record of the bet and the stakes put up by both girls.

"And now we shall see who wins. I am all anxiety, although I think with Janet, that you are doomed to lose your bet, Miss Carlton," he said, turning to her.

He was a tall, handsome young fellow and Janet's cousin, while his companion, Laurie Edwards, was only a friend down on a fortnight's visit.

Laurie was Miss Carlton's devoted slave, and now he cried eagerly:

"I don't see why she should lose. I am sure she has every opportunity to win."

"Oh, yes, we all know she has every opportunity," laughed Fred mischievously, causing Miss Carlton to blush and Laurie to vow vengeance against him; "but I doubt whether she will avail herself of these opportunities, even to save herself from losing."

"What a beautiful sunset," said Bessie desperately; "the country is always beautiful, but especially so on summer evenings."

"The rays of the departing sun have affected your cheeks, my dear," said Janet; "won't you take this seat? It is more in the shade than the one you have. This vine will screen you entirely."

The answer to this kind offer, was a stony glare, which so amused her that she could not resist laughing a proceeding which infinitely disgusted Laurie and Bessie. Fred restored the peace of the party by saying quietly, as if nothing had happened:

"By the way, Janet, if you don't object, I think I'll ask Dick Lansdale down for a few weeks."

"Of course you may ask him—any one that you choose; why, where are you two going?" as Laurie and Bessie were strolling off.

"Just for a walk on the beach," answered Bessie over her shoulder. "Won't you join us?"

"Two is company, four is none," called Janet. "Who is Dick Lansdale anyway?" she asked, turning to her cousin.

"That's just the joke," he cried, eagerly. "He is the nicest fellow going, but he has the reddest hair you ever saw. He is fascinating, handsome and intelligent—just the man for Miss Carlton to fall in love with. Now this is my plan; I shall insist upon his wearing a wig over his objectionable hair while visiting here."

"But," interrupted Janet, "do you think he will be willing?"

"Oh, yes, I know Dick," was the reassurring answer. "Then I shall expect him to fall in love with Miss Bessie, and trust her own stony heart will be touched; then when they are engaged he shall appear with his natural red hair, the plot shall be disclosed, I shall beg forgiveness, you shall win your bet, and the curtain will go down on the villains, you and I, Laurie, the disappointed lover, and the happy pair, Dick Lansdale and Miss Carlton."

"That would be splendid, "cried Janet; "but suppose she doesn't fall in love with him. what then?"

"Why, nothing. There will be no harm done, only a crashed plot. But I am sure she shall like him."

"Poor Laurie," said Janet, "I feel sorry for him!"

"Well, you needn't, she doesn't care a snap for him. You can see that he bores her awfully, and he'll get over in no time—I have been along there myself. Come now, let us join them on the beach. Remember, mum's the word."

A few evenings after, as Laurie and the two girls were standing on the gallery, preparatory to taking their customary evening ride, the dog-cart came bowing up the avenue, drew up at the steps and out of it sprung a Fred Miles, followed by a tall, dark-haired, gray-eyed young man with an intelligent face and distinguished. After the usual introductions, Janet, with her most gracious smile, turned to the new-comer, saying:

"If you are not too tired, Mr. Lansdale, we will be happy to have you go and ride with us."

"I have already ordered his horse, so he will have to go whether he wants to or not," interrupted Fred, before his friend could reply.

"There, Laurie," as the groom brought around the horses, "you, Miss Carlton, and Mr. Lansdale will go together, while we two jog along behind."

Laurie frowned a little at this arrangement, but, as it could not be helped, he submitted to his fate though glowering darkly at his friend. No sooner were the three ahead, out of ear-shot, than Janet bent forward, crying delightedly:

He's very handsome, just as you said, and his hair is beautiful. I never would have guessed it was false if I had not known all about it."

"Yes," said Fred in a satisfied tone of voice, "I am sure our plot will succeed; I think she fancies him already. See how attentively she listens when he speaks. Poor old Laurie; I am almost sorry for him. I don't think he will stay much longer after this; he'll learn his fate and depart."

Nor was Fred mistaken. After two weeks of protracted misery, Laurie could stand it no longer, so he declared his love, was told calmly by the object of his adoration that she would always be his friend, but nothing more," and the following day departed, at war with all man, or rather all woman kind.

With the conspirators all went well. Bessie, unconscious of Janet's treachery, expressed to her without any scruples, her admiration for Mr. Lansdale's good qualities.

"He is so intelligent," she said one evening after a long discussion on the subject of "Woman's Rights."

"Yes, dear, I agree with you," was the sympathetic reply, encouraging Bessie to go on.

"And so handsome. Don't you think he is handsome, Janet?"

"Very," said Janet enthusiastically; then, glancing up, with a mischievous look in her dark eyes, which Bessie remembered too well afterward, "don't you think his hair is beautiful?"

"Lovely," cried her friend. "Ah Janet, I think I shall——"

She stopped short, overcome with confusion, for she was going to say, "win my bet."

Janet understood, pretended not to notice, finished the sentence off in her own mind and told her fellow-conspirator that night that she thought that things were turning out very well.

At length the crisis came. They had been rowing on the lake all the evening Bessie and Dick in the front boat, Janet and Fred in the one behind. It was quite warm rowing in spite of the pleasant breeze hovering about, and Dick had dropped his oars and stopped for a while to rest. Strange to say, silence had fallen upon him and his companion. He broke it by saying, abruptly:

"I am going away to-morrow. Aren't you sorry for me, leaving all this beauty and pleasure for a dusty desk in a dusty office?"

She had been leaning over the side of the boat, letting the water run through her fingers, but now she started up, glancing at him with a hurt pained look in her big blue eyes.

"You are not really going so soon?" she said slowly, as if she couldn't believe it.

"Yes, really," he answered, picking up the oars and beginning to row with unwonted zeal.

"Are you sorry?"

"Yes."

"Then," he said, "I won't go right yet. I will wait awhile, then take you back with me. I am not a rich man," he went on, hurriedly, "but I have enough to make my wife happy. Will you come, Bessie?"

He dropped the oars, and held out his hands for answer. She put out her own dimpled white ones in his big brown ones.

Just then the boat ran into the wharf, bringing them back to their senses.

The walk home was very quiet and rather embarrassing. Bessie wondered whether it was exactly right to accept a lover without so much as asking her father's leave. To be sure, his indulgence and weakness to her were proverbial. Still she thought she ought to have gained his permission first. She expressed her fears to Mr. Lansdale, who set her mind at rest by producing a letter from her kindest of parents, giving him permission to try his fortune, winding up with, "She's a dear girl, Lansdale, and, as I like you, I hope you will succeed."

By this time they had reached the porch. With a hasty "good-by" she sprang up the steps and rushed away to her own room, where Janet, on her return, found her, vainly trying to cool her tell-tale cheeks.

"Won't you come out on the lawn for a game of croquet?" she said pretending not to notice.

"No, thank you; I have a raging headache. You go down like a dear girl. I will come down to-night. I may feel better then."

"Perhaps you may; it will be dark," with which farewell shot she departed to inform Fred she thought "the blow was about to fall."

With the night and the moonlight came Bessie out on the broad front gallery, blissfully unconscious that Fred and Janet were ensconsed behind the blinds, waiting as Fred expressed it, "to see the fun." She looked, surprised to see no one, and had half determined to go back, when some one stepped out from the shadow of the pillars and came toward her.

"Is that you, Dick?" she cried, darting forward; but no—she drew back with a hasty "I beg your pardon," for the moonlight shone down on as red a crop of curls as ever were owned by a man. "Excuse me," she went on, "I took you for Mr. Lansdale."

"And so I am," answered a familiar voice; "surely, Bessie, an absence of two hours can't have made you forget my face?"

"I haven't forgotten you, Dick," she cried, piteously, "but what," she hesitated—then despertly. " what's the matter with your hair?"

"Now don't be angry with me, darling, and I will tell you all about it," he said, persuasively. You know you said you would never marry a man afflicted with red hair so I adopted this rule to make you love me. 'Tis true I began it all as a joke, but soon I was terribly in earnest." And then he told her the history of the plot. When it was finished the blinds flew open, and out rushed the conspirators."

"Pity and forgive, most beautiful lady, the humblest of your servants," cried Fred, falling on one knee, while Janet overwhelmed her friend with kisses, crying at the same time; "Oh, I have won, I have won!"

As for Bessie she forgave them; then, with tenderest smile, said, laying her hand on her lover's, "I think I would have loved you anyway Dick, in spite of your red hair."

Early Man in America.

According to Prof. Brinton, of the Academy of Natural Science, many important traces of early man are to be discovered in the Mississippi Valley. Near St. Paul begins the modified glacial drift of an intermediate glacial period. Fifteen feet below the surface are found stone implements and remains of workshops. In Patagonia remains of fires, tools and implements of bone were found. These things indicate a somewhat advanced stage of civilization and were left there before the horse was extinct. From these things it is inferred that a race, with rare types and characteristics, existed here as early, if not earlier, than elsewhere on the globe The characteristics, of the American race is color changing from copper to white; stiff hair and little of it; foreheads retreating, compressed at the sides, and low; eyes straight; noses dissimilar; mouth large; chin round, small and regular; expression hard and unpleasant. The sexes are much alike in appearance when they do not wear garments fashioned for the purpose of distinguishing them. The higher the development of man, the more pronounced is the distinction between the sexes.

Weather at Mount Washington.

A visit or to the top of Mount Washington concludes that the weather is really cold up there. He was convinced by a walk along the railroad with the wind blowing seventy miles an hour, and the thermometer 20 degrees below zero. The temperature does not go lower there than in many other places; but the wind blows with a greater velocity, it is said, than at any known spot in the world, and this makes the cold unbearable. A velocity of 180 miles an hour has been attained, while at pike's peak, eight thousand feet higher, the greatest is one hundred miles, and in New York forty-five miles is a heavy gale. Of course the air has less power as the density decreases, but even with this reduction the cold is so intense that if one covers every part of the body, leaving only the eyes exposed, these are soon coated with frost, which close the lids and often make it almost impossible to see. The moisture of the breath freezes under the covering of the face, and a frost-bite is the consequence.

Marble in Alaska.

From the San Francisco Bulletin.

The people of California are rejoicing in the prospect of the development of the valuable marble quarries of Alaska. San Francisco alone imports annually about $4,000,000 worth of marble, one-quarter of which comes from Carrara in Italy. The price, however, is so high that they have been looking forward eagerly to the formation of a company for the purpose of opening up the trade nearer home. The United States Coast Survey party of 1867 reported that marble had been discovered in inexhaustible quantities in Alaska, and two years later samples sent to Washington were examined and found to be of a very fine quality. A ledge has been located by a company just formed, and operations will be commenced at once. The ledge is only ten feet from the water's edge, and, as there is never any ice in that locality, ships will be able to land at any time of the year.

There are 2,880 co-operative societies in Germany, with a membership of over 1,000,000, and last year they purchased over $375,000,000 worth of goods.

NOTES FOR THE FARM AND HOUSE.

Farming Miscellany.

Setting apart certain days each spring for tree-planting, as a public work, is to be highly commended. "Arbor Days" should be appointed by State Governors, and the children in schools should be encouraged to take an interest in the matter. The idea originated with Nebraska twelve years ago, and 244,000 acres of trees have since been planted there. Kansas followed, and now has $100,000 acres artificially planted. Ohio has begun the good work, and the children are becoming so interested that in Eden Park, Cincinnati, the schools may be turned loose without danger that a single shrub will be injured or a flower plucked.

At the meeting of the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture they had a lively tilt on the subject of corn for fodder. Some contended that at its best it was not worth two-thirds as much as hay; others said it was worth pound for pound as much as the best hay. Henry Noble had only five acres of pasture for 40 cows from the middle of May to October; these cows had what they could get in that pasture and what green corn they would eat. He has had a fine quantity of the best quality of milk, and the cows are fat. He is fully in favor of this method of keeping cows.

Wheat screenings, or screenings of any kind, are among the least desirable of all poultry foods, though often recommended as such by high authorities. At best they are little better than bran, except that they are in the most compact condition, which is no improvement. They are often infested with mites, insect eggs and fungus spores, which are liable to produce parasites and disease, and are rarely free from foul seeds which the fowls are wise enough to reject and leave to infest the fields. They should never be fed to any animal till they have been ground so fine as to destroy all vitality, and then they are of very uncertain value.

During comparative leisure of winter the are many little jobs that can be done with a view to saving precious moments in the busy springtime to come. Every implement and appliance that will come into service in the work season should be over-hauled, the working parts of machinery be cleaned, and woodwork painted, plows and other tools that have duplicate parts should be gone over and the parts that have worn weak be replaced by new ones, while sets of these should be provided against future breakage. A supply of extra harrow teeth, whiffletrees, linchpins, bolts and nuts may be gotten around for use in emergencies.

Cold weather is not unfavorable to sheep if they are profusely fed and cared for. Hence sheep are inclined in such weather to remain closely indoors, even when the ground is bare of snow, a habit which should be broken up. It is now generally believed that close confinement and want of exercise are leading causes of feeble and goitered lambs. As the ewes advance in pregnancy towards spring, inactivity tends to produce fatness and with it evil consequences such as are named. In all but severe weather the flock should be turned out daily between feeding all through the winter.

A large dose of charcoal, as a teacupful given in a quart of water and repeated in a few minutes, is an excellent remedy for bloat in calves or cattle. A tablespoonful of aromatic ammonia in a quart of water is also a good remedy, but these only give relief for a time and should be followed by a dose of one quart of raw linseed oil. It is easy to prevent this trouble by watchfulness in regard to feeding. This is a dangerous season, as the aftermath, or rowen, is apt to be indigestible, and if eaten while wet with cold dew or hoar frost will almost surely chill the stomach and produce indigestion, when the undigested matter ferments and produces large quantities of gas, which distends the stomach, and as this presses upon the lungs and interferes with the breathing, apoplexy or suffocation may be produced with fatal results.

Preventives of Disease.

Professor Brewer counts health the greatest of physical blessings. Society is learning that disease is too heavy a public tax. Memphis with its accumulations of filth was annually decimated by yellow fever till the community at large discovered that it could not afford to have such a menace exist in its midst, and so the people were compelled to clean and purify the city. Smallpox and other similar diseases will, like railroad accidents, grow beautifully less as men become careful and intelligent. Agriculture favors health, but farmers are far less healthy than they might be. Farmers' wives, confined much indoors, working over unclean cellars, and sleeping in damp rooms, are not noticeably long-lived. The germs of many diseases, like diptheria and typhoid fever, are progagated in cesspools, and privies that are too near the wells. The best preventive of disease is cleanliness. Run the house-slops upon the garden, and deodorize the contents of the privy by free use of coal-ashes or dry earth. Let the barn and hog yards not come too near the parlor or sleeping-room windows. Keep cellars clean and dry.

Dakota Potatoes.

Mr. Jacob Shoudy, of Lawrence Co., Dakota, sent us a box containing 14 potatoes which weighed 38 pounds. Among these were seven Blue Victors weighing 23 pounds, or an average of 3 2-7 pounds each; four White Victors, weighing 9 1-2 pounds or 2 3-8 pounds each, and three Beauty of Hebrons weighing 5 1-2 pounds. The heaviest potato was a Blue Victor weighing 4 1-2 pounds, a true likeness of which we give in Fig. 11, on page 3. The largest White Victor is shown in Fig. 12, page 5, and weighed three pounds. The largest Beauty of Hebron weighed 2 1-2 pounds. Mr. Shoudy says: "You will see by the sample sent the size of potatoes we grow. I raised this year 500 bushels of Blue and White Victor, very few of which weighed less than two pounds, and from that up, many weighing four pounds, and being perfectly solid. I have never yet seen one with a hollow in it. The 20th of July we had a hail storm that destroyed the ground, cutting them all to pieces. Only for that I think I should have had some of fair size; as it is, I send these to show what the black hills can do under difficulties, and promise now, that next year, if the hail doesn't hit us, I will send you some weighing at leat six pounds, and maybe more." This Blue Victor was a fine potato, and entitles Mr. Shoudy to the $10 prize.

Mr. E. C. Barrow, of Spink Co., Dakota, says: "I plow the land deep and harrow it thoroughly. I then furrow it out deep, making the furrows large, three feet apart. I drop the potatoes, cut so as to have two eyes on each piece, fourteen inches apart. I cover them with the Acme Harrow, which is the best tool for this purpose I have ever found, as it leaves the land in the best condition. Just as they begin to show above ground, I harrow well. After this, I use a two horse cultivator, going over them as often as necessary to keep all weeds down and the ground mellow, keeping the surface always level; this retains the moisture and secures the best results. I use no fertilizer, as our land is well adapted to all root crops, and especially to potatoes. The potato sent was raised under prairie sod plowed the last of May, and they had no cultivation whatever: 50 weighed 104¼ pounds; they were Beauty of Hebrons." Rural New Yorker.

A Chapter on the Table.

A table should be made to look as attractive as possible, and a very simple meal will become appetizing if its surroundings and appointments are pleasant. Tired, weary housekeepers who are obliged to get their own meals, may smile at the idea of spending time over setting repast daintily, or to preside at the table as though they were entertaining guests, but they will find that it is well worth the trial, and that the meal that was hitherto a simple interruption from the cares and occupations of the day, has been an opportunity for the enterchange of pleasent thoughts and the rest and refinement of mind as well as of the body. Every housekeeper should be supplied with a sufficient quantity of table linen that she may be able to change often and avoid using a cloth when soiled. Clean, spotless linen if not very fine, looks much better than showy, handsome, but soiled damask. Nothing makes the table look handsomer than glass, and no housekeeper need feel sorry that she cannot use silver instead. Even cheap, common glassware, that costs but a trifle, can be made to look really elegant on a table when washed carefully and polished until bright and transparent. A snowy cloth, spotless china, and clear crystal, with a water lily resting on a bed of green leaves in a glass dish, or a cluster of wild flowers, arranged gracefully with ferns and grasses in a vase, placed in the centre of the table, or even a single flower laid upon each napkin and the various dishes put in order will make of any table a "thing of beauty," where all who come will be inclined to linger.

Condiments and Indigestion.

Cayenne pepper may be selected as a typical example of a condiment, properly so called. Mustard is a food and condiment combined; this is the case with some others. Curry powders are mixtures of very potent condiments with more or less of farinaceous materials, and sulpher compounds, which like the oil of mustard, of onions, garlic, etc., may have a certain amount of nutritive value. The mere condiment is a stimulating drug that does its work directly upon the inner lining of the stomach, by exciting it to increased and abnormal activity. A dyspeptic may obtain immediate relief by using cayenne pepper. Among the advertised patent medicines is a pill bearing the very ominous name or its compounder, the active constituent of which is cayenne. Great relief and temporary comfort are commonly obtained by using it as a "dinner pill." If thus used only as a temporary remedy for an acute and temporary, or exceptional, attack of indigestion, all is well; but the cayenne, whether taken in pills or dusted over the food or stewed with it in curries or any other wise, is one of the most cruel of slow poisons when taken habitually. Thousands of poor wretches are crawling miserably toward their graves, the victims of the multitude of maladies of both mind and body that are connected with chronic, incurable dyspepsia, all brought about by the habitual use of cayenne and its condimental cousins. The usual history of these victims is that they began by overfeeding, took the condiment to force the stomach to do more than its healthful amount of work, using but a little at first. Then the stomach became tolerant of this little, and demanded more, then more, and more, and more, until at last, inflammation, ulceration, torpidity, and finally the death of the digestive powers, accompained with all that long train of miseries to which I have referred. —(From "The Chemistry of Cookery," by W. Mattieu Williams, in Popular Science Monthly.

What One Woman Did.

About three years ago a young woman in one of our Eastern cities, unmarried, and with no close family ties, looked about in the world for some helpful work to do. Near her lived a deaf and dumb child, a little girl with speaking, intelligent eyes. Her parents were not able to send her to the asylum. Her kind-hearted neighbour became very much attached to the child, studied the German method of oral teaching for the dumb, and brought little Mary every day to her house to try to impart it to her.

The child placed her hand on her teacher's throat, and, bringing her face close to hers, learned first to inhale and expel the air. Then each sound of every letter and word was taught by sight in the same manner.

The pupil followed the motion of the speaker's lips and replied in the same mechanical way. One deaf and dumb child after another joined little Mary at her task until the school numbered seventy-eight pupils, with nine teachers. The infinite patience required in this training is almost inconceivable. But the progress is rapid.

Three years have passed since the opening of the school, and the pupils have acquired all that a child could learn in nursery and primary school—to speak, read, write, and understand the first four rules of arithmetic. The school is free. Its work, so far, has been to make of these creatures, who are little better than animals, active, intelligent, human beings, and this work is due to one earnest, kindly woman.—Youth's Companion.

The Glamor of Courtship.

There is no period in a woman's life when she is so happy as when she is being courted. That accounts for the fact that a great many of them permit themselves to be courted by men who have no right to do such a thing. They like the gallantries of courtship, the playful words of a suitor, his constant ammation; his hundreds of small compliments, his readiness and agility in extending his hand whether it is needed or not, his inspirational conversation, his self-sacrifice and unvarying devotion. Heavens! what is there that a man will not do when he is in love? What else will drive him to such lengths of brilliancy and daring? It is then that he becomes the cock-bird, puts on his most brilliant plumage, struts about in his greatest glory and reaches the most beautiful perfection of his nature. He writes long letters, spends his money like a prodigal, is ready to go here, there or anywhere, rain or shine, at the beck and call of his fair mistress; wears his best clothes, walks with the erectness and elasticity of a trained athlete, smiles on all mankind and is a being much beyond and above the common run of the race. All this he is to the women to whom he is playing the lover. She takes him for what he seems to be—not for what he is. Perhaps he may turn out to be what he seems to be, perhaps not—generally not. Most husbands are disappointing to their wives because they immediately after marriage collapse—collapse into mere matter-of-fact, plain, every-day men, who seem to think about as much of one thing as another.

Woman's Attractiveness.

Personal attractions most girls possess—at any rate, in a sufficient degree to render them attractive to somebody; for although there are standards and models of beauty, yet these do not prevail with all persons. There is something wonderful in the difference of aspect which the same face wears to differnt beholders. Probably the philosophical explanation to this is what is hidden from others becomes immediately and instinctly apparent to the eye of love. How can a moderately good-looking girl increase her attractions? By culture. She must cultivate her mind. An ignorant, illiterate woman, even if she attracts attention, cannot retain the interest of an intelligent man. She must do this by reading, by study, by reflection and by familiar conversation with the best and most highly educated persons with whom she comes in contact. But the heart must be cultivated as well as the head. Of all things, exclaimed a most elegant and refined gentleman, after nearly a lifetime's familiarity with the best society, of all things give me softness and gentleness in a woman. A harsh voice, a coarse laugh—trifles like these have spoiled many a favorable first impression. The cultivation of the heart must be real, not feigned. A woman who studies to appear rather than to be good and generous seldom succeeds in deceiving the opposite sex in these respects. She who in truth seeks to promote the happiness of those around her is very apt soon to obtain admirers among men. Above all requirements in a woman is conscientiousness.

The Venezuelian Despotism.

It seems rather a discrepancy that the President of the Republic of Venezuela should receive $250,000 a year, while the President of the United States has only $50,000, and the Premier of England $25,000. The present President, Guzman Blanco, is said to possess a private fortune of one million. Three beautiful country houses are maintained for him by the State, besides his residence at Caracas and a villa by the sea for the bathing season; and altogether he lives in the greatest luxury, and rules as the most absolute despot. Although nominally only president of a republic, he is in reality an absolute dictator, ruling the Venezuelans with a rod of iron. One or two examples of the arbitrary mode of government of President Blanco may be given. Soon after the railway between Caracas and La Guayra (in which he holds a great number of shares) was opened, he issued a decree that all vehicles on the excellent coach road, which had always been hitherto used, should be entirely stopped—thereby of course, bringing grist to the railway mill, but throwing hundreds of people with their mules and carts, out of employment. A few days ago the resident engineer reported to the President that a fish-plate had been placed on the rails with the evident object of upsetting the train on its passage over a narrow viaduct, built by the American contractor who commenced—but did not finish—the line. General Blanco immediately, without instituting any inquiry with the object of discovering the offenders, and without making any distinction between rich and poor, ordered every one living within a radius of half a mile of the scene of the attempted outrage—in all sixty persons—to be locked up for one month.

Malaria or Laziness.

From the Hartford times.

There are many persons who are possessed of a state of mind in which they have a settled belief in the reality of things which have no existence. The longer this hallucination is indulged in, the more deeply rooted it becomes. In many cases it develops into monomania or delusional insanity. Now there are some people who are always in alarm for fear of heart disease, when the extent of their trouble is mild dyspepsia; and nervousness is an aristocratic name for erritability and bad temper. Two-thirds of the so-called malaria is nothing but laziness.

A certain physician performs many of his most remarkable cures of so-called nervous diseases simply by his wonderful success in persuading patients that nothing on earth ails them. Few physicians have the ability to do this, and still fewer have the discression to adopt a course of treatment adapted to the mental peculiarities of each particular case. Sometimes persuasion is necessary, but frequently a little tonic, combined with a little scolding, produces the desired result. Let the bogus malaria cases stand up and be counted.

Legislative Report of the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.

Mr. Baker of Benton, when his name was reached, rose to his feet and said: 'Mr. President I cast my first vote in this senatorial contest for Governor James H. Berry, and I have continued to do so up to the present time. I know him, and I like him. He is a good man, and well qualified to fill the office, an honored citizen, a brave soldier, and an able statesman, he is high in the esteem of the public. I am a rough man myself—a man from the mountains—and I am one of those men who stick by their friends when they deserve it, when they are able and well qualified, until they fall, and even then I'll not desert them; I'm ike Collin's 'sheep,' when they fall I fall with them. I hated to see Governor Berry withdraw from the field, but when I saw it must be, I looked about me and took the thing under consideration and thought on it. I thought long and carefully over it, and I slept with it. [Laughter.] I saw I must cast my vote for some one else, and I must make a choice of the other candidates. I'll tell you how I did it. I looked over the field. I have met the other two, and I had studied them. I met the Hon. Poindexter Dunn, and I saw in him many good points. I saw a fine head on him (I greatly admire a fine head) and I saw in him a great coming man. I met Mrs. Jones—the wife of the Hon. James K. Jones—and that settled it. This is how it was. I met her and I went and called on her—yes, I did. The room was full of beautiful women. I didn't hardly know what to do, but she sat by the piano and I asked her to play a little tune on it for me [laughter]—I asked her that very thing—asked her if she could play 'My Old Cabin Home.' She said she would if I would sing a verse of it, an I said I'd try. [Cries, 'Sing it now, let's hear it.'] You wait. I said I would, and she touched up the piano, hit the very keynote of the piece—the tune I know and love best on earth. It rang and echoed about the room. The place was full of women, and pretty women, too. [Applause.] And among them I saw Miss Roane, the daughter of old Governor Roane, the lady of whom Mr. McMillan spoke so beautifully a while ago. They crowded around and right there I stood and I sung the verse, [Cries of 'Sing—sing—give us the verse.] All right, gentleman, to accommodate you I'll sing it," and, clearing his throat, the gentleman from Benton struck up a bear-tone solo and sang:

"We'll hunt no more the grizzly
In the nook,
We'll leave the canon all
So dry;
We'll drink no more of the Clear crystal brook,
So, my log cabin home, goode-by."

As the "goode-by" floated up among the cobwebs in the dome of the hall the densely packed throng burst into cheers and shouts, a torando of applause shaking the old house, while bursts of laughter broke out like thunderbolts, and hand clappings sounded like the hail among the confusion. At length the orator succeeded in getting silence again, after bowing and gesticulating several minutes and said: "Hold on—wait and hear the chorus;" and then he sang:

THE CHOROUS.

"We'll mind no more, but play.
I never shall forget
That log cabin home—
That log cabin home far away."

Again the storm broke forth, and it was several minutes before he could proceed. When a lull came he continued: "Well, those ladies crowded around me, and when Mrs. Jones stopped playing I seized her hand and I said: 'Madam, I am in love with you.' [Shouts.] Yes, I told her I had fallen in love with her, and she said she wished I'd fall in love with her husband as well. She treated me nice—they all did, too. Now, I am a rough old man, but ladies have great attractions for the old mountain boomers. I know I do, [cheers,] and I never forgot that visit. They looked so sweet and nice I wanted to hug them all. When I met Mr. Jones I looked at him closely, and saw in him a man I could well support. He had a big head, too—a head like a washtub, eyes set away back in and a deep thinking look in them, and so, with all this to think of, after looking well about me, after considering the matter well, after sleeping with it, I have concluded to vote for the Hon. James K. Jones." [Cheers, long and loud.]

Tobogganing at Montreal.

Montreal Letter:

A strange fear comes over every one at first, and then a stranger fascination follows. The Governor-General and his wife were on the grounds. The Marquis, who was urged to "try it" pleaded rheumatism, but Lady Lansdowne shamed him by jumping on a toboggan and making the rush. Now it will be added to all the "firsts" of woman that she was first at the toboggan. Then her lord and master, and lord and master of the Dominion, followed her down the slide. Had he flinched, what grip he has on the Canadian heart would have been lost. Canadians will never forget Lord Dufferin. All parties liked him, irrespective of politics, because he became one of the people by entering into their sports. This he did without pretence and with thorough zest. Lord Landsdowne must cultivate a taste for tobogganing, skating, and curling, or he will be totally eclipsed by the memory of the people's favorite.

Mr. Beecher spoke in his sermon last Sunday about Spiritualism. "Do spirits ever revisit the earth?" he asked. "I want to say that I would be happy to believe they did, but I have failed to discover it. The communications I have received purporting to be from my parents were of such a weak, milk-and-water nature that they ought to have been put in an infirmary. I have been at seances perhaps a dozen times in the course of my life and have seen many things I could not understand, but nothing to convince me that communication with a spirit world is open to us."

Maud S. made the fastest mile ever trotted, at Lexington, Ky., on November 11 last. Her time was 2:09¼. The fastest mile ever made by a pacer was accomplished by Johnson at Rochester, N. Y., last August, and at Chicago on October 8, following. His time was 2:06¼ at both places.

The advent of warm weather will bring activity in the Northwest, but nobody looks for anything like the "boom" that wilted more than a year ago. The industrious and economical, however, will make the best of everything that comes and will profit thereby.

The large number of ridiculous blunders in the legislation of each session is disgraceful to all concerned, and justifies the remark of a cynical member that it was fortunate so few people saw how laws were made, otherwise there would be still less respect for law than now—and that is not saying a great deal for the law.

Nearly all city papers at the east are sounding a cholera alarm and urging a general cleaning. They think cholera is sure to come this year. Perhaps it will, but whether it does or not, cleaning up will do much to prevent this disease. But cleaning should not be confined to cities. There is scarcely a home in America that may not be made more healthy by well directed spring cleaning. There are other fatal diseases besides Cholera and these prevail in almost every locality.

The French newspapers think Granville's explanation of England's attitude in the Bismarck controversy was an act of humiliation unworthy a great nation, and the sentiment in England is that Bismarck completely hoodwinked and outwitted the Gladstone ministry. The foreign policy of the present administration has been its weakest point throughout, and has brought England into such disrepute abroad that years of able management will be required to enable her to regain her influence in the councils of nations.

Gladstone's mind is reported to be giving way under the severe mental strain to which he has lately been subjected. He has fallen into the habit, it is said, of visiting second-hand bookstores and purchasing sham antiquities, and his eccentricities led him so far quite recently that he purchased 100 hats in a single day. His physical collapse has been predicted for some time by prominent medical practitioners, and to prevent such an unfortunate ending of his great career his most intimate friends have advised him to resign, but he stolidly refuses and proposes to die in the harness if the Commons will permit him.

It is telegraphed from Washington that there will be again little or no debt reduction for the month, and the explanation is not entirely ingenuous. We are told it is by reason of large payments, but the real cause is the falling off in government receipts rather than special and extraordinary disbursements that accounts for the small balance from month to month in favor of the Treasury. The government is feeling the prevailing dulness in trade which afflicts business men generally. If people buy less imported goods, there is, of course, a falling off in customs, and if they economize in luxuries of home production, the effect appears in smaller returns to the internal revenue bureau.

The revised version of the Old Testament is in print in England, and both the Old and New Testament will be issued immediately after Easter. The book is to be published in various sizes, on the same day, and the sale is certain to be enormous. A London letter says it is clear that the revised version of the New Testament has made way. It is used in many schools. It is used in most families. Seldom does one of the younger clergy give a text from the pulpit but he tells what is the rendering of the Revised Version. Some of the more advanced clergy use the Revised Version always in the pulpit. But this is not the case in the United States. The revised edition may be found in the hands of any clergyman and in public and private libraries, but is totally unknown to the great masses. Even those professing Christianity, and are Christian workers in Sunday schools, etc., know no more of the revised scriptures than of the Koran.

Mr. Carlisle, the speaker of the national House of Representatives, made an address at the close of the session in which he urged that a general law should be enacted which would authorize the Executive Departments and the courts of justice to hear and determine, under rules that would amply protect the Government, a large part of the local and private matters that now engage the attention of Congress. Mr. Carlisle said farther that "From the organization of the Government to the close of the Twenty-fifth Congress—a period of fifty years—there were introduced into the House, as shown by the records, 8,777 bills, while during the present congress there have been introduced 8,630, almost as many as during that half century. At present each one of our general appropriation bills embrace as much money as the whole amount of the net ordinary expenditures of the government during the first nine or ten years of its existence, and the specific objects to be investigated and provided for in those bills have so greatly increased that it has become a very considerable task even to enumerate them."

NEWS OF THE WEEK SUMMARIZED.

General Grant Worse.

The Medical Record of the 14th says: The ulcerative process in the anterior pilar has, since the consultation, extended to the adjoining side of the tongue, and the bridle of tissue bounding the perforation of the anterior pilar internally gave way Wednesday and Thursday the patient was in a reasonably comfortable state. His temperature normal and pulse regular, but he was suffering somewhat from the effects of insomnia. His digestion is good, and semi-solid food taken easily and with reasonable relish. He suffers no pain. In face of all these general symptoms, the local difficulty has markedly increased and parts in the vicinity of the ulcerations are becoming more infiltrated.

An associated press dispatch of the 14th says: Gen. Grant went to bed early on Wednesday night, but he did not fall asleep until nearly midnight. He suffered considerably from a pain in his right ear. The ulcerations in his throat had also taken on a more angry appearance, and cocoaine was used again to allay the pain. The infiltration is extended to the deep seated tissue, and the disease is spreading with more rapidity than it has shown for some time. In the evening he ate quite heartily of food, but did not have any appetite. He tried to be cheerful and appear in good spirits, but it was evidently done by an effort of will, and did not express his feelings, which, on account of the severe pain were not pleasant.

Gen. Grant and Parson Newman.

Rev. Dr. Newman left Washington on the 13 inst., for New York, on his way home from California. When asked if Gen. Grant's condition was as bad as reported, he said:

Probably a great deal worse. We have known for almost eight months that he was rapidly failing in health, and that from the malignant character of his disease little hope could be entertained for his recovery. This has, of course been kept from Gen. Grant himself. I have been Gen. Grant's pastor for the past twelve years, and I can see no unusual significance in his sending for me. We have been great friends for a long time, and this action is only natural. I have not seen him since I left for California, but I have little hope for his recovery.

Dr. Newman says he shall not expect a church in California.

Mrs. W. E. Dodge of New York is worth $4,000,000. She spends her money in missionary work.

Frank D. Warren, alias T. D. Lyons, wanted in New Orleans for a $10,000 forgery, was arrested at Gara Falls, Ont.

The Jesuits have bought the villa in the island of Elba formerly occupied by Napoleon, and will convert it into a college.

Frank C. Talbott was arrested at Evansville, Ind., on the charge of embezzling $4,700 from the Evansville & Terre Haute railroad.

The French, after five day's fighting, carried the Chinese position around Kelung. Forty Frenchmen were killed and 200 wounded.

Willis Henderson's wife blew out her brains at her home in Orleans county, N. Y. She was young and pretty, and apparently had no secret grief.

John M. Oliver, a farmer of Stonewall Ind. Ter., killed a neighbor named Crocket, with whom he quarreled. Oliver was afterward killed while resisting arrest.

The largest rough diamond in the United States was shown in Philadelphia recently. It weighs 128 karats, and was found in the Kimberly mines, South Africa.

The Billings, Mon., skating rink was burned. The origin of the fire is unknown. The building was owned by Ramsey, Morgan & Field. Loss, $8,000; insurance, $6,000.

The president nominated Col. Edward D. Clark of Mississippi to be assistant secretary of the interior, and Sidney D. Jackman of Texas to be United States marshal.

It is believed that the pope will approve the election of Dr. Walsh to the archbishopric of Dublin. Dr. Walsh is backed by the Catholic masses of Ireland and is a strong Parnellite.

Paddy Ryan has agreed to meet John R. Sullivan within 100 miles of New Orleans in May. The fight is to be under the new London prize ring rules, with small gloves, for $5,000.

Egbert M. Carver, cashier of the De Soto (Mo.) bank, was arrested, charged with forging checks to the amount of several thousand dollars while cashier of the Oneonta (N. Y.) bank six years ago.

Maj. J. M. Haworth died suddenly at Albuquerque, N. Mex. He was superintendent of all the Indian schools under the charge of the general government, and was on a tour of inspection at the time of death.

The Massachusetts house ordered to a third reading a resolve providing for a constitutional amendment abolishing poll tax as a preclusion to voting for governor, lieutenant governor, senators and representatives.

President Cleveland's early hours have shaken up official Washington terribly. The president makes appointments for 8 a. m. The department clerks are aghast, and everybody is arranging to go to bed earlier and sleep with boots on.

At Springfield, Mass., fire in N. G. Gill's art store building did great damage, mainly by smoke. Loss, $50,000, of which $40,000 will fall on Gill, whose entire stock of pictures, books, rich paintings, statuary and bric-a-brac was badly injured by smoke.

Mr. Gladstone has made but four changes in his cabinet since he first formed it, the Duke of Argyll, W. E. Forster, John Bright and Mr. Dodson retiring, to be superseded by Lord Carlingford, Sir Charles Dilke, Earl Derby and Mr. Trevelyan, respectively.

Secretary Bayard has taken steps for the formal withdrawal of all treaties pending in the senate. This will leave the senate with nothing to do but to pass upon nominations, and the prevailing impression now is that the session will not last more then two weeks longer.

Anthony Janus, son of Prof. Janus, of Columbia university, of Washington, died suddenly at his father's residence from heart trouble, superinduced by excessive cigarette smoking. The deceased was about twenty-five years of age, and was employed as a clerk in the patent office.

The Billings, Montana, Rustler of the 10 h says: "We were shown a piece of very rich gold-bearing quartz by M. G. Maines, which has just been brought in from the Crow reservation. It is literally filled with wire gold to the eye. The piece is about the size of a hen's egg, and said to contain $25 worth of gold.

In order to fill the vacancy in the office of judge advocate general, it is proposed to have the president remit so much of the sentence as suspends Gen. Swaim from his duties and put him at once on the retired list. If this is done the position of judge advocate general will then be filled. Gen. Horatio King, Jr. of Brooklyn will be nominated to the position.

Gen. Walthall, the successor of Secretary Lamar in the senate, was sworn. He is about five feet, eight inches tall, rather sparsely built and dresses very neatly. He wears his hair, which is dark brown mixed with threads of gray, long, and is clean shaven with the exception of a mustache. He has a keen, bright eye. Senator Walthall received a very cordial welcome from the democrats.

Hudgins of Polk county, Ark., member of the legislature, arrested on a requisition from Georgia on the charge of arson and temporarily released by the governor withdrawing the warrant, appeared in the house as usual, on the 11th inst., but shortly before the adjournment of the morning session left the capitol, jumped into a buggy and drove out of Little Rock. The sheriff was notified and a posse is in pursuit. His disappearance caused great excitement.

London Times' Calcutta Special: News received from Rangoon further confirms the rumor as to the alleged treaty between France and Burmah. It is stated that the treaty cedes to France the Shan states, east of the Salwen, and also the Mogoung ruby mines, while 500 French soldiers will be allowed to act as guard to the mines. The Burmese government is to be permitted to import arms and ammunition through Tonquin. A Burmese ambassador is to reside permanently in Paris, and a French resident at Mandalay. It is further alleged that the French promise the Burmese protection against British encroachments.

LEGISLATION VETOED.

Gov. Hubbard Disapproves 23 Bills Among them the Valued Policy, Parsonage and New Buildings Measures.

At 9 o'clock last evening Gov. Hubbard laid down his pen and heaved a sigh of relief. He has signed 614 bills out of 654 sent him, 27 being vetoed (4 before the legislature adjourned) and 13 recalled after passage. There was not a single "pocketed" bill, every measure which passed both branches either receiving the governor's signature or an appended note showing why it was not affixed. The labor consequent upon this careful study and subsequent action has been shared by Attorney General Hahn, Private Secretary Jennison and Executive Clerk Hahn, and all are devoutly glad to cry finis. During the session more than 1,300 bills were introduced, but nearly 700 died, were substituted or—as in the case of road and bridge bills, where 145 were grouped into one—consolidated. The most important bills signed yesterday were the following:

Forbidding transfer of suits from state to federal courts by foreign corporations; providing for the state inspection of boilers on inland waters; for the removal of county seats located by a vote of the people upon a petition for such removal by two-thirds of the legal voters; transferring the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg to the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northwestern in case the former is not completed by March 7, 1888; allowing the Duluth & Iron Range to select lands outside of the counties of Cook, Lake and St. Louis; extending the time of the completion of the Mankato, Austin & St. Cloud two years, and thereby equally extending the time in which said road could secure its land grant.

Concerning the last three bills there has been much dispute and arguments for and against their passage have been urged since the adjournment. Regarding his final action, Gov. Hubbard said last evening:

They are approved on grounds of public policy. I belive it desirable to encourage the enterprises sought to be benefited by these acts, and thereby aid in the development of the resources of the section of the state in which they are located. There are constitutional questions involved in some of the features of these bills upon which I entertain doubts, but conclude they can be settled in justice to all interests involved by such judicial judgment as may be invoked for the purpose.

The "foreign corporations" bill was the subject of a legal contest before the governor, and the railroads and insurance companies strenuously argued its unconstitutionality. His excellency was not convinced, or, if any doubt remained, probably concluded that this question could also be more properly adjudicated in a court of last resort. The important vetoes (given below, with the executive notes appended) are of the valued policy; the taxation of parsonages, such portions of several of the appropriation bills as provide for new state buildings, and of the $7,000 appropriation for an encampment of soldiers and sailors at Minnetonka.

APPROPRIATIONS DISAPPROVED.

The act to appropriate money for the hospitals of the insane account is approved as to the following items:

Building and furnishing detached wards, 1885	$50,000
Similar purpose in 1886	25,000
Improving center building	3,000
Barn and root cellar	3,500
Annual repairs	3,000
Total for St. Peter hospital	$84,500
Stock barn	$2,500
Purchase of pasture land	1,200
Duplex pump	1,000
Additional boiler	1,000
Hose and reels	1,000
Annual repairs	2,000
Building and furnishing detached wards	50,000
Total for Rochester hospital	$58,700

The item of $72,000 for reconstructing the center building at Rochester, is disapproved for the same reason as the disapproved normal school items which follow below, the governor adding:

The increased capacity of the insane hospitals to accommodate the probable growth of population of this class for the next three years is provided for by other items of this bill. The reconstruction of that part of the hospital for which this appropriation is made, although very desirable, is not an imperative necessity, and, therefore, can be deferred.

Of the normal school appropriation act, the following items were approved:

Completing the normal home	$16,000
Furnishing the same	3,500
Furniture in class room	250
Apparatus ($250 each)	500
Total for St. Cloud school	$20,250
Painting, etc., at Winona school	1,500
Deficiency, unpaid accounts, etc., at Mankato school	2,000
Total normal school appropriation	$23,750

FEARED A DEFICIENCY.

The item appropriating $40,000 for an addition to the Mankato school and $30,000 for a normal home at the Winona school are disapproved with the following comment:

If the resources of the treasury would admit of it, I would be glad to approve these items, but with a probable deficiency of $174,000, measured by the appropriation made, the necessity of restricting its obligations is manifest. The item of $10,000 for the completion of a partially constructed building at St. Cloud is approved as in the interests of economy.

The act appropriating money for the state reform school was approved as to the items of $2,000 for insurance and $4,000 for improvements and repairs, but disapproved as to the item of $20,000 for an additional building for the boys' department, with the following indorsement:

I deem it my duty to seek to limit the obligation of the treasury to its probable resources. I regret that in the discharge of that duty I am compelled to deprive this most deserving institution of present means for increasing its usefulness.

The act to appropriate $7,000 for an encampment of veteran soldiers is disapproved, as follows:

The appropriation of $7,000 made by this bill would not be available in the event of its becoming a law. It provides for an encampment of veteran soldiers during the summer of 1885. Appropriations made, payable in 1885, are about $84,000 in excess of the probable revenues of the state. Payments for the necessary expenses of the departments and the public institutions for the present year will, to some extent, have to be deferred until the resources of 1886 become available. The treasury could not, therefore, meet this appropriation if approved.

THE REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

To his disapproval of these items of the appropriation bills the governor adds:

The following is an estimate carefully made by the state auditor of the probable revenues of the state for the fiscal years 1885, 1886 and 1887; also a statement of the appropriations, standing and otherwise, made for the same years:

	1885.	1886.	1887.
Revenues	$1,259,673	$1,363,500	$1,213,500
Appropriations	1,343,708	1,371,955	1,225,145
Deficiency	$84,035	$8,455	$31,645

The above does not take into account the expenses incident to the legislative session of 1887, which will probably be about $120,000. Unless the revenues exceed the estimates the legislature of 1887 will have to suspend the rules of the treasury.

Beside the appropriation bills, the following are the bills disapproved, with the governor's reasons for his action:

EXEMPTING CHURCH PARSONAGES.

An act to amend section 5, chapter 11, General Statutes 1878, relating to property exempt from taxation.

The object of this act is to exempt church parsonages from taxation. If it was purely a question of public policy I would not withhold my approval, but the question of its constitutionality has recently been passed upon adversely by the supreme court of this state. A communication from the attorney general is appended citing the decision referred to and other authorities.

THE ONLY ST. PAUL VETO.

St. Paul had but one veto to meet; but this will prove a good deal of a disappointment to Senator Gilfillan, who worked hard, assisted by W. H. Grant, the attorney, to secure the passage of the matter.

It is House File No. 435, and entitled "An act granting certain lands (meaning tow heads in the Mississippi and swamp land and meandered lakes in West St. Paul) to the city of St. Paul, in aid of certain improvements (the improvements being the proposed system of levees and embankments across the river). In noting the disapproval, the governor says: "This bill is objectionable because of the limitations imposed by the constitutional amendment of 1881, which appropriated all swamp lands then belonging to the state, or that might hereafter accrue to the state, one-half to the common school fund, and the other half to educational and charitable institutions of the state."

The point raised by the governor was the subject of learned and lengthy discussion in the judiciary committee of the senate, who were divided on the subject, but a majority agreed to a favorable recommendation.

MAJ. W. H. DIKE'S CLAIMS.

An act providing for the adjustment of certain alleged claims of W. H. Dike against the state under the act providing for the adjustment of certain alleged claims against the state, approved Nov. 4, 1884. This bill is more objectionable than a straightforward appropriation to Mr. Dike of a fixed sum of money would have been. The mischief of that might end with the payment. The evil of this will only begin with it. This bill calls that an alleged claim against the state which was never before alleged or dreamed to be a claim against the state. The claim was, and is, a claim against one of the old land grant railroad companies of 1858-9. In the adjustment of the Minnesota state railroad bonds in 1881, the state received a sum from the bondholders for division among certain kinds of creditors of those railroad companies. It is alleged that Mr. Dike was one of the creditors, and by an error of the commission got nothing. The state did not pay the others anything, and owed them or him nothing. Its commission acted summarily to distribute the agreed sum of money of certain private parties to other private parties. The commission may have made mistakes, but it distributed all the money. When has a claim been made before that the state should pay a litigant in any of her courts the money which he alleged the court should have awarded him? This claim is unique only in being presented to the state for payment; there are thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands more of the same kind. I think we ought not to admit the shadow of an obligation on the part of the state for the payment of any of them.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION DISAPPROVED.

Several acts are disapproved on the ground of special legislation, as follows:

Amending sec. 2, chap. 18, General Statutes 1878, relating to division fences (applying only to Fillmore, Chicago, Carver, Waseca and Olmsted counties.

An act to alter and better define the boundaries of the independent school district of Little Falls, Morrison county.

An act to change the name of the Norwegian Evangelical congregation, Minneapolis.

An act to create a school district in the counties of Mower and Freeborn.

An act relating to public schools of School District No. 4, Dakota county.

An act to establish a common school district in the county of Jackson.

In withholding his approval from all bills of the above character the governor followed the language used in the vetoes upon similar bills sent the house or senate when in session. He says: "This legislation is repugnant to sec. 33 (subdivision 7) of art. 14, of the constitution of the state, and is, therefore, disapproved."

IN GENERAL.

The other acts disapproved, with the governor's comments thereon, are as follows:

An act to amend sec. 4, chap. 14, General Statutes 1878.

For the reason that the act has no saving clause, and its effect, therefore, would be to relieve all persons charged with the offense named, prior to its approval.

An act relative to the insurance of real property, and the measure of damages in case of loss thereof.

This bill does not have the effect intended by its friends. A valued policy bill had first been defeated in the senate, whereupon this was introduced as a compromise, under the impression that the words prima facie referred as well to the measure of damages as to the value of the property, and under this impression the bill passed. The evidence of this is cumulative, uncontradicted, and cannot be ignored. Many members who supported this bill express themselves strongly opposed to its effect, which, according to the attorney general's opinion, would be the same precisely as that of the bill which the senate had first decisively defeated.

An act to amend sec. 37, chap. 13, General Statutes 1870, and chap. 63, Special Laws 1883.

The title to this act is defective, in that it does not express the subject, and also makes an erroneous reference to the chapter of the statute sought to be amended.

An act to amend sec. 10, chap. 148, General Laws of 1881.

Objection has been made to this act that its purpose was to meet a certain case and affect certain persons. The attorney representing the parties appeared and entered his protest. From the showing made, the claim seems to be well founded.

An act to provide for the selection of jurors in counties attached to others for judicial purposes.

The subject of the first section is expressed in the title. The subject of the second section is another and different one, which is not there expressed. It is, therefore, repugnant to sec. 27, art. 4, of the constitution.

An act to amend sec. 43, chap. 94, General Statutes 1878.

There is no saving clause to this act, and if approved it would release every person charged with the offense named prior to its approval. The title is also defective.

A joint resolution respecting the Indian policy of the United States. I approve, in the main, of the policy which seems to be herein advocated, and will cause a copy of the resolution to be transmitted (to congress) as desired, but I disapprove of the publication of so crude and carelessly-formed an expression of this high character upon so important a subject.

Refunding $186.92 paid for certain state lands in Clay county by H. J. and K. N. Tatlis. This act attempts to appropriate money from the permanent and general school funds of the state. It is clearly in violation of section 2, article 8, of the constitution, and therefore disapproved.

House File No. 514, an act to amend sec. 187, chap. 8, General Statutes 1878, relating to the duty of registers of deeds when instruments are deemed to be recorded. It, has been made known to me that the vote whereby the senate passed this bill on the 4th of March, 1885, was reconsidered by the senate the next day, and the vote upon passing the bill was not again taken. This, therefore, is not properly before me.

Some three or four bills were disapproved because already covered by an approved bill of the other house.

Faithful To His Word.

An interesting circumstance is related of George G. Lake, the benevolent merchant of New York, whose death has been recently reported. Like a great many others, he came to the great city from Connecticut a poor lad, and obtained employment as an errand-boy in a store in Catherine Street, a narrow thoroughfare leading to the East River.

He was an errand-boy of the old-fashioned kind, one who received two dollars a week wages, slept on or under the counter of the store, and lived chiefly on crackers and cheese. But he was a good boy, attended to business, and made friends. In a year of two he obtained a better place, in a better store, in a better street, where he advanced rapidly from one post to another until at nineteen he was placed in charge of the silk department, the highest position in the store.

Salaries at that period were so small that this smart young man thought himself lucky in getting four hundred dollars a year, and he engaged to remain for four years in the service of the firm at that rate of wages.

As head of the silk counters he had frequently to visit a great importing house to replenish the stock of his own firm, and there he attracted notice by his excellent taste in selecting silks, and his sound judgment as to what patterns would be likely to please customers.

One day he was asked to step into the counting-room of the importing house, where one of the partners invited him to enter their service at a thousand dollars the first year, two thousand the second, and three thousand dollars afterwards. The young man replied that he had just made a contract with his employers for four years at eight dollars a week.

"That contract was only verbal, I suppose," said the merchant.

"I don't break contracts," replied the clerk, "whether verbal or not."

So he went back to his silks in the old store, and to his eight dollars a week. He served out his four years faithfully. At the end of the period he had made himself the indispensable man to his employers, who offered him ten thousand dollars a year or a partnership. He accepted the salary, and after some years, entered the firm, of which in due time, by the retirement of his partners, he became the head.

He made a large fortune in the business, from which he retired at an early age and spent the remainder of his days in happy and honorable retirement, a good patriot, a good Christian, and a wisely beneficent man. The solace and charm of his old age was music, of which he was a warm lover and munificent patron.—Youth's Companion.

New York has shopkeepers whose chief business is to cater to the tastes of the Anglomaniacs. Some of them hang forth signs emblazoned "Purveyor to Her Majesty, the Queen," or "Patronized by Royalty," and set forth the fact that the goods were purchased by Englishmen of title.

THE MINNESOTA DAIRYMEN.

Proceedings of the State Association at Faribault, Including Addresses by High Authorities on the Dairy Business.

The annual lecture course and meeting of the Minnesota State Dairymen's association at Faribault, last week were not so largely attended as usual, but were of interest to dairymen.

The meeting was opened by an address of welcome by Mayor Lowell, which was responded to by Col. McGlincy of Elgin, Ill., who said that Minnesota has achieved a renown in dairy production second to none at New Orleans and must continue to make the best dairy products in the world.

John T. Ames of Northfield, gave a history of the Association from its organization in 1879, and its influence for the benefit of the State.

E. D. Potter of the State University at Minneapolis spoke upon oleomargarine. The speaker was satisfied that from $500,000 to $600,000 worth of butterine and oleomargarine had been sold in Minnesota during the current year. He said the butterine factories of Chicago lay down butterine in Chicago at 12 cents a pound. They imitate the tubs and little packages, and thus put it on the market. The butterine factories of Chicago can turn out more butterine daily than all the cows of Minnesota and Iowa.

Minnesota can produce as fine butter as any state in the country. Philadelphia merchants declare that Minnesota butter keeps better than any other in the country.

On motion a committee of five on resolutions was appointed as follows: Gen. W. G. Le Duc, John T. Ames, R. P. Mcglincy, W. D. Howard and M. J. Myer.

Mr. Johnson of Northfield, spoke briefly, showing the success he has met in butter making on a small scale, experimenting with nineteen cows. He was much in favor of Holstein cattle. With 19 cows in 1884, 7 of them being 2-year-old heifers, he made 4,522 pounds of butter, an average of 238 pounds apiece. The amount of grain fed was 17 tons bran at 6 cents, $102; 4 tons shorts at 9 cents, $36; 200 bushels oats at 28 cents, $56; total, $194. The hay was about two tons of timothy and clover per cow, worth about $6 per ton and the pasture about $5 apiece for the season. Thus it cost $521 for 19 cows, or $27 per cow. He made 4,523 pounds of butter, which at 26¼ cents per pound, netted him $1,188.33, or about $63.07 per cow. Take out the cost, and it leaves an average profit on butter of $35.64.

Col. McGlincy said that there are wonderful possibilities before Minnesota in the way of dairy products, and he thought that Minnesota cows were going to surprise the world. He and Mr. Johnson favored coloring the butter. W. D. Hoard said that this very coloring was what lost Iowa the grand sweepstakes prize at New Orleans, and gave it to Minnesota. He detailed the system used at New Orleans in judging. The contest finally narrowed down to Iowa and Minnesota, and Iowa lost because it was three points off in color. When gentlemen sneer at color, they sneer at God Almighty, for he has colored everything. If you make butter for the market, color. The basis of butter coloring is a harmless bean grown in South America.

A paper was read from Col. Stevens in favor of stall-feeding, and he cited the case of Mr. Smith of Wisconsin, who succeeded excellently by stall-feeding concentration. Mr. Moffitt of Iowa, also bears testimony to the same result. If a man has not land enough he can profitably support more cows than is generally believed by following this system of concentration. Fifteen can be kept on ten acres by this system. Mr. Hoard followed in favor of concentration citing the interest of a large farm at Little Falls, N. Y., and instances in his own experience. One farm grew thirty-eight tons of green fodder to the acre, and another kept 200 cows to 100 acres of land.

Gen. W. G. Le Duc spoke on "Minnesota as a Dairy State." Maintaining that soil, climate and everything is in our favor. All animals, the cow included, will develop better here than anywhere else.

Col. M'Glincy, being called to discuss "Silos," said: "Silos are not needed in Minnesota. They are only needed where land is poor and scarce. Here every feed can be raised. A silo is a hole in the ground to keep green fodder. What do you want of it? Ensilage is simply cow kraut." He discussed the subject at length, declaring that this country would have no need for ensilage and silos for years to come.

O. C. Gregg of Marshall read a paper on "Minnesota and its Dairies." He drew a comparison between butter making in Vermont or Minnesota. In Minnesota, if one acre in a hundred is untillable, it is the exception. During the hot summer our cows are exposed on the open prairies. In Vermont they have plenty of water. Here we use windmills. The great difference is just here. There they use a cow to turn grass into butter. Here we use a cow to turn grain into butter. A farmer here must be a grain raiser, not a herder. To cultivate the land as he should will occupy him night and day. He has not a moment's leisure. What are you going to do about the dairy? Here comes the problem of a winter dairy. Your cows are fresh in the fall and you have abundant time for the dairy. To make a dairy in Minnesota a success a man must be willing to work. The farmers here think they can work for six months and then be idle for six. It's a bad mistake. If you're going to succeed as a dairyman here you must make up your mind to work continuously. That does away with the idleness and devil of discontent and unrest in the winter. The first point then is work. The second is warm barns. A man that sits around a warm stove while the northwest wind is frittering the flesh from the bones of his cattle has not a whit of sympathy in his nature, or is incapable of understanding. And any man that expects to get milk and butter from a cow thus unprotected is a fool. God hasn't made that kind of a cow yet, and he never will. Now about warm barns. If a man can afford a good basement barn, all right. But most of us poor farmers can't afford it. He then detailed the method of constructing a simple shed of inch pine and 2x4. In such a one, thatched and battened on the inside, I have the thermometer never registering below the freezing point. The cost is very little. Don't turn your cows out into the cold wind. A cow in milk is very sensitive to cold. Next, keep your cows clean. Use a barn platform, and use straw for them.

Now, as to the result of my winter. Milking twenty-four cows, I have received close to $2,200 during the past year. During February my receipts were $300. I believe that with forty cows there the farm will bring $3,000 from milk and butter. I cultivate 100 acres and cut hay outside of it. I figure that one man, one team, ten cows and forty acres of plowed land is the proper proportion for getting the best return from farm work. I grow oats chiefly and some wheat for feed. It should be fed ground and dry. I have a mill here in Faribault—a windmill—for grinding and it pays for itself every year. I have a ten-foot wheel. It grindes about six sacks of ground feed an hour in an average wind. You just shut the door and let it grind out itself. I would advise a twelve foot wheel for the ordinary farmer.

W. D. Hoard endorsed Mr. Grigg's remarks about caring for the comfort of the cow.
